There is also an unwritten law that prohibits sexual relations before marriage. But the "New College Morality" seems to wipe out this "old fashioned" puritanism. "College students are old enough to know what they are doing, and why; they possess a sense of responsibility."

Besides, there is such a thing as "love" which can justify (?) any abridgements of stupifying Victorian morality...

There is a daily routine called "Death" in Viet Nam, in the deep of Virgin Africa, on the streets of Alabama and Mississippi towns. There is the same routine in most parts of the World because of hunger and disease. There is a daily routine right here in divorce courts; in mental institutions; in penal institutions; in the bare rooms of the house next door; and this routine spells misery and unhappiness.

How many college women (and incidentally, men) embattled with feelings for responsibility and wish for maturity take concern in these issues?

I honestly doubt, (and you may disagree with this), that the elimination of curfews will become a boost in women students' maturity. There are so many "not so responsible acts" occurring long before the curfew hours which can serve to show that prolongation of curfew, or even its complete elimination, cannot "ipso-facto" constitute a self-betterment function within the mental walls of an Academy.

And let me look at the issue from another point of view: "At home my parents don't really mind if I come back a 2 a.m." Granted, that's your parents' business. But would your parents, at home, let you sign out for overnight? Or would they give you some extra-sleeping-money when you take off for a weekend to New York, or Boston, or New Hampshire to visit the "fellows"?

There are a lot of problems that the administration of a University have to cope with. And every time they do a good job in running a smoothly functioning Academy there are very few applauses. But there is a heck of a noisemaking on every little issue that the students feel is depriving them of their "vested interests and rights". Curfew is one of them...

Professors and administrators are not Gods; and yet they know a few things more than most of us. Let's not forget that they are the teachers, the masters in a sense, and we are merely the apprentices. UMass as an institution has responsibilities toward us as students, toward our parents, toward the Commonwealth. It is not a penal institution; we come here on our own free-will and merit. If some of the University's policies seem to infringe upon our welfare (read "kicks") well then, by George, why don't we enroll in Bennington Col., Vt.? If my informers are correct there is no curfew there...

Talk With Lederle

Closer Ties Seen

As the University grows larger and larger there is the fear that the president will become a phantom figure. This fear is inevitable. Presidents of large organizations can not hope to maintain the same relationship enjoyed by heads of small groups.

President Lederle is aware of the problem and is taking positive steps to insure that the University will not become "students at one end of a log and the president at the other". Collegian editors met informally with the president Thursday to establish a continuing communications link with the students. President Lederle will be interviewed about twice a month so that we will not be working in separate worlds.

The president is not inaccessible but he obviously can not personally solve each and every problem that occurs within an academic community of more than 15,000. Other administrators share the load and work the same 60, 70 or 80 hour week. The president recognized the need for a safety valve system where he can step in and "make lightning strike all the way down the line". He initiates action when regular channels fail.

The Collegian feels it is their responsibility to bring current issues of campus-wide importance to the President for comment, discussion and possible action. We are not out to be image builders but feel that discontent and misunderstandings can be allayed or at least subdued if we meet face-to-face. We would hope that University goals of students and the president are common ones and that we are not working at cross-purposes to each other.

Trustees, administrators, faculty and students are striving to create and maintain a spirited academic community to enhance intellectual maturation in providing the best possible education. Obviously, opinions differ in searching for ways to implement these goals. But if ideas and complaints are unvoiced, if inspiration lies fallow, no one benefits and the fruits of thought rot like so many over-ripe apples.

When the press meets with public officials they have the interests of their readers as guidelines to inquiry. The Collegian asks inspired or disgruntled readers to drop by the office with memos in hand that we may bring directly to the president. We will respect any wish for anonymity but ask that all suggestions be signed and typed or printed. If you intend for the letter to be published please begin with "To The Editor"; if you intend it for presidential consideration use "To The President".

We are heartened by the president's active interest in student affairs and mindful of the exhausting demands on his time. We hope that we may bring his desk closer to yours.

Index Announcement

To the student body:

Although it is relatively early in the academic year, we at the Index are already well into the production of the University's year-book. Producing a publication of this size is an immense task, and in order to accomplish it, the staff must have the cooperation of the entire student body. The Index is published with student funds, for the benefit of the students; in many instances, groups question why they are not pictured. The simple answer is that there is just not enough room. When a group is selected for representation, it may consider itself lucky, and should do everything in its power to appear at the stated time for the group picture that is to be taken.

It would appear that some of the campus organizations feel that they are doing the Index a favor by allowing us to picture them in the book. This is not the case. Many groups on campus would be more than happy to occupy the space allotted to organizations which choose to make coverage difficult.

You must realize that we have commitments to make ourselves, and that your picture may only require twenty minutes of your time, but will require several hours of ours.

In the future, it will be the Index policy to make appointments and require the groups to attend. These appointments will be made well in advance (as they have been in the past), and they must be kept. It is the responsibility of the organization officers to provide adequate attendance; it is not the responsibility of the Index.

Blood Clarification

To the Editor:

This is a letter of clarification, by the undersigned for the Young Independents, addressed to the student body as a whole, and to the Campus Religious Council.

At our last meeting a proposal was made to gather as many members and friends as possible to donate blood, during the Campus Religious Council's forthcoming drive, which we would request to have sent to Vietnam, through the auspices of the Red Cross, to be used to help any persons in need. This was not intended solely for the use of any one element in the struggle (though in all probability most of the donation would go to American soldiers), but to demonstrate that we hold no antipathy towards either the American soldiers or the Vietcong, but towards the policies they both implement. Our purpose in giving blood is wholly humanitarian. This proposal was passed after some debate and over opposition. We had not yet contacted the CRC or those concerned with the technical aspects of the drive. As a matter of fact, arrangements were being made the day the Council's letter appeared. Unfortunately, the Collegian article of Friday, Nov. 5, reporting the activities of the recent meeting, was printed without having been checked by our organization (indeed, it was written without our knowledge) and so the case was stated somewhat differently from actuality. In truth, no mention of active cooperation with the CRC was brought up; it was merely stated that we would try to arrange hours within the time of the drive when those of us wishing to donate blood could do so, and, as a unit, request that it be sent to Vietnam. The implication of sponsorship by the CRC was wholly an error.

Joe College

To Tom Ganby, John Danis, and other Followers:

Front-of-the-Hatch, clean-cut, Sue and Joe College, is the front of the Hatch the place to sit in judgment on the rest of the Hatch? Are you willing, not to mention able, to be committed to anything other than the pins you sit behind? It's amazing that you can extricate yourself from the jukebox and your profound talks on who's dating whom long enough to notice a fire.

So you "don't wear sandals, can't afford the scandal." As for "in" status symbols, how about pin-stripe shirts, crew-neck sweaters, etc. I bet President Johnson is proud of you well-behaved, mediocre, uncommitted Americans, indistinguishable from one another. You super patriots can spend your lives railing against those whose opinions deviate from your idea of normalcy—ah yes, you're functional, and what an admirable purpose you serve.

Atrocities

To the Editor:

On the subject of Viet Nam, I would like to comment, briefly, on one of the arguments put forth by those who are against the Administration's policy. Some say that we (the Americans) have gone beyond our limits in relation to the bombings, burning of innocent villages, etc. But, one must realize that the true terrorists are the Viet Cong, who will stop at nothing to win the war. They will use kidnaping, murder, and torture to gain their ends. To them a human life is nothing. I repeat, nothing. The crowning example of this is an incident that occurred last month: A V.C. regiment used children as shields from American planes, while crossing a bridge. As if this were not enough, the children were subsequently shot when they reached the other side. This is not an isolated example. From press reports the Viet Cong carry out atrocities like this every day. Thus it is quite clear what the fate of the people would be if these savage, barbaric animals ever took over the government. This, dear anti-war protesters, is what we and the South Vietnamese are fighting to prevent.

Contrary to popular belief, the Yahoo lives on. And in the future, as for the past 12 years, there will be in the forthcoming issue the "Yahoo Queen" feature, with some ravishing UMie co-ed in the centerfold who will eventually be signed up by MGM.

But this time, the Yahoo is holding a contest in which any organization or individual can submit the name of a "Yahoo Queen" candidate. And if a co-ed has a big enough ego, she can nominate herself.

Anyway, the nominees will be judged and the next Queen will become immortal in the pages of that most hal- lowed of all pub- lications.

Below is an ap- plication. The student should fill it out or have another do it if he failed his lat- est IBM course. Submit to: Ya- hoo, RSO 106, Student Union, Univ. Mass., Am- herst, Mass.

The "Pill", Beards, Legs, Dope
And Co-ed Men Hit Campusby F. D. Bodeus

The trend on many campi is to give the students more freedom and responsibility, with a few exceptions heading in the op- posite direction.

The sorority version of fra- ternity funday, Playday at Texas Christian University, was high- lighted by the selection of "Mr. Playday", the fraternity man with the most beautiful legs. (The Skiff)

Marquette University's new student handbook says beards and effeminately long hair will not be allowed. The dean of stu- dents declared that bearded fa- culty members would not be asked to conform. "A privilege of the profession", he explained. The Kentucky Kernel, Univer- sity of Ky.)

Bryn Mawr, long one of the Seven Sister colleges, has de- cided to go co-educational. The new program, the result of years of deliberation, will go into effect second semester. President McBride, speaking before a wildly enthusiastic, cheering crowd, declared, "We haven't a moment to lose . . . Applica- tions will be considered imme- diately." (The College News)

This fall Lake Forest College initiated a program in which 24 freshman won't have to attend classes or receive grades for four years. Tests indicated the students are those especially capable of independent activity.

At the beginning of the year, they were told what they would be held responsible for, and will be tested on, in a comprehensive in general education. Faculty members of other colleges in the program will decide whether or not the student graduates. (The Villanovan, Villanova U.)

Dr. Johnson, of Brown Uni- versity, admitted prescribing birth control pills for a small number of Pembroke girls over 21. He prescribed the pills after speaking individually with each of the girls, all of whom were engaged or seriously dating one person. (Tufts Weekly)

After two University of Mich- igan students were arrested by federal agents on narcotics charges involving marijuana, an editor of that school's paper called for legalizing the sale and use of marijuana in the United States. He stated that such an act would "eventually cause a decline in the high incidence of alcoholism." (The Villanovan)

Dean talks on Dropouts

"Most high school dropouts in the type of work they are qualified to do don't take more than three or four weeks to train," according to Dean Albert Purvis of the University School of Education.

He added in a Collegian interview there are large numbers of young people with no special skills who are forced to earn a living and then find that they cannot.

After either dropping out of school or failing in the job market, they can be trained for a specific job, the Dean said.

He pointed out that this was the case during the war, when women were being trained for jobs vacated by men. After a short period of training they were able to step into new jobs.

Remarking on a recent article in the Christian Science Monitor about a dropout "college" for unemployable youth, Dean Purvis said this idea is not new. "They're doing it in many vocational schools already and have been doing it for years," he explained.

Although the dean considers false the charge made that the students in vocational schools are "generally trained" in technical skills and are not prepared for anything, he feels a problem does exist. "A large part of the poverty program is aimed at solving this problem of unemployed youth and the subsequent problem of public welfare dependence," said the dean.

Dean Purvis also feels that this problem could be solved if educators would take it on as part of the education program. This would include late afternoon and evening courses with subsequent apprenticeships in the job market.

He said he does not think these unemployed youth should be ignored either by the community or the higher institutions. "It becomes the responsibility of the schools to help the relatively unskilled," he concluded.

College Unions Association Holds Annual Conference

This weekend Region One of the Association of College Unions will hold their annual conference at the Student Union of the University of Massachusetts. The program will include two days of workshops and discussion groups on programming and problems of Student Unions.

Friday evening the keynote address will be given by Mr. A.L. Ellingson, Director of the Erb Memorial Student Union at the University of Oregon and the past President of the International Association of College Unions. His address will be "The College Union—Agency for Reform, Revolution, or the Status Quo?"

Saturday evening Dr. Dean Allen, Chief Psychologist, Student Health Service, at the University of Massachusetts will address the conference. This will be followed by entertainment

Gage Commends Infirmary; Urges Sick To Report Early

"The students have paid for their health services and should use them," says Dr. Robert W. Gage, director of the University's health service. The average number of outpatients treated at the infirmary during a single week day is close to 350.

An outpatient is one who can be treated in the clinic and therefore is not retained in the infirmary's 80-bed in-patient section.

What does concern Dr. Gage is the student who delays reporting with illness or never checks in at all.

Last year approximately 48,000 outpatients were logged at the infirmary along with nearly 2000 in-patients.

"A student at the University will come to the infirmary for aid an average of five times per year," Dr. Gage commented. He added that the vast majority of students will visit the infirmary at least once during their four year stay.

"Some of the most common complaints of students who visit the infirmary," he continued, "are respiratory infections, disturbances of the intestinal tract and the results of injuries." Only five percent of the students who come for aid require retention at the infirmary.

Among the many points which Dr. Gage made, he stressed the following:

"If you have a health complaint, come in early before it has gone too far."

"Plan to come during the hours that the infirmary is usually open."

"Get enough sleep. Poor time budgeting is one of the students' greatest errors."

"Serious complaints can be treated more effectively at the infirmary. Make sure the patient is immovable before calling the physician on call at the infirmary, and having him come to the student. Transportation is less of a problem than is generally considered."

A request is in the state capital outlay budget for planning funds so the infirmary may be expanded.

Dr. Gage stated that, aside from there being one less physician than is needed, the infirmary is equipped to do its job.

Field's statement, college humor magazines have recently been proliferating. "The Yahoo is a student magazine, and thus student, not parent reactions, should be those considered," he emphasized. "The purpose of such a magazine is to provoke thought, cause laughter, or both, and thus cannot be expected to please everyone," he added.

Suggestions resulting from the hearing included a desire to broaden the base of contribution to the Yahoo, and to conduct an extensive, unbiased survey of the University community regarding Yahoo. The possibility of a Yahoo Publication Board, to set policy and provide criticism was also considered.

The functioning of the Yahoo lies with the Committee, whose investigation will be continued until an equitable resolution is found.

When a beautiful girl sings the blues, how do you lower the temperature?

There's no insulating yourself against a girl singing soulfully about love gone astray. You're going to be seared. All you can do is try to lower the heat.

In New York's Negro communities, where you'll hear some of the hottest blues anywhere, people usually cool things off with a Rheingold.

And the same thing happens among New York City's Greeks and Italians and French. After they hear their own brand of searing love song, they usually cool off with a Rheingold.

The fact is that in New York City, where there are more kinds of people than in any other city in the world, more people drink Rheingold Extra Dry Beer than any other beer.

Why do so many different people pick one beer, Rheingold?

We don't know. But we must be doing something right. Rheingold proposal.

Echoing a statement by Senator Jerry Benezra (Fraternity Senator) Bob Gaudet (Webster) said that such a policy statement is a good start "toward an equitable solution of the Fine Arts question."

Also under special business the senators voted to accept Jerry Benezra's Grading System report and to forward it to the Faculty Senate.

The report included surveys and polls of grading systems of colleges and universities across the country.

"The results," said Benezra, "show that action must be taken to revamp the grading system at UMass. A sizable number of students, faculty members and administrators are dissatisfied according to the findings of the report."

The meeting proceeded in a quiet, unusually orderly fashion with the tabling of six bills.

Two bills brought to the floor by Senator Lew Gurwitz (married Students Senator) were passed.

One of the bills established an Ad Hoc Committee to deal with the new developments in the situation of married students housing on campus. "The situation is deplorable and is getting worse," said Gurwitz.

The other bill established an Ad Hoc committee on the JFK Memorial Library to ensure that collected funds are used appropriately.

Two other bills were passed during the evening — One concerning payment of meals for the Forensic Society's coach and the other appropriating $43 to Mortar Board for its scholarship fund.

In keeping with his statement made a few weeks back, President Dacey ('66 at-large) is continuing in his actions to revamp the Senate.

During the final minutes of the meeting he outlined a plan to make all senators active.

Under this plan Dacey will meet with small groups of senators weekly on an informal basis. "The idea of these meetings will be to see who is working and who isn't and why," Dacey explained.

He also proposed that the Senate Affairs Committee oversee the actions of "each individual senator—the idea here being to prevent the Senate from being run by a small group of senators) who hang out in the Senate office".

Dacey commented here that he "intends to bring all senators in (on actions) at the grass roots level—by force if necessary."

He proceeded to request written reports from Senators on all items concerning the Senate and stated. "Unfortunately, there are many calls which still haven't been claimed. Again I urge anyone who has made a call to see me in the Purchasing Department in the west wing of Machmer."

He again stressed that all students who come forward voluntarily and make arrangements to pay will not be in danger of disciplinary action.

"Those students who are traced by the Senate," he added, "will undoubtedly be placed before the Judiciary. I think it's rather obvious that the smartest thing to do is to pay for the calls before the Senate begins its investigation."

Seniors Seek Class Gift

Co-Chairmen of the Senior Class Gift Committee, Dee Berlin and Brian Silman, announced today that plans are being formulated for this year's Senior Class Gift to the University.

In order that this may be a class gift, a suggestion box will be set up in the Student Union lobby from Tues., Nov. 16 to Fri., Dec. 10. All members of the Class of 1966 are invited to make known their suggestions to the Gift Committee.

Suggestions may include gifts to the Union, new Alumni Stadium, or any other area of the University community.

Approximately $1000 will be spent on this gift and it is hoped that everyone interested will submit their suggestions so that the Class Gift will contribute to the growth of the University of Massachusetts.

SORORITIES

Last Game For 13 Seniors Tomorrow

Tomorrow will be the final game in the UMass varsity career for 13 seniors, barring a possible bowl bid.

These seniors have been on the team during the finest three years in Redmen football history. During their varsity careers the Redmen have had a 21-3-1 record, with two Yankee Conference championships, two unofficial New England championships and an appearance in the Tangerine Bowl.

Special credit must go to the two best ends in New England, Bob Meers and Milt Morin. These two have helped lead UMass into the national football picture with their fine receiving.

On the defensive side Bernie Dallas and Dave Kelly provided thrills for Redmen fans. Both are to be commended for their spirit and hard hitting which discouraged many an opposing player.

Tomorrow will be the last game for: Quarterback Steve Trbovich, and Dick Cain; Halfbacks Leo Biron, Dick Lewis, and Terry Swanson; Fullback Phil Vandersea; Center Don Rana; Guard Larry Spidle; End Art Simenson.

FOOTBALL...

Defensively, the Redmen will show off the skills of ends Paul Mlinar and Alan Becker, tackles Ed Toner and Dick Qualey and middle guard Santucci. Linebackers Dallas, Kelley and rugged Rod Brooks along with deep men Biron, Dave Giarla and Ed Cody round out a solid defensive unit.

Redmen In Finale At UNH

by MIKE GOULD

Riding the crest of a five game winning streak, Vic Fusia's Redmen travel north this Saturday to play the University of New Hampshire at Durham.

The game will mark the finale of a very successful season for UMass. A victory would give the Redmen an excellent 7-2 record for the season and a possible bowl invitation.

It was only three years ago that the Wildcats invaded Amherst and beat the Redmen for the beanpot. Since then UMass has beaten UNH by scores of 48-2 and 47-0, showing the drastic decline in the quality of football at New Hampshire.

This year's Wildcat team is actually no bigger than a good-sized high school unit. The heaviest boy on the field for UNH will be tackle Jim Kach at 205 lbs. and he will be one of only a pair of boys who exceed 200 lbs. In addition, eight of the Wildcats starting offensive eleven measure under six feet tall.

Perhaps the most talented of the UNH players is, ironically, the smallest. All purpose back Billy Estey is all of 5'6, 140 lbs., but the sophomore can really move and has provided Wildcat fans with several thrilling plays this season.

Other UNH standouts are hard-driving fullback Tim Churchard and end Paul Lovaglio, who will double as a cornerback on defense.

It is hard to conceive that Jim Johnston, at 5'7, 160 lbs. will start at guard for Cats. This boy must have a gimmick to block men who outweigh him by 50-100 lbs.

The Redmen are in fine physical shape for their finale and will field the same offensive and defensive teams which have been so successful after a shaky start.

Seniors who will be playing in their last game as Redmen are: Ends Milt Morin and Bob Meers, centers Bernie Dallas and Don Rana, halfbacks Leo Biron, Dick Lewis and Terry Swanson and fullbacks Dave Kelley and Phil Vandersea.

Steve Trbovich, Dick Cain, Larry Spidle and Bob Ellis are injured seniors who will not see action Saturday.

Along with Morin and Meers, who needs but one reception to break the YanCon record of 19 catches in a season of league play, the Redmen will start their iron-man offensive line. Sophs Dan Harrigan, Ernie Smith and Jim Mitchell join juniors Bob Santucci and Bill Connor to form a unit which has markedly improved and impressed its followers week after week this season.

Greg Landry will be closing out his first season as Redman quarterback this week, and the

New Hampshire native must be anxious to show his friends from the home state what a mistake it was to let him cross the border.

Working behind Landry will be junior scatback Bob Detore and seniors Lewis and Vandersea, all of whom have performed most admirably all season (Continued on Page 11)

Soccer Team Seeks Tie For YC Crown At UNH

by GLENN BRIERE

Thanks to their thrilling upset of Vermont two weeks ago, the UMass soccer team will have a chance to gain a tie for the Yankee Conference title when they travel to Durham, N. H. for a game with UNH tomorrow morning at 10:30.

When the Catamounts came to Amherst a win would have given them the first conference crown. Instead, they were shocked by UMass, 2-1, in double overtime, and finished with a 4-1 conference record. UMass and Connecticut are 31 each, and their remaining games are against UNH and URI respectively. Thus chances are that the championship will end in a two-or three-way deadlock.

Coach Larry Briggs' Redmen are riding a four game winning streak, and a win against the Wildcats would give them their best record (7-3) since 1954. Naturally, the added incentive of a share of the conference championship should provide them with plenty of desire. In addition, UMass has clinched its second straight winning season, after last year's 5-4-1 record.

Bill Burgess has been phenomenal in his last four games, scoring seven goals out of a total of nine. He scored three against URI, two against Tufts, and tallied the winning goals against Vermont and Amherst. Tomorrow will be his last game as a Redman, and his outstanding offensive play will be missed next year.

A tremendous amount of credit must be given to the Massachusetts defense, and goalie Larry Martin in particular. The Redmen have been scored upon only 12 times in their nine games, and they have shut out the opposition four times. In most of their six wins, they have proven that a good defense is an invaluable asset to any soccer team. Credit must also be given to the defensive work of captain Ray Yando, who has played a strong full-back position.

A win tomorrow would mean not only a tie for the YC title, but would also give the Redmen the recognition of being one of the best soccer teams in UMass history.

Recruiters Plan Talks On Peace Corps

by PAM METAXAS

During the recent Santo Domingo outbreak most of the 35 Peace Corps Volunteers working in the battle-torn zone were moved to the "safety" of hospitals. But they still were working on both sides of the military lines. At one time, a hospital director there said, "Before any Volunteer is harmed, they will have to kill me." Soon after three U.S. Marines went to Peace Corps headquarters in Santo Domingo asking how they could join.

THIS INCIDENT during a time of military crisis serves to illustrate the attitudes of others toward the Peace Corps and its volunteers.

On Mon. and Tues. of this week a Peace Corps Recruiting Team will set up an information booth in the Student Union.

The recruiting team consists of three former Peace Corps volunteers: Anthony Masso, John O'Connor and William Guth all returned volunteers from Panama, Ethiopia and East Pakistan respectively.

THE TEAM WILL BE answering questions about the Corps at the booths and distributing pamphlets and questionnaires during the next two days.

Besides the film "Interview with Shriver" (Place and time to be announced), interested students will be able to hear former Dominican Republic Peace Corps Director Robert Satin speak on "The Peace Corps Under Fire" on Tuesday, Mahar Auditorium at 7:45 p.m.

SATIN, a 34-year-old graduate of the University of Michigan, is presently touring the country for the Peace Corps and discussing with college students the part they and the corps play in foreign countries.

It is interesting that the Peace Corps is concerned not only with liberal students but conservatives as well. These are the people who handle themselves in the true sense of the word during internal crisis, such as the Santo Domingo uprising.

Frank Mankiewicz, Latin American regional director of the corps, said, "We want people who are interested in politics in a social sense as people who participate in the affairs of society." He added that "the same thing that moves moral youth into political activity would be very useful to the corps."

Since the corps was organized in 1963 the 12,203 volunteers have come mainly from campus idealists. The recruiting team which is presently at UMass looks to these students for support and interest.

THE PEACE CORPS team which usually spends one week at each campus has been allowed two days at UMass by the Peace Corps liaison officer on campus, Frank Morrissey.

The team told the Collegian that if enough interest were shown by students the team's visit may be extended, but this has not been confirmed by authorities.

SGA Conference Set; 23 Schools Invited

The Public Relations Committee of the Student Senate will hold a Student Government Conference at the University Nov. 19 and 20.

THE 23 STATE-RUN schools have been invited to attend and each school is expected to send five delegates to the conference.

The conference will deal with five phases of Student Government: the Senate or Student Council, Class Officers, Judiciary or Student Court, and the Campus Newspaper. The aim of the conference is a mutual exchange of ideas and suggestions.

The exchange of ideas will take place, for the most part, in the afternoon conference workshops Saturday.

The conference will open on Fri., Nov. 19 with a banquet. Dr. John W. Ryan, chancellor at UMass-Boston, will deliver the keynote address.

On Saturday, at the opening convocation, addresses will be given by representatives from the University faculty, the University student body, and the delegates from the attending schools.

THE SPEECH TOPICS will include:

- Relations between the Faculty Senate and Student Government.
- Incentives and recognition for student leaders.
- Student Government and the role and relationship of the campus newspaper.
- Administrative controls of Student Government—the degree of control.
- Responsibility for the spending of student tax money.

FOLLOWING discussion on these topics there will be workshops which the various delegates may attend.

Eight workshops will be held: 1) Judiciary. 2) Class Officers. 3) Publications. 4) Budgets and Finance. 5) Academic Affairs. 6) Services. 7) Men's and Women's Affairs. 8) Activities.

After the workshops the delegates will meet as a whole again to hear Dr. Noffsinger, U-Mass coordinator of student activities, give the closing address.

SU Conference

ACU Ratifies Constitution

by RICHARD DANCA, Day Editor

The three-day Region One conference of the International Association of College Unions (ACU) held here this weekend closed with unanimous ratification of the region's first constitution and election of UMass junior Thomas Mroz first regional chairman in its list of accomplishments.

The constitution, in committee since the 1964 Bridgeport convention, reached a preliminary stage in meetings last year at UM and was amended in a constitutional convention Saturday afternoon before the delegates accepted it later in the afternoon.

REGION ONE is the last of 15 ACU regions to ratify a structure.

The conference, attended by 131 delegates from 20 New England colleges and universities, was a success, according to co-chairmen Paula Joyce and Janet Kopec of the UM program council.

Four new schools—Salem State, Keene State, Lowell Tech and UMaine—joined the ACU, and according to UM co-chairmen, the conference encouraged some other schools to remain active members in the association.

Mroz, in a letter addressed to the delegates, expressed a desire for more and better communications between member unions of the region.

"Through a program of exchanging ideas, programs and problem solutions, we of Region One hope to improve our region significantly," he wrote.

A banquet Friday night kicked off the meeting, and was followed by five simultaneous discussions on the theme "Interaction and Communication."

THE KEYNOTE speaker at the banquet, director of U. of Oregon's union A. L. Ellingson, past president of ACU, abandoned his original speech for one entitled "Campus Rebellion 1965: The Instant Mob."

"Probably no one thing which has occurred within the academic community over the past several decades," he said, "has received such publicity and comment in all media, has so dominated conversations within the academic community itself and has left so many individuals with feelings of hopelessness and frustration."

He said, however, that "a basic tenet of any free society must remain the right to revolt, 'as long as such acts are not 'subversive to the academic processes'."

ELLINGSON called students "impatient... idealistic... (and) restless" and asked for an "examination of the academic society"—the student and his environment.

He indicated that the college unions are in a position to effectively contribute to this examination since "college unions have been successfully meeting challenges since 1815."

After the banquet, delegates broke up into five groups to discuss subjects including "The Student Leader: Model and Agent" and "Providing and Sharing Personal Learnings."

The purpose of this first series was discussion on a general level, and the groups dealt with problems ranging from apathy to the responsibilities of the student leader.

SATURDAY'S agenda was the reverse of Friday night's, with three sets of discussion groups preceding the business meeting and banquet.

These discussion groups were led by student delegates rather than professional staff members from the various colleges at the conference.

They dealt with "Programming Dilemmas," "Student Union Administration: Who and How?" and "What Role does the Student Union play in the campus community?"

Dr. Dean A. Allen, UM infirmary chief psychologist, delivered the address at Saturday's banquet.

BEGINNING with a comparison of American and foreign colleges, Allen gave his views on the American college student.

"The fact is that college men and women are no longer so docile nor so content with 'things as they are.'"

He also said that "One theme that emerged from the American Council on Education conference of college presidents was the recognition that a good many students are very impatient with university life because on campus they find no equivalent of contact with events that really matter and no share, or too little share, in shaping the outcome of these events."

He concluded "I think we academics and administrators and citizens are going to have to pay attention."

The conference closed Sunday morning with a coffee hour where complete minutes of the proceedings were distributed. UM workers stayed up all night to produce these, a feat duplicated only at national ACU conventions.

Redmen Blitz UNH, 46-0; Records Set in 7th Victory

Aided by the blocking of Phil Vandersea (33) and Bob Santucci (60), quarterback Greg Landry moves through the UNH line on his way to setting a new UMass record of 204 yd. rushing. The Redmen broke a number of school and Yankee Conference records in New Hampshire last Saturday.

Looking pensive at the close of the Redmen's football season is Metawampee, the spirit of UMass. Without warpaint and feathers he is Bob Perry '68, a brother of Beta Kappa Phi fraternity.

Speech Topic Cancels Speaking Invitation

NORTHAMPTON—An invitation to speak at the high school, extended to a University of Massachusetts student who participated in an anti-Viet Nam war demonstration at Ft. Devens Thursday, was withdrawn Saturday on the recommendation of the executive committee of the Student Council to Principal John Feeney.

Invitation Withdrawn

The withdrawal of the invitation resulted in the cancellation of a special School Committee meeting set for this morning to consider the subject.

Mayor Wallace J. Puchalski, who called the meeting, said "Finehirsch had been invited to speak on civil rights. When he publicly announced he would speak on Viet Nam and other controversial issues, the Student Council voted to withdraw its invitation."

Student Council President Frank Giroux concurred, saying the executive committee of the council composed of himself and the vice-president had recommended to Feeney the invitation be rescinded.

President of Chapter

Sidney Finehirsch of this city, the man in question, president of the UMass chapter of the Students for a Democratic Society, told newsmen Feeney had contacted him and asked him to decline the invitation. When he refused to do so, Finehirsch said, Feeney informed him the invitation had been rescinded.

Finehirsch said his talk was not to be on either civil rights or the Viet Nam situation, but was to touch on both subjects in a discussion of student activism. He said no one had contacted him to ask what his subject was to be since the controversy had started Friday.

No action is planned, Finehirsch said, as a result of the move. He said only he was consulting with a lawyer to see if his civil liberties had been violated.

SDS to Give Blood

According to the different spokesmen, the entire action against Finehirsch was precipitated by a report in The Springfield Union which mentioned he had been invited to speak. The report was part of a story concerning his activities at Ft. Devens.

The SDS will give blood to the American Red Cross next Wednesday at the Student Union at UMass for American service-

Four-College Bus

Coordinator Explains Experiment

by PAT PETOW
4-College Reporter

The Inter-College bus service ferries students from Smith College to UMass to Amherst College and back to Smith twice each evening.

One drawback for UMass students is that the bus does not make a return trip from Amherst to the campus.

Mr. Robert B. Whitney, Four-College Coordinator, wrote the following in reply to questions asked by the Collegian:

In the first place it should be emphasized that this is an experiment initiated by Smith College and participated in by the University and by Amherst College. So far the patronage has been about 25% of capacity on the average. The charge of 25 cents per one-way fare was chosen as a figure which students could probably afford to pay and which would come close with good patronage to covering the cost of the charter. The deficit so far has cost each participating college about seven dollars per day. If there were 75% patronage there would be no deficit.

The experiment will be carried on by the three college administrations until Thanksgiving and probably until Christmas. It is hoped that the student organizations of the four institutions will examine the results of the experiment and think about their wishes in the matter of evening transportation, so that when it comes time to evaluate the results and decide what sort of a permanent policy to follow, they will have some definite suggestions.

There are several obviously desirable extensions of the service such as shuttle service inside the town of Amherst, extra evening runs particularly later in the evening, service to South Hadley and Sunday service.

As Four-College Coordinator it is my personal hope that it will be possible to link all four institutions with convenient charter service both for the sake of more convenient enjoyment of the cultural resources which they offer for each other's student bodies and for the greater safety of transportation for social purposes.

Of course the daytime service is being continued by the two small college-owned buses which are being used to connect all four institutions at frequent intervals from 8:00 a.m. to 5 p.m. for the benefit of students enrolled in interchange courses.

At Mt. Holyoke College President Gettell announced that his school will not participate in the Four-College evening bus

Counseling Center Grows

Dr. William F. Field, Dean of Students, is pleased to announce the addition of three new psychological counselors to the staff of the Counseling Center. In addition to training and research activities, the Counseling Center staff offers assistance to students who are concerned with a variety of personal and vocational problems ranging from difficulties in emotional, personal, and social adjustment.

New staff members include:

Dr. Sarah A. Alleman, clinical psychologist. Dr. Alleman received her A. B. degree from Wellesley College and her M.S. and Ph.D. degrees from Purdue University. In addition to her clinical experience, Dr. Alleman has contributed to professional and literary publications, and is currently writing a novel.

Dr. David Aspy, guidance counselor. Dr. Aspy received his B.A. and M. Ed. degrees from the University of Louisville, and his Ed.D. from the University of Kentucky. He has gained extensive experience in secondary school education, as a teacher and guidance counselor, and has taught for the past two years at the University of Kentucky. Dr. Aspy is the author of several professional papers and a member of the Research Committee of the College Board, and a past officer in professional organizations in Kentucky.

Mr. John J. Douds, clinical social worker. Mr. Douds earned his B.S. at Canisius College and his M.S.W. at the University of Buffalo. He has taught at the high school and college levels, and served as a social worker in a wide variety of clinical settings in Buffalo, New York. In addition to serving on the faculty of two psychotherapy institutes, Mr. Douds has made a number of contributions to the professional literature on counseling and psychotherapy.

Renowned Army Band In Concert

The world-famous U.S. Army Band will present a concert at UMass Wednesday, Nov. 17, at 8:15 p.m. in Curry Hicks Cage, sponsored by the university ROTC detachment.

The versatile and tradition-rich military band will play an evening of music designed to appeal to a multitude of musical tastes—from brassy martial to muted classical.

The 110-man Army Band was organized in 1922 by General John "Black Jack" Pershing. Now led by Lt. Col. Samuel Laboda, the unit is composed of the finest professional musicians the Army has been able to bring together, including several holders of graduate degrees in music.

Through the years, the Army Band has served in a variety of capacities: it has led every inaugural parade since the inauguration of President Calvin Coolidge; it has played for the funeral processions of Presidents Harding, Taft, Roosevelt, and most recently John F. Kennedy; and it is the official band for most of the diplomatic functions of the United States Capital.

The annual concert circuit tour for the band has taken it all over the world, for performances ranging from Carnegie Hall and the Ed Sullivan Show, to numerous local civic functions.

The band's repertoire includes a vast cross-section of musical possibilities—from Beethoven's Fifth Symphony to Chuck Berry's satirical "Roll Over Beethoven."

Springfield Tension

Article Notes Racial Strife

In an article in a recent issue of The New Leader, two UMass professors see "a wall of growing tension and hatred" separating the races in Springfield.

Dr. Alvin E. Winder and James S. White, both members of the UMass School of Education Faculty, are residents of Springfield and have been directly involved in community relations work there.

For The New Leader, liberal biweekly news and opinion magazine, the two collaborated on "Racial Tension in New England," a depth examination of the race climate that led to demonstrations and arrests in Springfield last Aug. that drew national attention.

Winder was an original member of the Springfield Human Relations Commission appointed by Thomas O'Connor, then mayor, in 1961. He was a member of the issues committee in the last election for Rev. Charles Cobb, first Negro candidate for mayor of Springfield. Winder formerly taught psychology at Springfield College, is a consultant in psychology to the Springfield Children's Study Home and is a member of the counseling committee of the Springfield Council of Churches.

White left a post as assistant director and program analyst of the Springfield Action (anti-poverty) Commission this fall to join the University staff. He is a former field secretary for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and has taught in the Boston and Springfield public school systems. He is a director of Springfield's Urban League.

In their three-page article, the two educators cite the statistical background of the Negro in Springfield, his frustration in jobs, housing and education and his treatment by the police.

They conclude that although alleged police brutality may have set off the Aug. march on city Hall, "the protest rally was an outcry against the accumulating injustices being suffered by a rapidly growing, impoverished, ghettoized and unrepresented group of people."

The article adds: "The Aug. demonstrations underscored the Negroes' determination to openly display their dissatisfactions and bring about changes."

Since that protest, the writers add, the Negro has pressed the challenge in several areas and has been met by an attitude on the part of white Springfield residents in which hostility seems to predominate.

This, plus what the writers call an attempt by Springfield leaders to minimize the existence of the racial problem, is leading to a divided community, the writers claim. Their article concludes this way: "... Springfield is divided into two communities, one white and one black. They face each other across a wall of growing tension and hatred; a wall that threatens to crumble under the pressure of ugly violence."

Commuters

NRSA Plans
2nd Assembly

by BARBARA PROKO,
Staff Reporter

Sharon Stowell, president of the Non-Resident Students Association, has announced that tentative organizational plans are under consideration for the NRSA to host an Inter-Collegiate Commuters Association Convention in April.

Members of the NRSA recently sent letters to Dr. Mark Noffsinger, coordinator of student activities, and the Student Union Planning Board requesting that space be allotted for their use in the future SU addition.

Stating that increased facilities would be a necessity to accommodate more than 1400 commuters, they asked for eating, studying, rest and meeting rooms, as well as lockers.

Dr. Noffsinger reported that their claims were found legitimate and would be considered when actual building begins.

Hillel Lecture

Foreign Policy and Morals

The final lecture of Hillel's Lecture Series will be delivered Tuesday evening, Nov. 16, at 8:00 p.m. in the Middlesex Room of the Student Union. The speaker, Dr. William C. Havard, Jr., head of the Government Department at UMass will discuss "Foreign Policy, National Interest, and Personal Conscience."

The Louisiana educator and author received his B.A. from Louisiana State University and his Ph.D. from the London School of Economics. He is known in his field as an extremely effective teacher, a brilliant scholar, and an excellent administrator. Before joining the UMass faculty, Dr. Havard taught at Louisiana, Northwestern State College of Louisiana, and the University of Florida.

Dr. Havard is the author or co-author of nine books and monographs concerning government and politics, including The Government of Louisiana, The Government and Politics of the United States, and Rural-Urban Consolidation.

He is an elected member of the Faculty Senate at the University and a member of the Master Planning Committee at UMass.

His lecture will concern the role of the United States in world affairs, "moral issues, and dilemmas posed by this and the new entry into world affairs."

This lecture marks the end of a series of lectures, sponsored by the B'nai B'rith Hillel Foundation, which examined "Dilemmas of the Modern Intellectual".

The entire University community is invited to attend this last lecture.

A Day to Honor--Not to Picket

The violence at Fort Devens last Veterans' Day was easily predictable; for picketing against a war on a day set aside to honor those who have died in war was bound to arouse bitterness in many Americans.

Of course, it was an excellent way for the demonstrators to attract attention to their cause, which is a problem of much contemporary importance and certainly the needs of the living come before those of the dead. Still, is it too much to ask that at least one day be set aside to honor the dead without the occasion being marred by demonstrations?

Obviously, the protestors will answer yes, but in doing so they are only injuring their cause by antagonizing fellow Americans, who might otherwise sympathize with their humanitarian beliefs.

No Hope for Amherst

Med School

There is little idealism in Massachusetts politics and even less foresight, as was shown in the decision to put the UMass Medical School in Worcester. But a small group of zealous citizens have banded together to form the Committee for Quality Medical Education. Led by the well-known heart specialist, Dr. Paul Dudley White, they are making an attempt to prevent the Board of Trustees of the University from carrying out their plans to build the Medical School in Worcester.

Unfortunately, the valiant efforts of the 31 members of the committee will probably all be futile, and in the long run may only hinder the construction of the school by creating antagonistic feelings in Worcester. It would be better if the petitioners would realize that all efforts in favor of an Amherst site have in the past failed, and that similarly all efforts in the future will fail.

Why? Because the Board of Trustees have refused to listen to even the most knowledgeable advice. For example the firm of Booz, Allen & Hamilton, who were paid approximately $30,000 to compile a report on the situation, chose Worcester as the fourth-ranked of five possible sites; but the money was squandered when the firm's suggestions went completely unheeded.

It's best to be realistic and face the conditions, as corrupt as they are, which exist in Massachusetts. The haggling and arguing should be kept in the past. Let's clear the path for the building of a Medical School in Worcester which will be as fine as any medical school in the country. Any more attempts to put the school in Amherst will probably be fruitless, and will only prove to be detrimental to the school.

Letters To The Editor

Curfews and Maturity

To the Editor of the Collegian:

What is the relevance of Mr. Piperopoulos's comments about those who break written and unwritten laws, and those who do not concern themselves with such serious problems as Vietnam and poverty, to the problem of a curfew for women? The only answer I can see is that he feels the former issues are the ones with which responsible students should be concerned, rather than with curfew restrictions. I agree that one should have a sense of perspective on these matters and not focus one's exclusive interest on curfews if this means eliminating any attention to more important problems like Vietnam, civil rights and poverty. However, it obviously does not follow from this that one cannot be concerned with both sorts of issue!

The other points Mr. Piperopoulos makes are the following:

1. "Elimination of student curfews will (not) become a boost in women students' maturity."
2. Professors and administrators know more than students do. "They are the teachers, the masters in a sense, and we are merely the apprentices."
3. "If students don't like the policies at the University they should go elsewhere (e.g. Bennington), and, I take it, stop all their 'noisemaking' here."

Let me briefly comment on each of these points. In support of the first point, Mr. Piperopoulos stresses the irresponsible acts that women commit now even with the curfew. I agree that the number of "irresponsible" acts may not decrease if the curfew is lifted. On the other hand, if a woman is to be considered the sort of being that should be concerning herself with international and long term social ills, she certainly should also be given the chance to run her own affairs responsibly and independently. In connection with the second point, whether she does succeed in running her life as she should is not, I'm afraid, anything the "professors and administrators" can teach her, nor can they protect her from falling, except perhaps by setting an example or by giving advice if this is solicited.

A woman, as well as a man, has to be considered "grown up" sometime; and if she is considered grown up enough to form her own intellectual opinions I think she should be considered grown up enough to have the privilege of making her own decisions about her private life. Furthermore, it is not implausible to maintain that if you treat people as responsible adults rather than as children, there may be more of a tendency for them to act like responsible adults.

Mr. Piperopoulos's last point I find completely unacceptable. It is a response precisely analogous to the one made to opponents of American foreign policy: "If you don't like it here, why don't you go to Russia (China) (away)?" If one is committed to an institution for various reasons, the responsible thing to do is not to pack up one's bags and leave if something about it bothers you, nor to remain silent, but to work within the institution to try to ameliorate conditions.

Final Clarification

To the Editor:

The recent editorial "Blood for Whom" asked for a clarification of the article referring to the blood drive to be sponsored by YI. The position the article was to have conveyed was simply that YI does not wish Americans in South Vietnam to be given preference in receiving the blood, on the basis that it has been donated by Americans. They want all of our allied forces to have equal opportunity to receive it.

Mild Gripe

To the Editor:

Dear Santa Claus,

We of the University Chorale have for many years brought the Christmas Spirit to campus with our annual Carol Sing on campus. We do not mind that we have to apply for a permit to do this, for we respect the law in all its ramifications. Yet Christmas is drawing near and our administrators can not decide on this year's official policy for Caroling. Perhaps they fear the University Chorale would misuse the privilege for evil means, but we assure you, we want only to bring joy to the campus. Perhaps if you explain how the Chorale has had some experience in orderly singing, and how little danger there is in Caroling, they will issue to us our official permit!

Hopefully,
The Chorale Board

No Respect

To the editor on the Price of a Bible;

I have often thought that society, and more specifically our generation regarded few things as special or sacred, except, perhaps a religious symbol, like the Bible. The other day, I set my Bible down in the dining commons, and, returning 30 minutes later, was astonished to find it had disappeared. It is difficult and most disheartening to realize that anyone would condescend to steal this word of God, this symbol of man's heritage. And the fact that it was only a pocket edition, made the act still more incredible.

Sincerely
Sharyn Lowenstein, '68

The committee wishes to convey its appreciation to the university community for the strong support we have received. The petition was sent to the president and we are certain that the 2188 signatures thereon will be of great encouragement to him.

Bogey's Coming!

At last in a series of Humphrey Bogart movies, "The Maltise Falcon", termed one of Bogart's best, will be shown by the Young Independents tonight at Mahar Auditorium at 8:00 p.m.

The showing was originally scheduled for last Monday but, due to an error in ordering, the movie could not be shown. Among the other Bogart Movies which have been shown in the series, "Casablanca" and "To Have and Have Not" were generally believed to be superior.

All of the movies were filmed around 1940, and then, as now, Humphrey Bogart was an entertaining and highly-talented actor.

Concert Review

Folk to Blues--
Josh, Jr., Singsby MARILYN ROZNER,
Day-Editor

The S.U. Ballroom resembled the tower of Babel Saturday evening as the Dolphins entertained, singing in many languages. The Dolphins were part of the show provided for S.U. Conference delegates and invited University guests. It was their first appearance in the New England area.

Their mood was sustained with another French-English version of the pop tune "All Alone Am I".

Other songs were sung in Arabic, Greek, Spanish, and Italian. The real audience pleaser was "The Red MG of Ben Ali", complete with sheik and car horn.

A serious detriment to the group might have been the poor lighting they were given. They constantly had to request more bright light and this distracted both them and their audience.

This mood was quickly dispelled as Josh White, Jr. stepped onstage. His clear strong voice rang out in his fast moving opener, "That's My Song", while he accompanied himself with a twelve string guitar. At the end, he had his listeners right with him.

In "Joey", a hauntingly beautiful song, Josh Jr. presented his quieter side. It was odd but pleasant to hear this non-folk song accompanied by a guitar.

Other highlights were a plaintive song of hope that he would be Liz Taylor's next husband, and a blues version of "Scotch and Soda" with good chords and runs.

Since the audience urged him for an encore, Josh Jr. responded with a wisper-soft combination of "Five Hundred Miles" and "Man of Constant Sorrow".

Josh White, Jr. proved himself to be an outstanding entertainer. His versatility and feeling for his audience should bring him favor in the entertainment field.

Year-round information on the corps may be secured from Frank Morrissey, Peace Corps liaison officer on campus. He may be reached at the Placement Office.

Bradford Whipple, a student at the University who has recently returned from the Peace Corps, is qualified to answer all questions from students concerning the Corps due to his previous position, Corps Director in Puerto Rico. He may be reached at the Colonial Village Apartments (29).

Alpha Phi Omega, the service fraternity on campus, has laid the groundwork for the team's visit but the length of it may only be determined by student interest.

The team has pointed out that 40 UMass students have served or are serving in Peace Corps program overseas. The training programs have been for the Ivory Coast, Niger and Senegal.

THE RECRUITING TEAM'S GOAL "will be to relate to interested students how they can use their skills to provide an impetus for the world's developing nations." They look forward to meeting interested UMass students in the next few days.

men there. Finehirsch said, after holding a silent vigil to protest U.S. activities in Viet Nam.

Finehirsch said the group would also give blood to the Viet Cong on the same humanitarian grounds.

Puchalski said the School Committee at one of its meetings soon would "air out" the problem of freedom of speech in the schools.

Giroux said no speaker was being considered to take Finehirsch's place, but said the future of the lecture series had not been endangered by the incident.

Liberal Arts Majors

Announcing the Professional Qualification Test

for outstanding career appointments to

National Security Agency

Registration Deadline: Friday, November 26

If you expect to receive a liberal arts degree before September 1966, don't miss this opportunity to qualify for a rewarding career with the National Security Agency. All liberal arts applicants must take the Professional Qualification Test (PQT) as a prerequisite to NSA interviews for employment.

THE DEADLINE FOR TEST REGISTRATION IS FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 26. . . THE TEST ITSELF WILL BE GIVEN ON CAMPUS ON SATURDAY, DECEMBER 11.

Challenging Career Program Areas
A unique agency functioning within the Department of Defense, NSA has a critical need for imaginative people. You can make immediate use of your college-acquired capabilities without first accumulating years of "experience." Your specific academic major is of secondary consequence as long as you relish and meet the challenge of extremely complex research problems that frequently will take you beyond the known and accepted boundaries of knowledge.

You will work on programs of national importance, in such areas as:
• Cryptography . . . the making of codes and ciphers
• Analytic research
• Language research
• Data systems design and programming
• Administrative management (finance and accounting, personnel, training, engineering administration)

The PQT Bulletin at your Placement Office outlines these areas further.

Advancement, Training and Educational Opportunities
NSA promotes from within and emphasizes orderly career development, awarding substantial salary increases as you assume greater responsibility. The environment is academic and NSA stimulates professional and intellectual growth in many ways, including intensive formal and on-the-job training in new disciplines and methodology. Advanced study at any of seven area universities is partially or wholly reimbursed through NSA Fellowships and other assistance programs.

Attractive Location and Other Advantages
Located between Washington and Baltimore, NSA is also near the Chesapeake Bay, ocean beaches, ski resorts and other popular summer and winter recreation areas. The location permits your choice of city, suburban or country living.

Policies relating to vacations, insurance and retirement are fair and liberal—you enjoy the benefits of Federal employment without the necessity of Civil Service certification.

Where to go...What to do

First, pick up a PQT Bulletin at your Placement Office, the sooner the better. It contains a brief registration form which must be received in Princeton, N. J. by November 26. You will then be mailed a ticket admitting you to the Test on December 11.

Taking and passing the Professional Qualification Test in no way commits or obligates you to anything. But we urge you—even if you are not fully certain of your career interests—to investigate NSA opportunities now. The Test will be followed by on-campus interviews with NSA representatives.

Please note: You must be a U. S. citizen, subject to a character and loyalty check.

managed a 20 yard scoring run on a quarterback sneak. Most of his yards came on option plays around the end, but the offensive line was opening holes big enough to allow the youngster to go through the middle.

Terry Swanson, Redmen punter, was only called on to use his foot once in the game and that was good for a 58 yd. kick. However, Swanson also saw action at halfback and managed to gain six points on a six yard run in the final quarter.

Milt Morin, 6'4" tight end booted four of seven extra points to make the final score UMass 46—UNH 0.

REDMEN RAMBLING

Fusia had the entire defensive backfield in on offense with five minutes remaining in the game. Leo Biron was at quarterback and Dave Giarla and Ed Cody played the halfback positions. It looks as if they were going to score, but time ran out.

UMass has now finished the season with a respectable 7-2 mark. Prior to the game they were said to be in line for a visit to the Tangerine Bowl. If the University of Maine receives a bid, a great rematch would be a UMass-UMaine contest.

New Hampshire threatened twice in the game only to fumble once and have a pass intercepted deep in UM territory.

With only ten seniors on the squad, Fusia can look forward to success next season. UM fans, and coaches, can be happy that they have a great young quarterback to lead their offense. But who are the eight men that will replace Meers and Morin?

Intramural Report

By Dave Jarnes

In what was undoubtedly a fitting climax to the most successful touch football season in this school's history, the dormitory all-stars stunned the favored fraternity all-stars with a heart-stopping 38-34 triumph at Alumni Field.

Those who witnessed this dazzling offensive show are still talking about the fabulous performance of Ed Polchepek. Polchepek set records for most passes attempted (24), most passes completed (15) and most TD passes (5) while his ace receiver Bob Libby set records for the most receptions (7), most touchdowns scored (4), and the most points scored in an all-star game (25). Polchepek had several passes dropped by his receivers or his final statistics might have been even more impressive.

Meanwhile the fraternity duo of Johnny Parnell (9-15) and Bob Miller (10-14) performed well in leading their team's attack. Miller set a record for the best pass completion percentage (71%).

Most of the action took place in the first half as both teams marched up and down the field with the dorms finally holding a 26-21 halftime edge.

When compared with last year's 39-20 romp by the Fraternities it would appear that the balance of power may be shifting in favor of the dormitories. There was nothing "fluky" about this win and it was obvious from the outset that the dormitories were fielding a better team.

The ten-pin bowling league will commence this week with Grayson reigning as dorm champs and TEP as the kingpin of the fraternities. This year a record number of fifty-four teams have entered including twelve new independent teams.

A basketball clinic will be given at 7:30 on Wednesday in Boyden by a member of the local basketball officials' association. This clinic is highly recommended for all intramural basketball players and referees as any rule interpretations will be cleared up.

Entries for the handball tourney are due November 18 and basketball rosters must be in by the 19th.

Record-Breaking Redmen Go On Rampage at UNH

by HOWIE DAVIS

Greg Landry, the dazzling sophomore quarterback from Nashua, N.H., led the University of Massachusetts to an overwhelming 46-0 victory over the University of New Hampshire.

It was an overcast, drizzly day at the Durham campus as Landry rushed for 204 yards, picked up 192 yards in the air on 12 passes, scored two touchdowns, and passed for another.

Landry set the Yankee Conference season passing yardage record with 899 yards, set the record for total offense for one season in the Conference with 1283, set the record for the University of total offense in one game with 396 yards and smashed the mark for rushing in one game for a UMass player with 204 yards.

However, Landry was not the only record breaker on the field. Split end Bob Meers, playing his last game in a Redmen uniform, tied the record for the number of receptions in one game with nine, set the Yankee Conference record for number of receptions in one season with 28, and now owns the UM mark for completions in one season with 39.

The first UMass score came on a spectacular 48 yard run by Landry. Seemingly trapped at scrimmage the 6'3" 195 pounder scampered the last twenty yards unmolested.

Meers scored the second six pointer on a 72 yard pass from Landry. The aerial only traveled 25 yards in the air, but Meers was standing 20 yards from the nearest defender. Smashing full-back, Phil Vandersea scored the next TD on a hard-nosed 5 yd drive through the middle of the line.

Senior halfback Dick Lewis, a substitute most of his career, shone with brilliance Saturday. Lewis picked up 50 yards on eight carries including a 30 yard score.

Little Bob Detore proved his scoring prowess when he scampered five yards off tackle for the final score for the Redmen in the first half.

Head coach Vic Fusia began unloading his bench with three minutes remaining in the half. Landry was the only regular backfield man to start the second half.

In the third quarter Landry

Greg Landry is seen here completing a pass to Bob Meers (No. 83). Meers, the split end of the Redmen, set two records in the receiving department Saturday. Bob set the Yankee Conference pass receiving record with 28; and he set the UMass record of most receptions in a single season with 39.

Maine Beaten By Tampa

The University of Maine was defeated by the University of Tampa Saturday night by the unlikely score of 2-0. The game was scoreless until late in the fourth quarter when, with 1:10 left to play, Dick DeVarney was caught in his own endzone for a safety.

Booters Tie for Yan-Con Title

by GLENN BRIERE

Phil Bozenhard's two goals sparked the UMass soccer team to a 4-1 victory over New Hampshire Saturday. The win gave the Redmen a share of the Yankee Conference championship along with Vermont and UConn.

They encountered little trouble on the wet field in defeating the Wildcats. It was their fifth win in a row, and it completed a fine 7-3 record. In the conference, the Redmen finished with a 4-1 record, as did the Catamounts and the Huskies.

Connecticut also had an easy time Saturday, trouncing Rhode Island, 6-2. Massachusetts's only YanCon loss this year was to UConn. It was the Redmen, of course, who made the tie possible by handing UVM its only setback.

In addition to Bozenhard's two scores, Bill Burgess and Gerry Cellilli chalked up the other two tallies for UMass. Bozenhard and Cellilli are two promising sophomore forwards who should provide fans with some top-notch soccer in the future.

Burgess, of course, was by far the most sensational offensive star this season. His goal Saturday gave him a total of ten, which was good enough to make him the team's leading scorer.

The most outstanding characteristic of the team, as Coach Larry Briggs agrees, was its tremendous desire. At the halfway point of the season, they had a 2-3 record. But they rebounded in the second half to win the rest of their contests.

There was a tremendous improvement in team coordination and the defense allowed only three goals in the last five games. To top it off, the vast majority of the team consists of juniors and sophomores, a portent of things to come next year.

The only losses by the Redmen this year, besides UConn, were to perennial powerhouse Trinity and to unbeaten Worcester Tech, who will compete in the NCAA college division tournament. Victories included Coast Guard, Maine, URI, Tufts, Vermont, Amherst and New Hampshire.

The team gave UM fans a season to be proud of along with a share of the first Yankee Conference Soccer Championship.

Student Senate findings on grading system poll released

By Karen Rose, Senate Reporter

The findings of a Student Senate Ad Hoc committee studying the UMass grading system have been placed in the hands of the Faculty Senate for consideration and action.

The committee, set up in April 1965, compared UM's grading system with those of other schools and showed a general dissatisfaction at UM with the 4.0 system and a general satisfaction at other schools using this system.

The committee drew up and administered three separate polls. The first went to 95 schools, 22 in Mass. and the remainder throughout the country. At least one institution was contacted in each state.

THE SECOND poll was sent to the faculty and administrators here at UMass.

The third poll was distributed to the campus residences through the student senators.

The results of the first poll indicated that 57 of the 73 schools contacted employed a grading system similar to ours (4.0 system). The schools indicated overall satisfaction with the system.

Questions asked in the poll included: "Do you anticipate any changes in the grading system at your institution?" The answers of 94 per cent indicated that they expect no change.

Another question asked if there was any campus pressure from faculty or students to change the 4.0 system. Again the majority replied negatively.

Most of the schools stated that graduating average was 2.0, although in some cases it was as low as 1.7. Even schools with other point systems generally indicated a minimum grade of C for graduation.

HERE at UM 55 per cent of the faculty and administration replied that they were not satisfied with the present grading system.

A few instructors and administrators felt that a pass or fail system should be used, other indicated that some sort of intermediary system should be installed. The majority (60%) either had no recommendations for change or indicated that they were satisfied with the present system.

The student poll showed that the student body does not favor the present system. However, almost 60 per cent of the students would like to see the present 1.8 graduating cume retained.

COMMENTING on the poll, Sen. Jerry Benezra, who was largely responsible for it, said: "Our results show that there are problems within the system. The poll was successful in that it records the general student, faculty, administrative dissatisfaction (with the grading system at UM). Also the results show that many areas must be investigated."

Benezra pointed out the lack of standardization in grading at UM. Some departments use a cumulative point system to determine a final grade, other courses and departments require from one to four exams per semester.

"FURTHERMORE, this poll gave us a chance to work with the Faculty Senate... for the good of the University," Benezra said. This, he commented, "seems to be part of a general trend at UM this year."

Summing things up Benezra stressed the fact that "we would all be lax in our duties if we don't follow up the results of the poll with some constructive action."

The majority of schools with the 4.0 system indicated satisfaction with the system.

The Grading System report states "It would be wise to pay attention to the other schools reasons for satisfaction (with the system) and see how applicable they are to our situation as judged by student and faculty polls here."

In conclusion Benezra expressed his thanks to Dean Tunis and his committee and to the Faculty Senate for their time. He also indicated that such cooperation is "just a beginning."

The execution sets into motion the train of events and ideas examined in "The Martyred", a play by Richard Greenbaum, which has its world premier this week at UMass. Story on page 7.

Peace Corps instead of the draft?

By PAM METAXAS, Staff Reporter

In a recent article in the Michigan Daily, Robert Satin, former Peace Corps director in the Dominican Republic, made an unusual proposal: Why not let all draft-age citizens, male or female, "serve" their country. He added in a Collegian interview this would mean that at age 18 every man and woman would go to his local Selective Service board and inform them how he planned to serve his two years.

Neither the men or women would be limited to military service, he said. They would be able to have a choice between VISTA, Operation Headstart, Voter Registration, teacher helpers in culturally deprived areas and several others.

He also pointed out this need not interfere with college. A student could complete his education before or after his two-year service. But sometime between 18 and 28 every man and woman would be held responsible for two years of either military or social service.

He emphasized that college students of today "are not getting the opportunity to express their needs." They feel lost and unimportant in the great American machinery. Satin believes that his program is the answer to this.

Faculty OK Needed For Graduate Senate

By BOB PRESCOTT

After leading a successful battle this summer to repeal the athletic fee for graduate students, the Graduate Student Organizational Committee saw its final objective achieved Monday evening with the formation of the Graduate Senate. The only obstacle to overcome now is the approval from the Faculty Senate and the Board of Trustees to make the organization official.

The new body, representing approximately 2200 graduate students at the University, is set up on a different basis from the Student Senate. It is more in line with the Faculty Senate in that each department has at least one representative and a maximum of three.

Of the sixty-one elected senators, approximately thirty-five attended Monday evening's meeting held in the Senate Chambers.

Elected to the Presidency was Joseph Champagne of the Food Technology Department and past Chairman of the Organizational Committee.

The other officers are: Vice President, Thomas Mason of Industrial Engineering who also becomes the graduate students' permanent representative to the SUG board, Secretary, Linda Kenworthy of Zoology, and Treasurer, Herbert Meiselman of Psychology and former member of the Organizational Committee.

The following Committees were appointed: Budget and Finance, Student Services and Activities, Academic Affairs, and Elections. These committees will be the main Standing Committees of the Senate and will attempt to deal with the problems within their realm through contact with the various other organizations on campus.

Some of the more pressing problems confronting the Graduate Senate are housing, the identity of various types of Graduate Students—what his role is and privileges are at the University, parking, and library privileges.

All the committees plan to hold meetings within the next week so that they can report back to the next Senate meeting to be held sometime after Thanksgiving.

Peace Corps representatives were at UMass Monday and Tuesday to explain to students the workings of the Corps. At the booth set up in the Union Lobby, students had an opportunity to inquire about service in the corps and the procedure for taking the Peace Corps exam.

Med School Vote Tonight

By Karen Rose, Senate Reporter

Tonight a bill will be brought to the floor, under special business, moving that the Student Senate support the stand taken by the Massachusetts Taxpayers Committee for Quality Medical Education, concerning the medical school situation.

This committee feels that the proposed medical school should be located in Amherst rather than Worcester.

Other bills coming up tonight will include one on residence hall constitutions. The bill includes provisions for constitutions for the dorms, election of officers, and a budget.

Another bill deals with traffic regulations and outlines plans for dealing with traffic violations.

Probably the most debated bill of the evening will be the one calling for replacement of the present student senate executive council, now consisting of the chairmen of the standing senate committees, with a council of selected members.

A final bill concerning the executive council proposes that the council be empowered to act on behalf of the entire senate between the close of one academic year and the start of the next.

Entrance Policy Subject of Study

(Reprinted from the New York Times)

Coeducational colleges and universities that discriminate against women in their admissions policies should be deprived of Federal funds, Representative Edith Green declared recently.

The Oregon Democrat said she would propose such legislation if a study by her House subcommittee on education found that such practices did exist.

Mrs. Green spoke at the annual meeting of the College Scholarship Service. She said that after passage of an unusual amount of education legislation, it was time for Congress "to stop, to look and to listen" before embarking on new educational programs.

Congress, she said, must give the colleges time to catch up on programs already passed — to staff and implement them. It should re-examine the role of government as a partner in education and consider such questions as the education of women, she added.

The meeting was attended by about 1,000 persons from the 661 colleges participating in the service.

PEACE CORPS...

thirds of the people are the 'have-nots,' said Satin, "our enlightened self-interest demands that we put to use our greatest resource—the human resource."

He concluded that his idea for a "general draft" would do just that. It would make everyone 1-A for 2 years of military or social service.

1. If you have three apples, and you want to divide them among four of you, how much does each one get?

One apiece. I don't like apples.

2. You're not much for math either.

On the contrary. I once went through a whole semester of calculus—after Phys. Ed. closed on me during registration.

3. What are you going to do with all that knowledge?

Do you need calculus to manufacture fortune cookies?

4. You might become an actuary. It's a challenging, responsible job—and you can make a lot of dough.

A big income is one of my fondest ambitions.

5. At Equitable, they even pay you for passing actuarial exams.

You're putting me on.

6. It's true. When you pass an actuarial exam, you get an automatic increase in your Equitable salary. And since there are ten exams, you could be making quite a bundle after a while. But don't get involved unless you have an interest in math.

Pro Musica Will Present Unique Music Here

By ELAINE KAGAN

One of the rewarding aspects of a mechanized civilization such as ours is that the work of a unique musical ensemble—the New York Pro Musica—scheduled to appear here for the first time Mon., Nov. 22, at 8 p.m. at the SU Ballroom—is already known to literally millions of Americans through the medium of recordings.

The Pro Musica—who have made it their business to acquaint a concert-going public with the masterpieces composed from the Thirteenth to the Eighteenth Centuries—have thus been able to reach an audience of which the citizens of the Renaissance and pre-Renaissance would have constituted the merest fraction.

In addition to their regularly scheduled tours and New York concert series, the Pro Musica records for Decca-Gold Label with whom they now have an exclusive contract. They have also recorded for Columbia Records.

Their record repertoire encompasses a variety of compositions and moods—offering the great sacred music of the Renaissance, the romance and gaiety of Elizabethan songs and madrigals, and the lusty humor of what may be termed medieval musical comedy. Decca has released their recordings of "The Play of Daniel" and "The Play of Herod" which the group presented during the past few seasons in New York to more than 60,000 people.

To achieve the true sound of these ancient scores, the Pro Musica records and performs on the musical instruments of the period during which the works were composed.

The wizardry of modern record transcription brings accurately to the ear on these discs the tones of the harpsichord, the five members of the recorder family (soprano, soprano, tenor, alto, bass) the early flute, the Krumphorns, the rebec, medieval fiddle, the viol family (treble, tenor, and bass), the regal, and the portative organ.

Destination Unknown

The women's sign-out sheet at UMass has become obsolete. In any business or organization when an object loses its value it is usually discarded or remodeled. However, UMass does not appear to follow this practice.

The purpose of the sign-out sheet, as described by University authorities, is for protection. It is supposed to be used to notify a girl in case she is needed in an emergency. In reality, few girls could be located by a look at this sheet. In place of a specific destination one may frequently find the words "campus" or "off campus" written. This is not a policy of evasion, but simply the fact that often a girl does not know exactly where she will be, or whether she will be at a few places in one evening. Therefore, the location purpose of the sheet is immediately eliminated.

Adding to the uselessness of the sheet is the fact that the time of expected return gives nothing but a vague idea of when a girl will be back in the dorm. Most girls will simply sign out for that night's curfew no matter when they plan on returning.

Furthermore, many girls do not even bother to sign out, and, as long as they return before lock up, there is no evidence that they are even out of the dorm.

A final question might be why University officials feel it is unnecessary to have sign-out sheets for boys too? If their purpose is to protect, aren't the male students entitled to the same privileges, regardless of their effectiveness, as the girls?

All these points seem to add up to value 'zero' for sign-out sheets and subsequently their abolition.

Let's Be Cautious

The Senate Survey indicates that there is a big demand on this campus to alter the marking system. But why do so many people want a change?

It appears that many students have been influenced by wordy propaganda. They have been told that the present system is old and outdated and that it should be replaced by more progressive methods, such as marking with pluses and minuses. There may be nothing wrong with the new ideas; similarly, there may be nothing wrong with the old ways. But all too many people appear too ready to accept new suggestions without taking the time to think through them completely.

Let us not be too hasty in making changes. Sometimes the old systems, through long usage, become dull and monotonous and lose the appeal they once had. This often makes us desire change just for the sake of trying something different, but it does not necessarily mean that the qualities for which the old methods were originally chosen no longer exist.

Therefore, let's be cautious.

Peace Corps—An Exciting Opportunity

One of the most useful of American inventions in recent years has been the initiation of the Peace Corps. The Peace Corps serves a double purpose in the confusing turmoil of today's world. Not only does it contribute to the needs of culturally and economically deprived areas but it also serves as a useful outlet for ideas gained by college students.

The Peace Corps sends volunteers to deprived regions to get these areas started on a road to a better and more prosperous life. There are many branches of the Peace Corps that perform specific tasks for specific needs, both cultural and economic, enough to give these nations incentive to continue on their own.

In order to function the Peace Corps utilizes the education and experience of college graduates. College provides a broad background of knowledge, both inside the classroom and out. The many ideas grasped by students in college can be put into practical use by means of the vast opportunities furnished by the Peace Corps. Here the college graduate can simultaneously widen his own spectrum by the experience he gains and be a great boost to people not so fortunate.

The Peace Corps does not pay much in materialistic value, but the advantages it pays in terms of knowledge and experience cannot be overemphasized. The Peace Corps serves to brighten the lives of those serving and those served.

UMass' Own

Theater professionals and enthusiasts around the world will focus their attention on the University of Massachusetts tomorrow night.

For tomorrow night, the University Theater will present the world premier of "The Martyred".

We should take pride in this accomplishment. UMass' Richard Kim wrote the book; UMass professor Cosmo Catalano directed the play; UMass students prepared the technical aspects of the play; UMass students are acting in the play.

Hopefully, UMass students will appreciate the play.

This is the first time our campus has undertaken a dramatic production of such magnitude.

Will the play measure up to Mr. Kim's novel? See the world premiere of "The Martyred" and judge. Be it a success or a failure, we should applaud the endeavor.

Your cooperation will be appreciated.

"Beneath Content"

To the Editor:

I would like to offer some sober commentary on the editorial and cartoon which appeared in the Nov. 15 issue of the Collegian which attempted to condemn the vigil that took place at Ft. Devens on Nov. 11. The point and manner of the editorial were reasonable, although the writer neglected to differentiate between picketing and a vigil. This demonstration took the form of a quiet vigil. The spirit was one of mourning and sorrow for all victims of the war in Vietnam, and one of appeal to the hearts and consciences of those who are waging and supporting the war. The cartoon, however, which depicted what appeared to be a shaggy caveman hitting a Military Policeman over the head with a wooden caricature of the symbol for peace, is beneath contempt. This demonstration was totally non-violent, and any and all near violence which occurred was completely one-sided. In fact, considering the verbal abuse to which we were subjected in addition to many threats to our physical well-being, I feel that the participants in the vigil are to be commended for the dignity and self-restraint that they displayed. The artist's conception of the typical demonstrator is also completely inaccurate. The physical appearance of all of the participants was neat and intentionally unobtrusive, so as not to draw attention to themselves and away from the purpose of the vigil. If this cartoon appeared in the comics section of the New York Daily News, one might laugh and forget it, but its appearance on the editorial page of a college newspaper is irresponsible journalism at its worst. ## Student Behavior Criticized

Call me disgusted. Some years ago I became discouraged when I read of misdemeanors that had occurred here at the University. Personal items of no little value to their possessors were to disappear in ever increasing numbers. I more than expected that this would happen but I had hoped that University students were beyond such petty practice. Now the problem has increased. Last week, a gentleman advertised for the whereabouts of his briefcase which contained his most valuable personal papers of no use to persons other than himself.

Judging by the duration of time that the advertisement was run, I deduce that the briefcase was not located without some trouble—IF, indeed, it has been located! Tonight, I read of a valuable book "borrowed" as it were, from the seat of a parked car. A Maine-guide winter coat appears also among the missing.

Needless to say, my disgust soon changed to anger. Why was it that when occurred the Infamous Black-Out of 1965—the gentlemen of U-Mass were less considerate of their fellow students than the cold, heartless millions of my native New York-New Jersey metropolitan area? Why is it that in New York City I feel safe leaving my coat on the coat rack in a restaurant while here, at an institution of higher education, I do not set down my books without mistrust?

Bear with me if you please, for this concerns us all. I want to pose some questions to the reading public at large. How many of you have ever stopped to consider these topics of my discussion? Has our judicial nature deteriorated so much as to allow wanton destruction and pilfering—especially of personal items—to continue and spread? How much concern will you show when you yourself become the victim? I realize that these matters are such as should come under the power of the Men and Women Judiciaries, but obviously, this cannot be the final solution to the problem; the problem still persists and as I ponder these incidents, I am somehow led time and again to the attitude of this campus in general. It is my opinion that something is definitely wrong with the attitude and conduct of the student body in general, and I am not excusing myself from my opinion. Shall we allow this condition to persist? I say NO—furthermore, I wish that any other persons who share my opinions (or are critical of my opinions) would speak out in hopes that this issue may be probed and settled to the satisfaction of all citizens of this scholastic community. Perhaps we should establish a body of some sort to carry on an "introspection of our community" in hopes of solving our quandary or quieting our cynicism. Please ponder these things and do what you think is right. Remember: it is not a matter of you being here only four years, but rather of you being here four years.

Psychology? Rats!

To the Editor:

I am a sophomore psychology major taking two "advanced" psychology courses, and am becoming more bitter and disillusioned about this department at every class meeting.

I have spent a year and a half studying, or trying to find something to study, in this department. In one of the advanced courses I am taking this semester, we are learning, or rather memorizing blindly, formulas that were used in the introductory courses we were required to take both semesters last year.

Is a student being taught anything in a subject he intends to make his career when he is told, "You will do well in this course if you memorize your notes cold for the exam."

Does the term "essay exam" connote "thinking"? When the first exam in one of my "psych" courses was announced to be essay, I prepared myself to contemplate and possibly analyze a theory or two.

Blue books were supplied, but the pages were not to be used for thought, analysis, or opinion. Those beautifully blank pages were expressly to be filled with regurgitation of notes!

I would not have given up hope for improvement in the course had I not heard the candid opinions of some senior psychology majors and even of one psychology lab instructor:

"It gets worse as you go on. If you think this is sticky, wait till next year!"

I wish this letter to be published anonymously, as I am sure I speak not only for myself but for many students who used to be "gung-ho" for psychology.

Is Murder and Torture The American Way?

To the Editor:

After reading a letter in Friday's Collegian on the subject of Viet Cong terrorism, I wish to comment. I cannot deny anything Jon Loftus said in his letter, not having read information on either side of his particular account, but I can mention acts of equal violence on the part of the South Vietnamese government acts which can only show that our country is involved in a violent and immoral war.

It was fairly well publicized, although not very discussed by pro-government people, when the story was printed in the New York Times and other papers of government forces bribing Vietnamese children with candy bars to get them to disclose the location of their fathers. In Richard Tregaskis' Vietnam Diary, he tells of a Vietnamese woman with her three children. Faced by the soldiers, she grabbed one child, but the army shot the two older ones, then the one in her arms, then her in the stomach. The New York Times Magazine tells of soldiers terrorizing a peasant by telling him he would be shot. He was a cripple, unable to flee the village when the soldiers arrived, and was finally sent to a prison camp (Dec. 6 Times, 1964). These, too, are not isolated accounts. There are many stories written of government forces using the fake drownings or heavy beating or more ingenious methods of torture. (Check Life magazine, June 12, 1964, or the New York Times, Oct. 27, 1964 or the New York Daily News, Jan. 10, 1964, or any one of many other such accepted publications for other specific examples.)

I am not condoning torture by either the South Vietnamese or the Vietcong—I condemn barbaric actions on any side. When a radio newscaster announces the death of a certain amount of Americans and a certain amount of Communists, it is frightening, for it is as though he is trying to make the Vietcong less than men. What is important is that, if the Vietcong use torture, that is wrong, and if our government bombs villages with napalm, then that is wrong. Right or wrong cannot be defined by which side one is on.

An editorial in the Saturday Evening Post said "In Vietnam...on both sides of the guerilla war, a man is sometimes better off dead than captured." It is for this reason that I oppose the war, that I oppose my country's position in it. I cannot defend inhumane actions, and thus cannot possibly defend the U.S. policy of participating in an immoral war in Vietnam, but must oppose it in all conscience.

Protesting Portuguese Prunes

Ever yearn to walk down the street carrying a placard saying "Get Out of Iowa!" or "Make Pastrami, Not Corned Beef"? Ever had the desire to translate a volume of Haiku into Creole French?

If these are representative of your suppressed desires, you should consider joining SFPP, Secret Friends of Protesting People, says Larry Sherman in El Gaucho, University of California, Santa Barbara.

Only last week SFPP Secretary Mildred Swinewharf led a picket line protesting economic discrimination against the import of prunes from Portugal. "Portuguese prunes are extra tasty, and they add a zest to my day that American prunes just do not furnish," Miss Swinewharf said. "But the government has forgotten to renew their import permit. We must do something about such laxity."

When SFPP President Venison Mildue was asked what he thought would hold the group together, he smiled and said, "Aha! This is what makes SFPP so special. Our goals are so wide-ranging that it will be nearly impossible for anyone to oppose us. By the time anyone realizes what we are attempting to do, we shall have done it."

"Not even I know what we are protesting this week. We just wait until one of our members starts complaining about something, then we go out and support him. Picket lines, sit-ins, sleep-ins, jump-ins, the whole bit."

When asked about his plans to expand to other universities, Mildue advised watching the newspaper. "No sweat," he said. "Soon we'll be more in than Bob Dylan — whom, incidentally, we are protesting next week."

International Club:

Students To Have Exchange Mixer

"Marriage customs in Different Lands" was the topic in the first series of the Round Table Discussion program held last Wednesday after the coffee hour of the International Club at UMass.

The panel consisted of seven persons representing four continents and almost all regions of the world. Each speaker spoke for five minutes about his country's customs and traditions with regard to engagement, dating patterns, marriage ceremony, marriage arrangement, divorce, etc. The discussion was followed by an interesting question hour.

Professor C. Wendell King of the Sociology department acted as the moderator for the discussion. He traced the history of the institution of marriage and mentioned the element of drastic change which is taking place in this respect. Dr. King's specialized field of study is the sociology of the family and he has a book to his credit entitled Social Movement in America.

The panel was comprised of the following: Alladin Hashim (Malaysia); George Gikonyo (Africa-Kenya); Mrs. Bhav (India); Amnin Bayer (Switzerland); Ali Abdul Wahab (UAR); Pat Hotfon (USA) and Bonnie Sun (China).

THE ARAB WORLD

The third talk in the "Land and People" series of the International club will be held Wednesday, November 17 at 6:15 p.m. in the Governor's lounge, S.U.

Hatem A. Hussaini, a government major from Jordan and also vice-president of the International club, will be giving the talk with color slides on Special Guests.

Members of the Campus Religious Council will be this week's special guests at the International club coffee hour. All are cordially invited to attend.

DANCE ON NOVEMBER 20

Amherst College has organized a dance for the foreign students and members of International club of UMass, Smith College, and Mount Holyoke College on Saturday, November 20 at 8:00 p.m. in Davis Center Ballroom, Smith College.

Music will be provided by a well-known band from Cambridge.

All those interested are requested to submit their names with Judy Richards, officer of the International Club, by Wednesday, November 17.

O.C.A. REPRESENTATIVE SPEAKS

Mr. Le Roy D. Smith, representative of Operation Crossroads Africa, was invited to the coffee hour of the International club recently to answer questions regarding the work of his organization in Africa and to show a technicolor movie about the same.

"OCA which was founded in 1957" Mr. Smith told the eager audience, "is becoming more and more popular in Africa and has already sent 1300 students there to work for the development in different countries."

Earlier, a film was shown which depicted the way OCA is working in Africa.

VISIT AMERICAN FAMILIES
About 40 foreign students from UMass and Amherst College visited American families last fortnight in the Amherst area.

All of them were taken to the Amherst broadcasting station, a typical small New England dairy farm, Amherst School, and the South Congregational Church by the respective families.

Both students and the families are said to have enjoyed the program.

Young Churchill to Speak On Africa

"It is time the Western powers learned to give assistance that benefits whole peoples instead of gratifying the egotistical imperialist ambitions of a handful of petty dictators," says young Winston Churchill who will speak here on November 30, at 7:30 p.m. in the S.U. Ballroom under the auspices of Student Union Arts and Music Committee.

The above is one of the conclusions Mr. Churchill reached after his exciting 20,000 mile journey by light plane through some 40 countries of the Middle East and Africa.

His recently published book, "First Journey", is the fourth volume of Churchillian Africana. This trip was a great adventure. Young Winston and an Oxford friend took off in their small Piper Comanche with only 250 flying hours experience between them. They flew over deserts and jungles, witnessed wars and revolutions, and met a host of fascinating individuals from politicians and emperors to taxi drivers and Peace Corp workers.

When Churchill asked Haile Selassie, for instance whether he preferred foreign aid in the form of financial assistance or technical assistance, the Emperor broke into English for the first time with, "Cash, of course, is first class, isn't it?"

WINSTON CHURCHILL

The flight had its dramatic moments too. Once they became lost over the Congo jungles and found an emergency landing place only minutes before dark.

Churchill's vivid impressions of his trip are those of an independent observer, but he was able to go places and talk to leaders who are ordinarily "off limits" to the average traveller.

Whether he is portraying a political situation, a visit to Albert Schweitzer or a trip to a lonely French fort in the desert, Winston Churchill writes and talks with shrewdness, a command of aphorism and a power of description that makes his observations memorable.

Sex Misinformation

The topic of sex is passed around the college campus more often than a football in Hyanisport, says the Western Round-Up, Western College, Oxford, Ohio. "It travels from dorm to smoker, gathering around itself an aura of misinformation, taboo, and gross sentimentality."

"The Western campus, no different, has been besieged frequently by 'The Sex Talk,' annual lectures containing maudlin references to motherhood or wispy, idealistic pleas for a 'return to virtue.'"

"Before the campus now is the Seminar on Sex, a series of lectures intended to open the way for discussion of a vital subject on the academic level. SOS, as it is aptly or unfortunately called, claims to be neither a panacea for awkward social situations nor a college answer to French film-making."

"Attempts to bridge the gap between professed ideals and public behavior have been effected by the banishment of candid discussion of sex behind a curtain of taboo."

"Perhaps through the Seminar, the total blindness that often evolves from incomplete and inaccurate information about sex can be reduced to a minor case of myopia. Myopia, you know, can be cured."

Studying Abroad?

For every young American studying abroad, there are four foreign students on campus in the U.S. The UMass ratio is 55 foreigners here to one abroad.

Although interest in study abroad programs is increasing across the nation, the problems of getting there and paying for it loom as major roadblocks to a balancing of the statistics.

About 50 American colleges and universities sponsor their own Junior Year Abroad Programs. The programs are designed to aid the third year student through intensive course study and to offer many cultural benefits.

The University of Massachusetts, along with the majority of American schools, has no established study abroad program. Information may be obtained from the Committee on Scholarship, Financial Aid and Study Abroad, or by contacting the committee chairman, Prof. William McConnell.

Five UM students are now studying in Europe, either independently or under the auspices of another University.

Miss Antunes, former member of the Study Abroad Committee, feels that such study is rewarding for those "who are mature and really want to study."

On a graduate level, perhaps more than the undergraduate, foreign study is enriching, she said. Grad work offers more direct specialization and time is not limited, as it is in the junior year program. Undergraduate's information on graduate study abroad is available from Miss Antunes in Placement.

Under a UM innovation two summer study programs are being offered for next year. One involves summer study at Oxford, the other in Bologna, Italy. The programs offer transferable summer courses—and a taste of travel—for a six to eight-week span. A hopeful aim is to encourage students to return abroad for more concentrated work as graduate students.

Miss Antunes, a member of the Fulbright subcommittee on foreign study, pointed out several reasons why more Americans do not study abroad. "It's quite expensive," she said, "anywhere from $1,700 to $3,000, plus travel expenses."

A second deterrent is that programs are offered by so few American colleges. Interested sophomores from schools without programs face the problem of being accepted in another school's study abroad program. The vacancies are few and scholarships for outsiders are almost nil.

Why do so few Americans study abroad when so many foreigners come to the U.S.? "Education is more respected abroad," Miss Antunes said. "In India, for example, education counts more than anything—even marriage."

Often American schools offer the foreign student, especially graduates, something he can't get at home.

In America, the outlook toward education is different. The sacrifice by both parent and student often seen in other countries is not so apparent in an American counterpart. The value of education abroad is unrealized by most Americans, and even when realized it is still mostly unfulfilled.

For those who do want to study abroad, the door is open. "The programs are there," Miss Antunes repeated. "It's just a matter of finding them."

It comes down to hard work, time and effort for an American student to study abroad.

Night Sounds

Every discriminating student who appreciates the best of good music should listen to NIGHT SOUNDS on WMUA, 91.1 FM.

Monday through Thursday from 11-1 a.m., Bill Bastable and Charles Lawrence present such artists as Dean Martin, Arthur Fiedler, Frank Sinatra, Barbara Streisand, and the choice hits of the past and present Ton 40.

On Mondays and Wednesdays Bill Bastable, a senior speech major, hosts a free-flowing, natural show with music that is stimulating—not just entertaining.

THIS IS BILL'S third year of broadcasting with WMUA and he has done every type of show on the air.

His aim is television or movie production and, at the moment, he is involved in the University Theatre production of "The Martyred."

CHARLES LAWRENCE is your host on Tuesdays and Thursdays. He terms his music "middle of the road tending to the left."

Charlie is a junior speech major who is in his second year of broadcasting and has worked for WTXL in the Springfield area. His ambition is broadcasting and he is currently heading the campaign to support government policy in Viet Nam.

Charlie has a smooth voice and a pleasant personality which help the students unwind after a long day of classes and stud-

University Theatre Presents Greenbaum's "The Martyred"

In this weekend's production of The Martyred, by Richard Greenbaum, University Theatre leaves the safety of revivals of theatre classics to try a brand-new play by a novice playwright.

Based on the best-selling novel by Richard Kim and directed by Cosmo Catalano, the play concerns an investigation during the Korean War of the executions of several Christian ministers. As Pastor Shin, the one surviving minister, is questioned by Captain Lee, universal questions of faith in God and man's responsibility are explored.

Mr. Greenbaum, who is thirty years old, holds a Ph. D. from Harvard. He has taught at New York University and Harvard but is now committed primarily to writing. His critical study of American drama and society since 1920 is scheduled for publication next year. He has participated in college productions, summer stock, experimental movies, and Boston's Actors' Workshop Theatre.

The Korean film industry has already produced a screen adaptation of The Martyred. When shown this year at the Venice Film Festival, it was accused of being subversive and an insult to the Christians involved in the incident on which the story is based. Of his play, Mr. Greenbaum says, "I hope it will challenge the easy assumptions that most people have about their lives, their religion, and what constitutes the truth."

In his University Theatre lecture, Mr. Greenbaum warned that the ideas contained in the novel had to be watered down to the bare essentials for stage presentation. He explained that this was due to the time limit of the drama—an author has to say everything in two hours—and that spoken ideas have to be less complicated than written ideas. He hopes that the emotional impact made by the actors in speaking the ideas will make up for their simplification.

The actors agree that the play is an enormous challenge for ies. BILL and CHARLIE compete with each other and easily offer criticism about the other's show.

However, through this competition and criticism, they succeed in making NIGHT SOUNDS one of the most sophisticated programs in the college listening area.

them. "Most of the characters are older men with a wealth of experience that we actors have never gone through in our personal lives," says Les Titcomb, who plays Pastor Shin. Pat Freni, who has the part of Colonel Chang, the overseer of the investigation, adds how hard it is to make convincing ideas that he does not believe. "When I have to damn Christianity," he explains, "it goes completely against my upbringing and my personal beliefs."

The play is one of ideas rather than action, and these ideas, which are passionately felt by the characters, must be expressed with much sincerity by the actors so the play will not turn into melodrama. The actors feel that they have a tremendous responsibility because of this and that their level of acting may decide the success of the production.

If you are the type of theatre-goer who only wants to see a play that has already been enjoyed by thousands of people and universally praised by scores of critics, better wait until University Theatre does its annual Shakespearean production. If you are the type who only wants mild diversion, and certainly nothing that will make you think, better restrict this weekend's viewing to the Saturday morning cartoons.

But if you feel adventurous and up to some intellectual stimulation and want to risk an evening viewing a play that might go on to become a modern classic and might die an agonizing death on the stage at Bowker, don't miss the world premiere of The Martyred. This weekend, by your acceptance or rejection, you will decide the fate of a new play and a new playwright.

Clarification Prompted On The Nature of Donor Days

Recent confusion concerning the nature of the Red Cross Blood Donor Days to be held at UMass this week, has prompted John Swanson, chairman of the Hampshire County Red Cross, to issue the following statement:

"In 1948 under charter by the Federal Government, the American Red Cross was authorized to undertake the blood program, the actual operation to be carried on by its Chapters all over the country.

"Since that time, the Hampshire County Red Cross held around 14 donor days each year in different county communities and colleges. The use of this blood, clearly stated in the Federal charter, is as follows:

70% of the blood collected will be used in community hospitals wherever it is needed, while 30% will be designated for use in state hospitals and federal institutions, including the Veterans' Administration, public health and military hospitals.

"The visit during the next three days of the Red Cross mobile unit to the UMass campus will be a routine collection such as the county Chapter has held there for the past few years. The blood collected this year will be used as it has in years past, distributed and given free to those in need to both civilian and military.

"The Hampshire County Red Cross has been informed that at the present time fresh blood is not being sent to Vietnam. A few weeks ago some O Negative blood was collected in Massachusetts, frozen by a special process at the Chelsea Naval Hospital and sent to Vietnam.

"We have been notified that as most of the seriously wounded are being quickly sent to this country for surgery and other treatment, much of the blood collected all over the country that is designated for federal use will be used for these wounded.

"The students of the University of Massachusetts by donating blood at this time are demonstrating again as they have in past years that they care—for their country, for their fellow

Harvard Men To Examine South America

The problems of population growth in Latin America will be examined by Dr. Koch-Weser and Dr. Stephen J. Plank, both of the Harvard School of Public Health, during the second Challenge lecture of this year. The lecture will be held in Wright Hall Auditorium at Smith College on November 17.

Both Dr. Plank and Dr. Koch-Weser, who will speak in an informal debate, have a wide knowledge of Latin America. Dr. Plank, who holds a Ph. B. degree from the University of Chicago and A.B. and M.D. degrees from the University of California, interned at the Gorgas Hospital, Balboa, Canal Zone and served for four years as staff physician at Coco Solo Hospital, Cristobal, Canal Zone. He has also been associated with the Peter Bent Brigham Hospital and is presently assistant professor of Population Studies at the Harvard School of Public Health.

Dr. Koch-Weser, associate professor of Tropical Health and Assistant to the Dean for Latin American Programs at the Harvard School of Public Health, received his Abitur from the Gymnasium Pfört, an M.D. from the University of Sao Paulo, Brazil, and holds M.S. and Ph.D. degrees from Northwestern University. He has taught in the medical schools of the University of Chicago and Western Reserve University, and served as Chief of the Latin American Office of the National Institutes of Health in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil.

A secret handshake won't help you make V.P. at General Electric.

Something that will help move your career along at a healthy clip is a strong, steady hand when responsibility and important duties are thrust upon you. Plus a firm grip on your special field of interest, whether it's marketing, finance or nuclear physics.

And it won't hurt a bit if you also want to strengthen your grip on the subject that interests you. General Electric runs one of the world's largest "graduate schools," with courses in everything from advertising to microelectronics. You can stay on top of developments in your field by periodically going to school at G.E. . . . and learning from G-E

"professors," selected from the country's top ranks of engineering, marketing and manufacturing experts.

If you want to work and study and get ahead in this kind of company, this company wants you. Come to General Electric, where the young men are important men.

Get a Degree with No Classes?

By CPS

The possibility of completing an entire undergraduate career — from registration to bachelor's degree—without ever attending classes is being offered to 75 college freshmen this fall.

The experiment, underwritten by a $325,000 Ford Foundation grant, is underway at Lake Forest College. A national selection committee picked the students, all of whom had accelerated high school preparation.

The participants pursue their degrees through faculty-guided study, free of the usually required courses, class attendance, grades, and credits. "Students, however," William Bartlett, director of the program, explained, "must show a proficiency in math and a foreign language" and must pass a comprehensive exam in the humanities, social sciences, and natural sciences. They must, in addition, follow a major program the end result of which will be a research project and a research paper.

Each student has a faculty adviser who acts in the role of "preceptor, critic, and guide." Each student also has access to visiting scholars, lecturers, and artists.

Bartlett says the program has three objectives:

- Without course requirements the student will be able to follow the range of his own abilities and interests;

- Specifically, he will be able to participate in more interdisciplinary study, avoiding the barriers of formal courses;

- Student-faculty relationships should improve as the elimination of grading will correspondingly decrease a professor's "monitoring" function.

Other schools are also experimenting with the standard grading system.

The California Institute of Technology faculty voted to drop grades in freshman courses last fall. The Cal Tech faculty said this was to make the transition between high school and college a smoother one for entering students. Freshman level courses are now evaluated on a pass-fail basis.

Dean of Freshmen Foster Strong said: "What we are doing dramatizes what we think students are here for. Ordinarily, students feel the pressure to try and get a B even though they are not interested in the course. This is not the way a scholar should feel. Adults who are successful don't work this way. We want to take off the artificial pressures and let these talented kids develop as they would like to develop."

Courses are being conducted as before: there are the same assignments, quizzes, and tests. Tests are graded numerically.

At the end of the course, numerical grades are used to determine whether the student passes or fails. Letter grades are neither given to the students nor kept by the professors.

The standard procedures are followed at Cal Tech in all courses above the freshman level.

At Carleton College in Northfield, Minn., upperclassmen become able to take courses in which grades are either pass or fail as of this fall. No letter grades are given.

At Goddard College in Vermont, no specific courses are required, class attendance is not checked, and no grades are given.

Goddard, a private non-denominational school of about 300 students, does require its students to work eight hours a week in a college maintenance job. Student jobs range from janitor to telephone operator. Students also run their own dorms and participate in community projects.

The student is completely equal with the professor in the community government of the college, which meets twice a month to set policy. Students are asked not to address their teachers as "doctor," or "professor," or "mister." First names are preferred.

The average student takes three courses a semester. The five-credit courses meet once a week for three hours. Thus students have classes only on three days a week. The rest of their time is their own.

School officials say this plan allows every student to learn at his own speed without worrying about keeping up with the rest of the class at the expense of comprehension.

San Jose State College in California is experimenting with a program in which selected freshmen will be allowed to study at their own speed without courses, tests, or grades.

The program, now in its second year, is worth 48 lower division credits. Six full-time tutors are in charge of the instruction of the 130 students in the program.

ENGINEERS, SCIENTISTS, MATHEMATICIANS: Explore the unique opportunities at

National Security Agency

...where special programs encourage rapid professional advancement for the engineer, scientist and mathematician launching his career.

NSA is a scientific and technological community unique in the United States, perhaps in the world. Unique in its mission, its operation, its requirements... unique, too, in the scope of opportunity it affords a young scientist or engineer beginning his career.

A separate agency functioning within the Department of Defense, NSA is responsible for developing "secure" (i.e., invulnerable) communications systems to transmit and receive vital information. Within this area, which encompasses the whole field of cryptology—the science of codes and ciphers—NSA project teams pursue a broad spectrum of investigations taking them well beyond many known and accepted boundaries of knowledge. Beginning with basic research, these investigations progress through applied research, development and design, prototype engineering, and on into various phases of applications engineering.

At NSA you might specialize in any or several of these sectors, depending on your talents and special interests:

ENGINEERING. Antenna/transmitter/receiver design... high speed computers (digital and analog)... transistor circuitry... advanced radio communications techniques... microwave communications... audio and video recording devices... cryogenic studies and applications... integrated circuitry... microminiaturization.

PHYSICS. Solid state (basic and applied)... nuclear magnetic resonance phenomena... electromagnetic propagation... upper atmosphere phenomena... superconductivity and cryogenics (Ph.D. graduates only).

MATHEMATICS. Statistical mathematics... matrix algebra... finite fields... probability... combinatorial analysis... programming and symbolic logic.

Unequaled Facilities and Equipment

In a near-academic atmosphere, NSA scientists and engineers enjoy the most fully-instrumented laboratories and use of advanced computer and other equipment, some found nowhere else in the world.

Skilled clerical and technical support will free you to concentrate on the most challenging aspects of your projects, and thus help speed your professional growth.

Outstanding Colleagues

You will work alongside people of enormously varied backgrounds and intellectual interests, over 500 of whom hold advanced degrees.

Researchers at NSA also receive constant stimulus from outside the agency. To assist in certain program areas, NSA often calls on special boards of consultants—outstanding scientists and engineers from industry and academic centers as well as from other government agencies.

Career Development Opportunities

Your professional growth and earning power expand from the day you join NSA, without having to accumulate years of "experience." NSA career development is orderly and swift; substantial salary increases follow as you assume more and more responsibility.

A number of NSA career development programs help shorten the time when you can contribute at your maximum potential. These programs include:

ADVANCED STUDY. NSA's liberal graduate study program affords you the opportunity to pursue part-time study up to eight hours each semester and/or one semester or more of full-time graduate study at full salary. Nearly all academic costs are paid by NSA, whose proximity to seven universities offering a wealth of advanced courses and seminars is an additional asset.

IN-HOUSE TRAINING. The new NSA employee first attends a six-week general orientation program, followed by a period of specialized classroom study designed to broaden familiarity with an area or areas of heavy NSA concern (e.g., communications theory, cryptanalysis, computer logic and analysis, solid state physics). Formal study is complemented by on-the-job training, as you work and learn under the guidance and direction of highly experienced associates.

PROFESSIONAL ASSOCIATIONS, TRAVEL. The agency fosters a climate of recognition and advancement for its young professionals by encouraging participation in professional association affairs, and assisting you to attend national meetings, seminars and conferences as well as visit other research facilities where related work is underway—government, university and industrial—throughout the United States.

Liberal Personnel Policies, Attractive Location

NSA policies relating to vacations, insurance and retirement are fair and liberal. You enjoy the benefits of Federal employment without the necessity of Civil Service certification.

Located between Washington and Baltimore, NSA is also near the Chesapeake Bay, ocean beaches, ski resorts and other popular summer and winter recreation areas, not to mention the varied leisure-time attractions of the nation's capital itself. The location permits your choice of city, suburban or country living.

Campus Interviews—Check Now for Dates!

Representatives of the National Security Agency will conduct interviews on campus soon. Check with your Placement office as soon as possible to schedule an appointment.

Scandinavian Seminar Taking Applicants

The Scandinavian Seminar study program in Denmark, Finland, Norway and Sweden is now accepting applications for the academic year 1966-67. This opportunity to combine living with learning attracts graduates and other adults but has special appeal for the mature college student who wishes to broaden and intensify his study experience in the Scandinavian country of his choice.

The student stays with a Scandinavian family at the outset, speaking the language daily, and sharing its activities in the community. For the major part of the year he lives and studies at a folkehojskole—a residential school for young adults.

Except during the general Seminar and language courses, he is entirely separated from his fellow American students.

At the folkehojskole particular attention is given to the value of the Scandinavian cultural heritage in today's changing world.

After the student has acquired a working knowledge of the language, he is able to devote considerable time to independent study and research in the field of his major interest, which culminates in the presentation of a project paper.

For further information, write to Scandinavian Seminar, 140 West 57th Street, New York, N. Y. 10019.

6-Week Food Purchasing Seminar Opens Monday

A six week seminar on food purchasing for members of the food service industry will begin Monday, Nov. 15, at two locations in the Commonwealth.

Co-sponsored and conducted by the Mass. department of food science and technology, the course is another in a series of programs offered by the cooperative extension service of the UMass College of Agriculture.

Sessions will be held Monday evenings from 7 to 9 p.m. at the University of Massachusetts-Boston and the Western Massachusetts Electric Company Auditorium in West Springfield. A telephone hook-up connects the two classrooms, allowing for two-way exchange of lectures and questions.

The food purchasing seminar follows the completion of a similar program on personnel management for the food service industry recently attended by 131 persons at the two locations. This figure includes 81 representatives from restaurants, hotels, hospitals and other feeding organizations who attended the Boston meetings, and 50 who participated from the West Springfield location.

The next seminar will deal with purchasing functions in the industry, including the various classes of food available. Increased efficiency in food purchasing is one of the major objectives of instruction.

Symphony Band Tryouts Now

The UMass Band Department has announced that auditions for membership in the 1965-1966 UMass Symphony Band will be held this week and next. Students may call 2106 or sign up on the bulletin board on the second floor of Old Chapel.

Auditions will include sight reading from music to be performed during the concert season. The repertoire of the band will consist of works by Schuler, Horvit, Stern, Chavez, Kechley, and Persichetti. Membership in the band is open to qualified undergraduates and graduates.

GET A DEGREE...

Grades are eventually assigned, but only at the end of the year. Each student's tutor evaluates his work and when the year is completed assigns a letter grade for the equivalent courses. School officials say this is necessary so the students in the project can be placed back into the normal grading system at the end of the year. Students can choose any course outside of their major department in which they wish to be graded on the pass-fail system. They can only take one course under this system during a term and cannot take more than four during their undergraduate years.

Study of a possible revision in the grading system is underway at Washington University in St. Louis. Under the program suggested there, students in the first and second year would be told only if they pass or fail courses and would not be given a letter grade.

UNH's punter dropped the center snap in a 4th and 3 situation at his own 32. 2 ground plays netted 7 yds. and Cochran bulled his way for the 1st down with plenty of extra yardage before being nailed at the 9. A 15 yard penalty and 2 incompletions killed the threat. Then the Wildcats immediately started to move after taking over on downs. Another UM penalty on the 1st play and 2 completed passes helped drive the Wildcats beyond midfield but they ran out of gas and lost the ball on downs.

UMASS gained a 1st down but then punted, but they didn't give up the ball for long. A quarterback keep added 1 UNH 1st down but on the following play Schmitt intercepted a pass at the UNH 30 and broke free of tacklers to go in for a touchdown with 29 seconds left. The successful kick gave the Redmen a 13-0 win, their 1st after losses to URI, BU, and UConn, and their 1st in which they scored 2 touchdowns.

Darling, Kelley Are Elected New Wrestling Co-Captains

Dave Kelley, standout UMass grappler, who was elected co-captain of the varsity wrestling team.

By ART KEOWN

Last week the contenders for the Varsity squad of the University of Massachusetts Wrestling Team elected George Darling and Dave Kelley co-captains of the team. George, who will be wrestling in the 160 lb. class, compiled a record of 8-2 last year. Kelley, who has been undefeated in three years of college competition, last year took second place in the New England Interscholastic Wrestling Tournament.

WITH ONE MONTH of practice already under their belts, the team is preparing for their first dual contest, a home meet against the Coast Guard Academy on Dec. 8. Coach Tess feels that all the team members are working hard, and that competition for the Varsity berths will be keen. Of the thirty men out for the team this year, over one-half are returning from last year's team.

Among the new rules passed by the Wrestling Association this year is a change in the weight divisions. This year the classes to be wrestled are 123 lbs., 130 lbs., 137 lbs., 145 lbs., 152 lbs., 160 lbs., 177 lbs., 191 lbs. (optional) and the unlimited weight class.

COACH HESS will take the winners of the Varsity wrestle-offs to New Haven on Nov. 23 to meet the Yale Bobcats in a non-scheduled scrimmage. He feels this will aid the wrestlers in perfecting their moves by placing them against unknown competition.

M-Club Exhibition Basketball Preview

University of Massachusetts basketball fans can get a preview of the 1965-66 Redmen varsity and freshmen teams as well as a nostalgic trip down memory lane Friday, Nov. 19 when the first annual alumni and varsity basketball games take place. At 6:30 p.m. the varsity will tangle with the freshmen and the alumni will play each other at 8 o'clock at Curry Hicks Cage.

Some of the greatest Redmen alumni hoopsters will be returning to take part in the scrimmage. Heading the list are George "Tigger" Burke '56 and Dave Bartley '56, who led the Redmen to their best season, 17-6, in 1955-56. Burke, who scored 805 points in two varsity seasons, is now a State Representative from Quincy. Bartley is also a State Representative from Holyoke.

Other alumni are Doug Grutchfield '61, Rodger Twitchell '64, Jack Foley '57, Pete Bernard '64, Charlie O'Rourke '55, and Ned Larkin '59, who rank as the top six all-time scorers at UMass. They will be joined by Charles Kingston '65, Leo LeBlanc '60, John Widison '61, Charles Fohlin '62, Jim Laughnane '61, Charlie LaPier '63 and Dick Green '61.

Coach Johnny Orr has announced a probably starting varsity lineup of Frank Stewart, 6'4 (Lynfield), Billy Tindall, 6'5 (Mt. Kisco, N.Y.), Clarence Hill, 6'1 (Washington, D.C.), Mike Meola, 5'11 (Schenectady, N.Y.), and either Jim Babyak, 6'3 (Easthampton) or John Lisack, 6'4 (Allendale, N.J.) to battle the frosh.

Frosh Coach Jack Leaman will probably counter with guards Joe DiSarcina, 5'11 (Somerville), and John Shockro, 6'2 (Attleboro), center Peter Gayeska, 6'9 (Somerville), and forwards Ron Nowakowski, 6'4 (Methuen) and Mike Gemei, 6'2 (Ossining, N.Y.).

Admission for non-students will be $1 and students 50¢. Proceeds will go to the Massachusetts Varsity "M" Club, which is composed of UMass Alumni.

Frosh Win First Football Game

By AL RICE

It took a long time for the UMass freshman football team to get untracked this season—three games and three quarters of their fourth—but the Little Redmen came up with 13 points in the final period at New Hampshire Saturday to record their only win with a 13-0 whitewashing of the Wildcats.

The game was played on the muddy UNH freshman field in a steady drizzle. Neither team was able to move well until late in the game. The first quarter and most of the second was played between the midfield stripe and the UNH 30 with neither team picking up more than one first down per drive.

THE REDMEN got the first good march underway in the second period. Bruce Cochran picked up a first down with a 12 yard run. A short pass from Ronn Collin to Jeff King plus ground plays by King and Mike McArdle netted another. Tim Schmitt blasted through the right side of the UNH line for the third first down, but a penalty, a loss by Schmitt, and an incompleteness killed the drive.

Two passes and a pitchout then put UNH in field goal range but the kick was blocked and Schmitt ran it back to his own 25. Three plays and three penalties later the half ended.

THE THIRD period began as slowly as the second period. The two teams exchanged punts three times before the quarter ran out with UMass in possession at the UNH 30. Two plays later Collin found his right end Paul Vaccaro open on the 10 yard line and completed a pass that gave UM a 6-0 lead. Cochran was stopped just short of the goal line on a sweep trying for the two point conversion.

The Redmen had a golden opportunity three plays later when

Intramural Report: Courtesy Loses; Bowling Begins

By DAVE JARNES

Perhaps UNH fielded the wrong football team against UMass on Saturday, but at any rate the Courtesy Taxis were unable to find the Commuters from Durham as entertaining as the Taxis were blanked 12-0 in a defensive battle.

With all due respect to the undefeated champions from the north, three factors greatly hindered the Taxis. First, New Hampshire plays nine man football. Since the Taxis used only a seven man squad in winning the UMass title, this presented certain problems.

Secondly, at UNH the teams are given five downs to make a touchdown while at UMass they must go fifteen yards to make a first down. The Taxi offense is designed to capitalize on the short passing game. At Durham they had to revamp their offense since no first downs were given.

Third, the dim lighting made the ball difficult to see for the receivers. This may sound like sour grapes, but the UNH champs who came here last year and were beaten 40-0 by KS probably were equally disturbed about playing under different rules.

THE FRATERNITIES initiated the bowling league with the well-balanced TEP team sweeping 8 points from SAM. PSD and QTV took 6 of 8 from LCA and SPE respectively. AEP split 4-4 with KS. PMD beat ASP 8-0, TKE beat ATG 8-0, and BKP won by forfeit over PSK. PSD's Rick Fortier's 558 was the high for the night. A poor second game cost Rick a chance for a 600 series.

REMEMBER, handball entries must be in by tomorrow, the 18th, and basketball entries must be in by Friday, the 19th.

EXPANSION PROMPTS PROPOSAL

GREEKS ON THE MOVE?

(Reprinted from Amherst Record)

By ANN MILLER

Plans were announced at UMass Tuesday by a fraternity advisors' group representative, to urge locating UM fraternities and sororities in Hadley.

If the plan succeeds, representative Robert W. Gailey said, it would mean about $100,000 in tax monies yearly for Hadley.

Gailey, a placement officer at UM and advisor to QTV fraternity, said the move was being considered because of high land evaluation of house sites in Amherst and restrictions on growth of the houses' physical facilities.

Gailey said a number of UM fraternities have been studying the problems involved in expanding their houses in Amherst for several years. He has worked on the problem for TKE, he said.

One house, he said, AEPi fraternity, recently received a blank check from its national supporting organization to solve its expansion problems.

AEPi obtained an option of 38 acres of land on Rt. 116 in Hadley, near Zayre's and across from the new UM football stadium. This is the land being studied by the fraternity group.

The GROUP working on the project, Gailey said, included fraternity, faculty or administration advisors. They have been meeting and working actively on the project since Oct. 8 of this year.

Many houses are faced with this same problem, Gailey said, of high property taxation in Amherst. For some of the newer houses, taxes are as high as $8,000.

The answer, he said, appears to be for the houses to seek land elsewhere as a group. UM has 16 fraternities and nine sororities.

When AEPi received national backing to take the option on the land in Hadley, Gailey said, they came to this group wondering if other houses would be interested in sharing the option.

THE 38 ACRES in Hadley, Gailey said, is valued at over $200,000.

The group is now seeking to get other fraternities and sororities committed to moving.

Cost of the land in Hadley would be about $15,000 for each house, Gailey estimated; this would include an acre and a half of land. The same land on the present "fraternity row" on N. Pleasant St., he said, went for

A FREE AND RESPONSIBLE PRESS

VOL. XCIV, NO. 30

UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS, FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 19, 1965

Phi Kappa Phi Initiates Hear Dr. Alvin Ryan

By PETE HENRICKSON,
Editor-in-Chief

A UMass-Boston scholar Wednesday night warned UMass Amherst scholars of the danger in seeking academic isolationism in their social communities.

Dr. Alvan S. Ryan, head of humanities at UMB, addressed 40 initiates of Phi Kappa Phi in Skinner Auditorium after they received pins from Dean Fred P. Jeffery, Dr. Richard Foley and Dean Edward C. Moore.

The former right end who graduated Cum Laude here in 1934 and taught 19 years at Notre Dame asked the students to what extent the aims of a scholar are private and personal in a world of increasing social demands.

HE CAUTIONED gauging personal success by the goals of society-at-large and warned that the climb up the ladder is sometimes "primitive and parasitic." "There are sneaky people in academic life, as everywhere," he said.

"The best service to society is an uneasy dialogue with the many segments . . . but not a compulsive joining just to keep the body in motion," he advised.

"We must go beyond the alienation of unchecked isolationism with the segregation of the individual and the equally blind acceptance of the status quo," he counseled.

Addressing himself to current problems, he praised Pope John XXIII, Dr. Martin Luther King, Adlai Stevenson and Eleanor Roosevelt as representative of those willing to take stands that may be unpopular. "Conflicts and tensions are inevitable," he said, "but we must abandon the ulcerous middle way."

He pointed to students who initiated the civil rights movement and said we must extend educational opportunities to fellow citizens who have been denied them. Faculty, staff and students at UMB are supporting the exodus of Negro school children to better schools and Ryan called for help from students here.

QUOTING ROBERT PENN WARREN, he said, "Through the pain of isolation we can envisage the pain and pathos of life and knowing that others, too, are suffering we can return to the community."

Two achievements at UMass-Amherst were singled out by the slender, graying teacher as representative of steps taken to avoid academic isolationism:

The Massachusetts Review has reached beyond the environs of the school and the Orchard Hill Complex with resident professors has "at least kept students and faculty within shouting distance," he said.

"Whenever you bring yourself to an organization bring your critical mind with you and participate fully but know when to say no," he said, reminding the students that they are too valuable to waste themselves flitting from group to group.

Vice-President Karen Garvin Resigns Senate Unexpectedly

By LINDA PERLSTEIN, Senior Reporter

Five major issues were brought up on the Senate floor last Wednesday night. Under the order of announcements, Pres. Richard Dacey read the resignations of two Senators.

The first was the surprise resignation of Vice-Pres Karen Garvin. Commenting on her resignation, Dacey said "This will be a great loss to my personal staff and to the Senate as a whole." The other resignation was that of Sen. Richard Lavorgna, Fraternities.

Also under the order of announcements, Dacey, continuing his policy of revamping the Senate, spent approximately an hour listing ten changes he expects to bring about.

University Probe Proposed by Legis.

A five-member house committee to investigate any participation by UMass faculty or students in the Viet Nam protest demonstration at Fort Devens on Veteran's Day was proposed last week on the floor of the Massachusetts House of Representatives.

Represent George H. O'Farrell, (D-Malden), who offered the order and asked the suspension of rules to admit it, told house members that last Friday he was asked by a newspaper if he (O'Farrell) was aware that "certain members of the faculty and certain students demonstrated against U.S. Policy in Viet Nam."

O'Farrell went on to say that because Massachusetts tax payers pay $1,000 per year to subsidize the education of those attending UMass, they feel we should take appropriate action. He also stated that he was informed that an Arizona car with UMass decals and four other UMass cars were in the demonstration.

Photographs taken by the Justice Dept. and Counter Intelligence Corps during the demonstration would be made available to his recommendation committee, O'Farrell said. Suspension of the rules which would permit the investigation, was opposed by majority floor leader, representative

BELLOTTI TO SPEAK

Francis X. Bellotti, prominent Massachusetts politician, will appear at the Middlesex and Nantucket Rooms of the Student Union Monday, November 22, at 8 p.m. After the lecture there will be a coffee hour in the Colonial Lounge.

Sponsored by the Political Science Association, Bellotti will speak on Massachusetts politics.

Bellotti has long been a distinguished attorney in the Boston area. He served as Lieutenant Governor under Gov. Peabody from 1962-1964. He surprised the public by running for governor against his political superior, the governor in the September, 1964 primary. Winning the nomination, Bellotti lost the final election to his Republican opponent, John Volpe.

This prominent figure is well

qualified to speak on the changing trends in Massachusetts politics, and the current internal crisis in the state Democratic party.

The changes include: 12 or 13 Senators to meet with him before each meeting in order to establish better rapport, bi-weekly oral as well as written reports from the Committee Chairmen to replace the present Monthly Committee Reports; information sheets for every Senator to help the President know what special interests each Senator might have.

Schedules will also be required of each Senator; post-meeting sessions with at least the officers to discuss the procedure of the Senate meeting the previous night; an assistant for the Secretary, Judy Greene (Southwest A) to help her with the heavy workload; a computerized list

Co-op Project Started To Train College Teachers

The Community Colleges of Massachusetts and the University of Massachusetts are beginning a cooperative project in the training of new teachers for two-year colleges. This project has been under discussion between the Community College Presidents and representatives of the University School of Education for some time. It was finally agreed to use a variation of the Master of Arts in Teaching Degree as the vehicle for the new program, the major aspects of which are as follows:

(1) School of Education recruits possible candidates from its undergraduate senior class or from other sources. The Presidents then select from this group the students their particular institution is to sponsor.

The students then spend one calendar year on the University campus in course work of which approximately twenty-four credits will be in the teaching field and twelve in Education.

(3) The students then spend one year at their particular sponsoring institution in an internship-teaching a two-third load for a two-third instructor's salary. During this time they will be supervised by a staff from the Community College and from the University who will also conduct a seminar for the students.

(4) If the student is successful in all of this he will receive a Master of Arts in Teaching Degree and usually an appointment in his sponsoring institution.

Students who are interested in this program should consult with Dean Purvis, School of Education. Applications for the program should be received before February 1 in any year.

INDEX SPEAKS

A great many Seniors did not turn in completed statistics sheets of college activities when their Senior pictures were taken. These people are requested to return them immediately to the Index office or this information cannot be included in the yearbook.

A representative from Lincoln Studios will be at the Index Office on Monday and Tuesday, November 22 and 23, and he will take orders for pictures and record which photograph you would like to have appear in the Index. Those scheduled to return their proofs on the 22nd and 23rd may do so on either day.

However, any Senior who is scheduled for a later date should wait until the week of November 29 thru December 3, when a representative will again be on campus to take orders.

Precisionettes

U.N.H. Fans Pleased With Drill Team Show

A steady drizzle and a muddy field failed to dampen the spirits of the UMass Precisionettes as they performed at the UMass-U.N.H. game last Saturday. In their last performance of the 1965 football season, the Precisionettes displayed their usual excellent form for the fourth time at a football game. The team was cordially welcomed to the Durham campus by a great number of hardy fans. Marching at half-time as well as before the game, the twenty-four unit team displayed skill and style in their intricate and delightful routines.

The highlights of the fine performance were an M-formation and salute to the UMass fans. A line formation and a ripple salute, executed with perfect timing, pleased the Wildcat fans.

The Precisionettes left for New Hampshire on Friday afternoon and returned to campus on Saturday evening. Due to the illness of Suzanne Wanczyk, acting Commander of the performance was Sandra Vaughn. Bernard Cabral is drillmaster of the team, with David Knowlton assisting. Capt. and Mrs. Bruce Nilsson chaperoned the girls on their overnight trip.

INVESTIGATION...

tive Robert H. Quinn of Boston, and Sidney Q. Curtiss of Sheffield, minority leader.

In opposing suspension of the rules, Representative Quinn said "There is a vast difference between positive action in supporting U.S. policy in Viet Nam and the positive suppression of any dispute concerning that action. The constitutional principle is the right of a citizen to speak out loud whether he is a member of the faculty at Boston College or U.M.; whether he is a student or a worker at the Waldorf Cafeteria."

Quinn concluded by saying "leave the conduct of U.M. to the University; leave the conduct of the war in Viet Nam to the Chief Executive." In his remarks from the floor, Representative Curtis said he doubts "if the trustees could or should control the speech of students at UMass and concluded that it was ridiculous to say that "students at private Universities can do as they please, but those attending UMass should be regulated regarding their right of free speech."

Drive Ends Sunday To Aid Strikes

The drive to send food, clothing, and financial support to Mississippi Freedom Labor Union strikers sponsored by the Four College Friends of S.N.C.C. (Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee) will end November 21.

The purpose of the drive in the greater Amherst area is to support approximately 800 cotton pickers and truck drivers in the Mississippi Delta who are on strike to secure a minimum wage, health and accident insurance, and equal employment practices in wage, hiring, and working conditions.

There has been no minimum wage law established as yet and these workers had been getting $2.50 to $3.50 for ten hours a day.

Since working in the cotton fields is the chief source of income for Negroes in these areas in the summer and fall of the year, the striking members are in need of food, clothing and money.

If you have any contributions contact Elaine Faro, Southwest A and arrangements will be made to pick them up.

FRATERNITIES...

$80-100,000.

"I think we have about seven houses interested in the move now," he said. "We hope to have 20."

Total project cost, with 20 houses involved, he said, would be about $5-6 million.

It would mean an expansion of the Greek system on the University campus, he said.

THE DISTANCE problem would not be as great as it appears, he said. Eventually, UM will be a pedestrian campus, with some kind of shuttle bus service carrying persons on campus. The proposed Fraternal Park would only be one mile and a tenth from the to-be-constructed administration building on the southwest side of campus.

At a Nov. 9 meeting of the group, he said, chairman of the University's master planning committee Robert Kleis and Amherst Planning Board chairman Paul Procopio, were both present.

Actively promoting the project, he said, are UMass Fraternity Managers Assoc. head George Rogers; Gilbert Holland of Springfield, representing AEP's financial arrangements, and himself as chairman of the fraternity advisors group.

A meeting is set for Tue., Nov.

22 to continue work on the project.

Gailey spoke Tuesday evening to the Hadley board of selectmen, advising them of the plans in the works for Fraternal Park.

The land on option in Hadley is industrially zoned, he said, presently has no water or sewerage lines.

The project, he emphasized, is still in the talking stages. "We'd like to stay in Amherst," he said, "if there were a feasible way to do it."

POLITELLA URGES SCRUTINY OF CAMPUS PUBLICATIONS

By RICHARD DANCA,
Day Editor

"It bothers me that student government on many campuses, including our own, is involved in campus publications, and I think this warrants some close scrutiny," Dr. Dario Politella, assistant professor in journalism studies at UMass, told a journalism seminar Wednesday.

To avoid what he called a "clear and present danger" in this involvement through student taxes, he called for establishment of a "regulatory agency" to coordinate all campus communications media.

He also indicated his idea would facilitate arrangements for a daily newspaper and campus television station which future UMass enrollment of 20,000 would require.

This agency would be separate from both Student and Faculty Senates and would comprise a four-two-one ratio of students:faculty and administration, he said.

Each of the campus communications media — publications and broadcasting — would also be represented by its chief executive, who could vote on matters concerning his publication. In addition, the agency would contain a non-voting professional "coordinator of student communications media," Dr. Politella said.

The functions of the committee would be:

- To approve staff selections
- To supervise money and approve budgets
- To help establish procedures and
- To help decide on constitutions.

As an example of establishing procedures, Dr. Politella suggested deciding the "moral position" The Collegian should take in accepting ads for alcoholic beverages, patent medicines and barbiturates.

A controversy arose between Dr. Politella and several students over the agency's power in approving staff selections.

The students felt too much power would result in possible virtual censorship or, as one student said, "override the constitutions it was supposed to strengthen."

Dr. Politella said the question was premature since his primary interest now is to get approval of the general idea and the "powers can be decided later."

He also said that, with the structure he has recommended, the power rests with the students in the four-two-one ratio and votes for editors and station managers.

Funds for the publications, he proposed, would come from a special tax added to each student's semester bill, and not from the Student Senate as they do now.

This would, he said, remove any chance of control from any government at the University.

He said a precedent exists in the present student-faculty Fine Arts Committee which is directly answerable to neither senate and will collect funds through a separate compulsory student tax.

Concert Association

N. Y. Pro Musica

To Appear Monday

The University of Massachusetts Concert Association's third offering this season will be the appearance of a unique chamber ensemble from New York, specializing in Medieval, Renaissance and Baroque music.

The New York Pro Musica, 11 vocalists and instrumentalists, will present the program Monday, Nov. 22, at 8 p.m. in the Student Union.

Founded in 1952 under the direction of Noah Greenberg, Pro Musica has performed its unique programs in some of the most outstanding music centers in America, including Tanglewood; the Cloisters and the Philharmonic Hall in New York City; the Detroit Museum of Art, and the Library of Congress in Washington, D.C.

A distinctive feature of Pro Musica concerts is the instrumental accompaniment of the six vocalists on a variety of rare and authentic instruments, including a harpsichord, a viola da gamba, and a series of recorders.

Under the direction of Greenberg, the group has accumulated an extensive repertoire of religious and secular music spanning the centuries from 1200 to 1700. The works of Palestrina, Monteverdi, Purcell and others have become the subjects of programs which have been hailed by many of the nation's leading music critics.

One of the group's more noteworthy achievements was its presentation in 1960 of "The Play of Daniel,"—an opera not performed anywhere since it was written in France in the Thirteenth Century. After a highly successful American season, the opera was well received on an extended European tour.

Tickets for the concert will be on sale at the Student Union, the evening of the performance.

SENATE...

of Freshmen interested in Student Government will be used to augment Senate committees; an open-door policy concerning grievances; and specific duties for committee chairmen.

Sen. Richard Moriarty, Chairman of the Public Relations Committee, ran down the outline of the Student Government Conference to be held this weekend. He urged all the Senators to take part in every aspect of the conference for its success.

The next major issue coming under New Business was the bills brought out of Finance Committee on dormitory constitutions and budgeting. Finance Committee Chairman James Allen, in introducing S24 and S25 stated that it was the feeling of the committee that there should be "some way of assuring the dormitories do have democratic elections." Those who opposed the bill seemed to feel that the dormitories should not be forced into becoming RSO organizations.

The Medical School issue was also revived in a bill brought to the floor by Sen. Benezra and Gurwitz. The bill stated that "the secretary of the Student Senate send a letter to the Mass. Taxpayers' Committee for Quality Medical Education. This letter to state that the Student Senate of the University of Mass. fully supports the position taken by said committee and wishes to offer this committee all the aid at its disposal." The bill was passed by a roll-call vote of 33-4.

What might have been the most debated bill of the evening, one calling for replacement of the present student senate executive council of committee chairman and replacing it with presidential-appointed members, was tabled for another week, because of the added amendments.

The last bill under new business was a bill recommending to the Administration that counselor evaluations of a student be made available to the evaluated student. The bill was tabled to Mens Affairs Committee by one of its proponents Sen. Mike Gorjian.

Two other bills repealing previous bills were passed and one on senior SWAP delegates.

The Senate voted to hold its next week's meeting on Monday night due to the upcoming holiday. The meeting ended with a motion by Sen. Bombardier and Allen to extend gratitude to Karen Garvin for her work in the Senate for the past three years; the motion passed unanimously.

Proposal Disposed Of

Following the Fort Devens Protest Demonstration against the United States policy in Vietnam, Massachusetts Representative George O'Farrell (Dem. Malden) presented before the House a bill to inquire into the participation by UMass students and faculty members in this demonstration. In his bill he proposed that those participants be suspended for their actions, because in his opinion Massachusetts taxpayers should not finance people who oppose U.S. policy.

In this issue Rep. O'Farrell has lost sight of his position as an elected member of a governing body; the value of which lies in utilizing the legal right to dissent, criticize, and evaluate. These legal rights which the House of Representatives implements every day, Rep. O'Farrell has proposed to eliminate at the largest public institution of learning in the state. His proposal is not simply one of saving taxpayer's money, but in fact he advocates the suppression of public opinion.

Perhaps this is what the people whom he represents want, but perhaps they do not comprehend the magnitude of this proposal. When the governing body of the United States begins to suppress public opinion through legitimate institution of laws, then the reason for representative government and man's right to dissent becomes meaningless.

Representative government is effective because it provides for a continual evaluation of policies by permitting discussion and evaluation. It implies, however, that citizens possess the right to participate individually in seeking the policies which they believe to best protect the interests of the majority.

New Light on Darkness

According to an old adage, nothing is all black or all white. Yet during last week's blackout much of UMass found itself somewhat slightly darker than gray. While it was inevitable that the University should lose its power, the fact remains that many dormitories and buildings were in complete darkness due to a lack of emergency lighting. The students in those dorms undoubtedly have justification for the criticisms they leveled at the University, but it would be interesting to ascertain how many of them investigated the situation thoroughly and reviewed the facts objectively.

It should be noted that all new buildings are equipped with either auxiliary or emergency lighting which worked quite well during the power failure. The only exception was South Commons, where an unforeseen malfunction in a switching unit caused the load transfer to fail. Those buildings without such lights were constructed before emergency lighting became a part of standard building practices.

But the most important fact—one not widely known—is that the University had already initiated a survey of emergency and auxiliary lighting well before last week's failure. Therefore, we must concede that the blackout did not point out a deficiency in the present system due to negligence; rather it added emphasis to the need for improvement, and, we hope, impetus to this improvement.

Investigate, By All Means

The Student Senate Ad Hoc committee studying the UMass grading system has completed its six month survey of student, faculty and administration opinion of the 4.0 grading system. The release of its findings, purely tabular information indicating the dissatisfactions with and the inadequacies of the present system, has been met with a wave of reactionary criticism.

There are those who wish the Senators would take care to walk slowly, when, in fact, they have yet to take a step.

The grading survey was in the form of a poll, in which the opinions of all sectors of the University community were solicited. Statistically undisputable, the poll records general student, faculty, and administrative dissatisfaction with the present grading system at UMass.

The polemics of the University's grading system are yet to be debated. However, with a majority dissatisfaction clearly evident, debate we must.

For the Senate to suggest changing the system without proper investigation would be admittedly unjust. But failure to fully investigate this course of combined dissatisfaction would be, more seriously, an injustice.

A Notice of Thanks

To the Editor

On behalf of the Campus Religious Council, I would like to take this opportunity to thank the many people who helped to make this year's drive so successful.

Special thanks go to Mrs. Harold Watts and to Mrs. J. Henry Korson, who co-ordinated and directed over one hundred volunteer women, to the University Women as a whole for their co-operation and financial support, and to the Student Union officials and staff for their invaluable assistance.

To the brothers of Alpha Phi Omega, the sisters of Gamma Sigma Sigma, and the large number of students who worked as hostesses and aids at the collection station, my thanks are extended.

The house mothers kindly co-operation in aiding us is greatly appreciated. The Inter-Fraternity Council and the Dormitory Councilors working with their house councils should be commended for the enthusiasm and efficiency with which they responded to the needs of the Blood Drive.

To the Collegian and WMUA, a hearty thanks for a job well done, the drive's success depended to a large extent on the willing help and co-operation you gave us.

And finally, I would like to thank the approximately 1,000 students who volunteered to give blood.

That Dirty War

To the Editor

The naivete of the people who have written to the Collegian to condemn the war in Vietnam has reached its apogee with Jane Roland's letter, "Is Murder and Torture The American Way?". One has to answer that question with a loud, Yes, when we are at war. It is the only way. Torture, burning or bombing of villages, and worse, are all part of the business of war.

Is there "an immoral war in Vietnam"? Of course! When has there been a moral one? Perhaps the Crusades?

"Inhumane actions"? Certainly, but sometimes the dog catcher is inhumane. I can hear the united voices of the myopically trustful yelling now: "That still doesn't make it right." Maybe, but the point that I am trying to make is that to argue against this war, any war, on moral grounds is assinine. It is a fact that people get killed and people get wounded in a war. The President and Congress know this when they commit our country, the soldier knows it when he picks up his rifle—and the world knows it too. So why are we fighting? Well, the stock answer is, "for freedom", and for want of space that is the one I will give here. I think it is worth waging a war and, suffering all that goes with that war to assure our country's freedom. The dirty war in Vietnam is, to my mind, a justifiable means to a much desired end. This is what I consider important, the worth of the war and who wins it, not how it is fought.

For a change let's hear some good, practical, pragmatic reasons why we should get out of Vietnam (if there are any). Those moral reasons that pop up in the Collegian are untenable and unrealistic as there are immoral people like me and 500 million Communists banging around—sometimes with immoral machine guns and inhumane hand grenades.

Alienate from the Majority

To the Editor

To be most effective in altering or changing the values and views of a group or society, one must be within the group or society. Differences lead to generalized alienation, and this quite obviously leads to a loss of communication and effectiveness.

America has long been a land which is not as deeply concerned with world problems as it should be, on a localized scale. It tends to ostracize and repudiate those among its composition who, for many and any number of reasons, are different.

Given this, what some people call, weakness of America, those who demonstrate for or support a policy contrary to that of our government, which is in keeping with the country's majority views, while in a capacity of visual differentiation, i.e., unshaven, poorly-dressed, long-haired, sandals, dirty, and picketing, are running against the American grain of behavior in reference to "foreign elements". These people, in other words, because they do, and wish to, stand out, tend to be alienated from the vast majority of Americans whom they are trying to convince. The demonstrators are, in this sense, defeating their own purpose.

With shaves and slight conformity to compensate for America's "weaknesses" these people would be able to re-enter the society as a whole and therefore effect persuasion which would be more readily listened to. Are these different people really outcasts? If so, then of whose choosing? Remember—alienation does not lead to dissemination, and, if you believe in your position, why not spread it more effectively—that is your purpose for demonstrating; isn't it?

"Separation of Sex and State"

To the Editor:

Mop pails of praise for Georgios Pan Piperopoulos! He did a great service to the female population of today's college campuses — particularly of UMass — by reaffirming what we'd all been wanting to hear: the law that prohibits sexual relations before marriage is an unwritten one. Thanks be to God! We haven't been violating the United States Constitution after all!

I'm one of those rare souls who chose Bennington College instead of UMass, but I'm sure you've already guessed that, haven't you, you clever Yorgi, you? Goodness knows it's one thing to speak out when you're one individual of 350 individuals but quite another when you're number 594638 on an identification card that lets you get lunch. But that's an insignificant matter, I suppose. After all is said and done, we women have a couple of common factors whether we go to UMass or Bennington. And who should know better than does Georgios exactly what those common factors are? (Beware of Greeks bearing gifts, ladies.)

WHEN WE COME TO COLLEGE, most of us girls have barely eighteen years, innocent, untainted years of life to our credit. It is highly commendable that the University would take over the job of being a mother to several thousand girls by issuing a declaration that the newly-arrived crop of potential male-attractors shall be in no later than eight o'clock week nights for the first six weeks. And for all four years of her life at UMass, assuming she is bright enough to submit for only four years, Katie UMass is driven by the school to morality and self-discipline.

Now for all of you who are interested, and I'll bet there are more of you than dare to admit it when the ominous figure of the sacred Housemother is nearby, there are people who go to college mature enough to live their own lives. I know you find that difficult to believe since you've never had the opportunity to give it a try, but it's absolutely true.

THOSE PEOPLE WHO REALIZE that they have a certain innate ability — usually termed "mature self-control"—are not superhuman. They understand that they deserve some rights in abolishing meaningless rules, amending potentially-good-but-presently-bad rules, and adopting much-needed, new, practical rules. And one of those rules, Georgie Baby, is curfew.

If your parents don't trust that they have raised you to be a responsible adult, I maintain that they should never under any circumstances let you out of their sight. It could be disastrous. But if they trust you enough to send you to college—or at least to allow you to go—they should not expect the school to hover over you every minute like an old mother hen or a housemother.

AND, GEORGIOS PIPEROPOULOS, "there is such a thing as 'love' which can justify" breaking some of your rules. If you had ever had the good fortune to be in love with someone who loved you in return, you'd know that you want to be with that person as long as you can. You can't turn off love at 12:00 outside her front door.

SEXUAL MORALS ARE, and always should be, a personal matter. A girl must decide for herself what her attitude towards sex is to be, but that is a direct product of the way her parents have raised her. The strictest parents, as much as the most lenient, are apt to find themselves with a daughter who's an "easy make". But this is no concern of the College! The political platform at UMass should be a separation of sex and state. A curfew isn't helping the situation at all, so of what good is it? If a student has self-discipline, she knows that she can't stay out all night every night and get her work done for class. And if she doesn't get any studying done, she'll soon flunk out. She doesn't belong at college in the first place if she doesn't have self-discipline, as she'll soon find out, and she'd better develop a little strength of character before she tries college life again. On the other hand, the student who knows herself and her capacities for studying and is really interested in her education will see to it that she puts adequate time into her studies and will be a success at college. This is the type of person who belongs there.

She deserves to be allowed to stay out all night or at least as late as she likes whenever she wants to. She doesn't need a housemother to see that she doesn't sneak in after curfew. And one large pat on the back to the girl who can stay out all night and still pull A's! She has so much brain that she doesn't need self-discipline, and she probably outsmarted her housemother long ago and has been out every night anyhow.

IF PART OF the University's reason for imposing a curfew on girls is the fear that they will be attacked or molested, let me point out that there is no earthly reason that they couldn't be attacked before midnight. You do have campus police, and Amherst College isn't known to have too many uncontrollable, habitual sex-offenders who rush to UMass in the hopes of attacking a girl. And if this is not part of the reason for curfew, why don't the boys have a curfew also or instead?

Well, those are just a few thoughts and questions for you from one who lives in a more liberal situation than you do. Georgie dear, one final wish for you: May you marry a sober virgin and never lose your draft card and thus enjoy eternal bliss.

"Unusually Talented Group"

A Guest Review
by Bandmaster John Jenkins
"In order to evaluate musically this concert it must be remembered that the primary mission of the U.S. Army Band is to entertain and excite the public with a variety of types of music primarily popular in nature.

Thus although this band includes in its membership an unusually talented group of instrumentalists, it makes no attempt to elevate musical standards by playing serious band music.

"The fact that last night's program consisted primarily of lighter music did not detract from the enthusiasm which this large audience demonstrated. The evening was a rousing success for the Band and for the Military Department on campus, and it is a tribute to the long-standing reputation of the Army Band that the Curry Hicks Cage was packed almost to capacity.

"It would seem that such an outstanding group of performers could be better challenged musically if some more serious literature were included on their programs. Especially lacking were selections from the contemporary original works for symphony band.

This image presented by the Army Band could and will become one of quality and outstanding musicianship, without causing the band to lose its popular appeal.

American students have come of age musically. Although they will never cease to appreciate a well played march or a familiar light classic, they nonetheless can be depended upon to enjoy more serious musical fare."

Band Draws Rainy Crowd

Despite wind and cold, some 3,000 music lovers jammed Curry Hicks Cage to near capacity to hear the United States Army band. The band played overtures, marches, pop and jazz selections.

The presentation was sponsored by the Cadets of the Army ROTC Brigade, The Colonel's Cadre, Grenadier Drill Team and the members of Company "B".

"The Martyred"—A Loving Testimonial To Mankind

By Nancy Abrams

The Martyred is an excellent example of how one can combine theater techniques with philosophical truths. The result of this fusion is an absorbing, fast-paced production that never bores.

Cosmo Catalano's direction is most effective. The large cast expertly navigates itself around the stage and changes the scenery in full view of the audience with the precision of the Rockettes.

The visual effects, especially the execution of the ministers and the bombing of the city, produce spine-tingling sensations.

Much of the success of the production can be attributed to the acting ability of the three leading characters. Francois - Regis Klanfer gives a sensitive portrayal of Capt. Lee, a young intellectual serving as an intelligence officer in the So. Korean Army. His acceptance of reality and his disgrading of truth as an answer to all problems forms much of the plot. Pat. Freni as Col. Chang, Lee's superior, manages to combine the hardboiledness of a professional army man with great compassion for his idealistic assistant.

Leslie Titcomb, as Mr. Shin, a true pastor who lives for his congregation and not himself, projects the perfect image of a saint. He is at his best when giving his sermon to the people, every word of which is a lie. In fact, the sermon scene is probably the high point of the play.

While one can easily be dazzled by the acting and direction, the play itself should not go unnoticed. Richard Greenbaum has created a tightly - knit, completely believable script with eloquent yet simple dialogue.

The Martyred is a serious drama that leaves one with a lot to ponder. However, it is not a sad play. Rather, it is a loving testimonial to Mankind. Tossed about by the great forces of state and religion, fed propaganda instead of truth, Man survives all horrors. The Martyred is a moving experience and highly recommended.

Singin' Out

The University Chorale will give a demonstration of choral technique, Nov. 21 at 3:00 p.m., in Memorial Hall, including the importance of breathing properly and the necessity of good posture. The Chorale will also demonstrate the intricacies of capella singing—without accompaniment.

The Chorale will also preview their Christmas Concert by singing a few of the program's numbers. A reception for the Music Department, parents and friends will be held after the sing.

Amherst Hosts LSD Pioneer

by GERRI COTE
Feature Staff

Johnson Chapel at Amherst College was filled with a capacity crowd on Wednesday, November 10, from the four colleges for a lecture entitled, "The Social Implications of the Psychedelic Experience."

Timothy Leary, the guest speaker, was involved in the Harvard drug scandal of a few years ago, and since his dismissal from Harvard he has continued his investigations on the use of drugs for the purpose of expanding consciousness. He is currently working with a colony of poets and artists, investigating the effect of the drug on their creations.

LEARY BEGAN by defining the psychedelic experience as the experience of "going out of your mind." His studies and investigations of the past few years have been on the effects of L.S.D., which is a consciousness-expanding drug of enormous energy that acts upon the nervous system. Leary said that those who indulge or would like to indulge in the use of the drug fall into three general categories.

The first of these is composed of people who think there is more to life than that which is apparent in their normal state of consciousness.

THE SECOND GROUP is composed of people who have no idea of other levels of consciousness, but are using the drug in an attempt to escape from the unpleasant reality which their lives have become.

Thirdly, Leary finds that young people are especially eager to try the drug, and offers as explanation the fact that young people are not frightened by the unknown, and are always anxious for new experiences.

Leary repeatedly stressed that the psychedelic experience is by no means an escape, and that instead of helping those with problems, it would only serve to intensify and magnify already existing problems.

Leary next tried to describe the effect of the drug on the individual. It is almost impossible, he said, for one who has had the experience to describe it to one who has not. There are no concepts that can be used to describe it, because under the influence of the drug, there is nothing you look at that you have ever seen before. It is like the jungle native trying to describe to a fellow tribesman what he saw in the middle of New York City.

ACCORDING TO LEARY, three characteristics of the psychedelic experience are the following: first, an acceleration of thinking and imagery—you are bombarded with thoughts, ideas, and images, and are unable to concentrate on any one thought at a time; second is a multiplication of realities, and third, an intensification of sensory awareness. (Sexual awareness, thought not sexual behavior, increases.)

ferent experiences. Sometimes the environment may have implications on the effect of the drug. Set, that is, a preparedness to react in a particular way, is also important. He described one group of subjects who had prepared for the drug by Metzner and Alpert, have for an entire day by prayer and meditation. After the session, 90% described the effect as the deepest religious experience of their lives.

Yeary and his colleagues, not formed an organization in conjunction with their investigations, the International Foundation for Internal Freedom (IIF), which puts out the Psychedelic Review.

Now! New Chevelle SS 396 by Chevrolet

New '66 Chevelle SS 396 Convertible and Sport Coupe.

Equipped with a Turbo-Jet 396 V8, special suspension and red stripe tires.

These cars weren't meant for the driver who is willing to settle for frills.

They're engineered from the chassis on up as no-compromise road machines.

Standard output of the new Turbo-Jet 396 V8—which powers both models—is 325 hp. This remarkably efficient power plant is also available in a 360-hp version.

So much for what happens on straightaways. How about curves? You ride on a special SS 396 chassis—with flat-cornering suspension and wide-base wheels.

A fully synchronized 3-speed transmission is standard. Or you can order a 4-speed or Powerglide—also Strato-bucket front seats, center console and full instrumentation.

Sound like a car you could get serious over? That, as you'll see at your dealer's, is precisely how Chevrolet engineers planned it. Seriously.

Greenbaum's play

By Lois Cohen, Associate Feature Editor

The Trailways Bus pulled up to the front of the Lord Jeff, and discharged a single passenger. Director of Theatre, Cosmo A. Catalano, walked directly to him and said, "As a sociologist, you make a pretty good playwright!"

No, he hasn't lost his job in the sociology department, and he didn't punch professor Catalano in the nose. The passenger was none other than Richard Greenbaum, playwright of the University Theatre's second production of the season—The Martyred.

ALTHOUGH HE HAS TAUGHT at both Harvard and N.Y.U., Mr. Greenbaum is now committed primarily to writing. Not limiting himself strictly to the dramatic form, he is the author of many poems, short stories, and articles. Scheduled for publication next year is a critical study of American drama and society since 1920.

Currently he is working on several original plays, a group of short stories, and a novel, The Martyred, his most recent work.

Mr. Richard Kim, author of the novel, The Martyred, has as detached as possible a production based on his book.

He says the play has moved from his original interpretation into its own.

Richard Greenbaum's own interpretation into its own. And of course the actors' interpretation of the original story.

KIM'S ONLY REMARKS are: "The success of the play is upon the actors' character with human suffering and God."

Mr. Shin, (Leslie Titcomb) sole survivor of the execution of the Ministers tells his congregation the unpleasant details of his ordeal with the Reds.

Two leading townspeople debate whether or not to go right to Mr. Shin's house and question him concerning his release from the Reds.

Chaplain Koh and Capt. Lee discuss the problem of Mr. Shin.

"Unless you feel i

"This is a group effort—it depends intimately on the thoughts and emotions of each one of you!" Director Catalano sat down, and author Greenbaum stepped out of the darkened auditorium to address the five weary actors stretched across various portions of the set. "Unless you feel it in your gut," he said, "unless you make it a part of your very being, you will never even come close to a characterization!"

The five were silent, all deep within themselves. After a few minutes Titcomb rose and knelt before the cross. Stelzer strolled over to look at the rolling hills of Pyongyang through the lattice window. Klanfer and Freni hurried back to their office to finish up some pressing intelligence work, and Wilker went back to a clearing on the bank of the Taedong River to interrogate more Christian prisoners.

AND SO the rehearsal of the University of Massachusetts Theatre's production of The Martyred moved into high gear. Bearing the brunt of the persuasion is Francois-Regis Klanfer, a graduate student from Swampscott. Frank has a varied background of theater, having studied acting from Estragon in Waiting for Godot to Henry V. He has studied acting from James Forsythe, and was one of the original members of the Image Theatre.

Sharing the limelight is a graduate student, Pat Freni. Col. Chang Pat must portray complex characters in the play. Pat supervised the production, and finished up his work with a fine performance in Little Mary Sunshine.

OPPOSITE THESE two are Chaplain Koh and Peter Stelzer plays the part of a man who is trying to accomplish his military might. Peter studied in Springfield for many years in UT include: Oswald in Othello.

Since it is a "play of ideas", the actors will have to "try to first understand the problems" and then to project themselves into the characters they portray.

He believes the emotional range of the actors may not be broad enough, because of their youth and lack of such experience as the play contains, to enable them to fully grasp their parts.

Les Titcomb portrays a man who is forced to give hope to others, even though he cannot have that hope himself. Some of the many fine roles created by Titcomb include: Antony in Julius Caesar, Willie Stark in All The King's Men, and Paul Verral in Born Yesterday. Les is also a graduate student in Theatre Arts.

THE PORTRAYAL OF THE North Korean Major who performs the executions is handled by graduate student Larry Wilker. Wilker has the curious but interesting task of portraying a man fanatical in his beliefs, but masochistic in his means of bringing these beliefs to the fore. Long familiar to UT audiences, Larry first appeared in Doris Abramson's production of Volpone. He went on to create the roles of the Tempter-Knight in Murder In The Cathedral, Mr. Puffy in The Streets of New York, and Romulus in Romulus.

Major Jung (Larry Wilker) as the captured North Korean officer belittles the executed ministers and explains why he spared Mr. Shin.

Chaplain Koh (Peter Stelzer) argues with Col. Chang. Chaplain Koh thinks the Colonel is overstepping his moral rights by falsifying the real story of the murder of the ministers.

Col. Chang (Pat Freni) is the skeptical intelligence officer of Richard Greenbaum's play, "The Martyred."

Two Students Appear in District Court on Monday

By Cliff Snickers, Court Reporter

Michael Becker, a UMass freshman, and Gregory Erickson, a freshman at Holyoke Junior College, were charged with breaking and entering at Bradlees Department Store in Northampton in the nighttime, larceny, and possession of burglary tools. Erickson was also charged with illegal possession of a switchblade. Both pleaded innocent to all charges.

Appearing in District Court Monday, their cases were continued to Dec. 1 and they were released in $10,000 bail each.

Police gave the following account:

The store's alarm had sounded at 4:17 A.M. Police checked the scene and found nothing, but returned at 5 A.M. on a hunch, to find one of the youths crouched behind some barrels. He attempted to flee but stopped when police fired warning shots. A hook and ladder truck was called from the Fire Department and the second youth was discovered on the roof of the building.

The pair admitted visiting the store on Wednesday and Saturday nights to attempt the break but were discouraged by patrolling police.

They were found in possession of six rifles, ranging from 30/30 to .22 caliber. Both wore gloves and carried ski masks, a mallet and a pry bar.

12 Students To Send Their Blood to Vietnam

by SANDRA FAIMAN
Staff Reporter

Twelve students, mostly members of the Young Independents Organization at UMass, donated blood at the annual blood drive on Wednesday and requested that it be sent to Vietnam. Accompanying this donation, the YI organization presented their views with respect to the Vietnam War.

According to the Y. I. president, Sidney Finehirsh, the donation was a "symbolic act, the intention being to express support of human beings, and to declare that Y.I. did not support the present policy in Vietnam.

We hold no antipathy towards either the American soldiers or the Vietcong, but towards the policies which they both implement."

Preceding their donations to the blood drive, the Y.I. organization held a vigil outside the Student Union building. Statements concerning the donation of blood and the Y.I. policy statement on Vietnam were distributed.

Signs were carried calling for an end to the bombings and urging for negotiations. Also, signs which quoted Senator Robert F. Kennedy's recent declaration that he "would give blood to anyone who needs it," were also carried.

"La Dolce Vita" Comes To S. U. Ballroom Sunday Night

"La Dolce Vita," one of the most talked about and controversial European films in many years, will be shown at the Student Union ballroom on Sunday, November 21.

Directed by Federico Fellini and starring Marcello Mastroianni, the film is, in essence, an analysis of one side of contemporary Roman life told in a number of sequences through the experiences of a cynical, yet naive journalist. Director Fellini claims that "La Dolce Vita" puts a thermometer to a sick world," for it dissects and lays open a whole swath of society, exposing the decay and tragedy of over-civilization.

Following the film, there will be a coffee hour held in the Colonial Lounge with a discussion led by Father Charles Thoman S.J. on interpretations of the film. Father Thoman, who has been staying at the Newman Center while working on his Doctorate in Chemistry, has done research on "La Dolce Vita", and feels it to be a tragedy, similar in many respects to "Hamlet." He invites everyone who sees the film to the coffee hour to discuss this and other interpretations.

"La Dolce Vita" will begin at 7 p.m., and is the third in a series of foreign films sponsored by the Student Union Movie Committee.

Seventy Delegates At Student Gov. Conference

This weekend about 70 delegates from the various state schools will meet at UMass for a student government conference.

The conference centers around the five major areas concerned with student government. The areas are Student Senate or Council, Class Officers, Judiciary or Student Court, and the Campus Newspaper.

The delegates will attend a banquet tonight at which time Dr. John W. Ryan, chancellor at UMass Boston will deliver the keynote address.

On Saturday the conference will continue with a convocation of addresses by faculty, student and delegate representatives.

These speeches will concern five major areas—1) Relations between the Faculty Senate and Student Government, 2) Incentives and recognition for student leaders, 3) Student Government and the role and relationship of the campus newspaper, 4) Administrative control of Student Government—the degree of such control, and 5) Responsibility for the spending of student tax money.

The afternoon sessions of the conference will consist of workshop discussion sessions conducted by UMass student government leaders.

Dr. Noffsinger, coordinator of student activities at the University, will give the closing remarks on Saturday afternoon.

The Flying Redmen Drill Team participated in the Veteran's Day parade in Greenfield commemorating the fallen men of past wars. The team, representing both the 370th AFROTC Cadet Wing and the University of Massachusetts, marched and performed various trick movements in the parade. These members were selected as the outstanding cadets of the month for October: Cadet A2C George Chear, Cadet A2C Donald Togneri, and Cadet T2C Thomas Majchrowski.

Local Composers To Perform Tonight

An evening of contemporary music, featuring the original works of composers from Amherst and Smith Colleges and the University of Massachusetts will be presented today at 8:15 p.m. in Bartlett Auditorium.

A wide spectrum of chamber music, ranging from solo piano works to music for tape recording will be heard, including compositions by UMass faculty members Philip Bezanson and Robert Stern.

Compositions by Bruce Archibald of Amherst College; and John Duke, Alvin Eiler, George Burt, Edwin London and George

Walker of Smith College will complete the program.

Howard Lebow, pianist and UMass faculty member, will play a piano sonata composed by Bezanson in 1941. The Stern offering will be a "Little Bit of Music for Two Clarinets" written earlier this year and performed by another faculty member, Joseph Contino, with David Tasgal.

The evening of contemporary music is open to the public without charge. There will be a reception for the composers following the concert in the Bartlett Faculty Lounge, to which the public is also invited.

U.M. Prof. Publishes Musical Work

The Theodore Presser Co., New York City music publisher, has announced the publication of String Quartet No. 1 by Dr. Philip Bezanson, head of the University of Massachusetts music department.

The work is being published under the auspices of the Society for the Publication of American Music after winning the society's national publication award last year.

The quartet had its premiere performance by the Iowa String Quartet at a Jan. 1963, national meeting of the Music Librarians Association in Iowa City.

The same group is scheduled to perform the work at their concert at the University of Massachusetts Feb. 27, 1966, according to Dr. Bezanson.

Peace Corp Workers

You Won't Get Shot, Says Satin

by PAMELA METAXAS

"I'm not telling you to join the Peace Corps and get shot at," remarked Robert Satin, former Director of the Peace Corps in the Dominican Republic, in a speech Wednesday night at Mahar Auditorium. He was discussing the role the Peace Corps played during the uprising in the Dominican Republic.

Satin went on to point out that:

- The Peace Corps did stay
- The Peace Corps did not take sides politically
- About 96 volunteers and 7 staff men are still there.

HE EMPHASIZED that the Peace Corps had been invited there long before the 22,800 American troops had arrived and the Peace Corps was not asked to leave. Since the arrival of the volunteers in July '62, the Council of State in the Dominican Republic has requested aid in the areas of education, rural and urban development, fishing and nursing.

Satin added that after the U.S. had suspended relations with the Dominican Republic, many Americans living there were in danger. These were the Americans who lived in the upper class neighborhoods, who didn't speak Spanish and who didn't have any Dominican friends. "At the same time Peace Corps volunteers were in the rebel zones." Most of them were working in hospitals he said.

HE CONTINUED by explaining the two levels of Peace Corps work. One is the technical assistants. This involves nurses, foresters, teachers, engineers and the like. These people are able to provide specific needed skills in the country they are serving. The other level is the field of "self-styled experts," community development, he said. Satin believes this is the most rewarding job.

"The volunteer acts as a catalyst and makes a reaction take place," he pointed out. He says every volunteer brings to his assignment something called "organizational literacy." This includes everything we've grown up with in a democratic society. In short, the volunteer makes the "community want to start solving its own problems."

Of course, he added, the Peace Corps volunteer is not always successful. But he has a great advantage in that he arrives in the country to live there—speaking the language, eating the same food and becoming a member of a new community with a different culture.

THOSE VOLUNTEERS that are not successful, commented Satin, are those that set very high goals for themselves. "They try to change the world in 6 months to a year and it doesn't work that way." The entire Peace Corps program is a long hard process and the Corps is looking for people who have the mental and physical stamina to succeed in this type of work, he said.

"We are interested in campus leaders—people who have demonstrated that they can handle the difficult teaching of organizational literacy," he further added.

Satin was quick to point out that the 5,000 returned volunteers had developed a type of "enlightened cynicism, they look at things more closely and re-

IM BOWLING BEGINS; CHEVONE'S 221 IS TOPS

By DAVE JARNES

With the conclusion of Wednesday's activity all of the bowling leagues had completed their first round.

Much to no one's surprise, the Grayson Flaming A's, undefeated dormitory champions last year, eased to an 8-0 win over the Chadbourne Eagles. Art Lipman's 583 series paced the victors. Rich Shapiro bowled a 570 and Jim Ryan hit 519 for the losers.

The Grayson Acres were not as fortunate as their counterparts as they were blasted 8-0 by the Gorman Maples. The Wheeler Trojans took six out of eight points from the Gorman Oaks.

Rounding out the B league contests, the Chadbourne Maroons got strong performances from Dave Sears and Ken Ohison en route to an 8-0 sweep of the Brett Slippery Elms.

For the A league it was either feast or famine as the Bruins, Lemons, Hickeys, and Hicks romped over the Redmen, Patriots, HiLo's, and Colt .45's 8-0.

The Buggers established themselves as the team to beat in the independent league by zipping the Zero's 8-0. The four bowlers for the Buggers ranged from 493-530 in showing some impressive balance. Chevone's 221 is the record high single for the intramurals this year.

The Silver Foxes blanked the Forestry Club 8-0, and the Chem Club shut out the Plywoods 8-0 despite Frost's 524. In a low scoring but exciting match, the Hermits and Banshees split 4-4.

The Greenough Grants impressed with an 8-0 rout of the Berkshire Bengals. Dick D'Andrea checked in with a 545.

Pete Brazauskas established the three game high this year with a 588 as his Baker Buffalos walloped the Redwoods 8-0. The Mills Birch took the measure of the Greenough Garfields 8-0 and the Thatcher Hemlocks topped the Mills Cherry 6-2.

Alumni Greats Featured At Cage Tonight; Frosh-Varsity to Precede

By RICK CURWIN

Tonight, following the varsity frosh basketball battle, the UMass alumni "M" club will sponsor a choose up game between some of the greatest players that ever graduated from UMass. Although the teams have not been determined yet, the action will be fast and exciting with such former greats as George "Trigger" Burke '56 and Dave Bartley '56 who led their team to the best season in UMass history. Burke scored 805 points in two varsity seasons.

Other alumni include Doug Grutchfield, who holds the all time three season scoring record, Roger Twitchell '64, Jack Foley '57, Pete Barnard '64, Charlie O'Rourke '65, and Ned Larkin '59. All of these have been among the leading scorers at the University.

Complementing these stars will be other fine players such as Charlie Kingston, Leo LeBlanc, John Widdison, Charlie Fohlin, Jim Laughnane, Charlie LaPier, and Dick Green.

The "M" Club will use the donation to continue its fine work in keeping the Alumni in contact with the University. Some of the past events sponsored by the Club have been the Varsity-Alumni spring football game, a tailgate picnic after this year's Holy Cross game, and the weekly "M" Club award for outstanding offensive and defensive players on the football team, along with an annual award for the players with the most weekly honors. The club wishes to grow by adding to the current 150 members. The donation will be $1.00 or $.50 for students.

DOUG GRUTCHFIELD is the all-time leading scorer at UMass. Doug captained the 1960-61 Redmen, and will perform his basketball magic tonight at Curry Hicks.

CHARLIE FOHLIN, 6'7 forward from Belmont, was a Redmen star in 1962.

JIM LAUGHNE played for the 1961 Redmen. The '61 guard hails from Southbridge, Mass.

LEO LEBLANC captained the 1959-60 UMass basketball team. Leo is one of several former Redmen hoop stars who will show his skills at Curry Hicks Cage tonight.

CHARLIE KINGSTON and CHARLIE O'ROURKE led the Redmen to a second place Yankee Conference finish last season.

UMass Leaders Address Delegates

By PETER HENDRICKSON, Editor-in-Chief

Chancellor John Ryan of UMass-Boston told student government delegates, "You are engaged in serious, tough business as students—at least as serious and tough as the work of the 17, 18, 19 and 20 year olds in Vietnam."

He said the basic objectives of student government should parallel the objectives of the University itself and that attitudes, causes and activities must mirror the same seriousness displayed by the young soldiers.

The former Secretary and Assistant to the President at UMass reminded student senators from UMass and 22 other state colleges: "The general purpose of student government is to promote the intellectual, moral and social welfare of all students members of the University community, in a democratic manner; . . . and to develop in each student an awareness of his obligation to be concerned about matters affecting the intellectual development of others."

In his Friday night speech the Chancellor pointed out that he felt it was not for the student government to "govern" but rather to "identify and articulate general purposes, attract the attention of all relevant participants in specific issues, coordinate efforts, evaluate action and goals and modify tactics."

THE EXISTENCE OF A MODEL POLITICAL system was noted by Ryan, who pointed to the subcultures of students, faculty and administration with "divergence of value, reward, perspective and interest perception". Alluding to the Berkeley revolt he noted that student government is not necessarily a locus of power but that de facto leadership may arise if student government fails to meet pressing issues.

Student governments have the advantage of rapport with the student sub-culture that non-members lack because student leaders share problems in common with their constituents, Ryan said. "It is also true," he said, "that you can have only a limited understanding of the perspective of the faculty and administrative sub-cultures."

AMONG THE DILEMMAS of student leadership listed by Ryan were:

- relationships between the hierarchies of the sub-cultures

- degree of student participation in policy making
- degree of success student leaders have in achievement of the educational objectives of the University
- success of student government in bringing an awareness to student of the problems and perspectives of administrators and faculty.

The Chancellor said he believes that out of more mature and scholarly student leadership will evolve a more participative role in University policy formulation.

Competition for the leadership of students will intensify. The most alert, most intelligent and most highly motivated of our citizens will be the college students," he said.

IN CONCLUSION Ryan said "The work of the University is serious, exhilarating fun and never done. Student organizations and student leaders—can and should have a piece of the responsibility for developing and carrying forward the work of the University—and you will have, as it becomes obvious that you are serious, and exhilarated about the work of the University—your work."

President John W. Lederle welcomed the delegates at the Friday night banquet and said, "There is a community in Massachusetts of institutions of higher learning. We are great friends of SMTI and all the others. We are not an octopus trying to absorb them."

The former University of Michigan student council member said it is good to criticize the faculty and administration and occasionally remind them that students are their reason for being.

THE CURRENT DRIVE for liberalization of women's rules led the president to say, "I think the girls are more mature than the boys. But its the mothers, we must also consider."

Alluding to Berkeley, Lederle noted that these are exciting days and reminisced about the political activism of the early 30's when students were concerned with the depression and New Deal legislation.

Lederle concluded by quoting James "Scottie" Reston of the New York Times, "Spring fashions on the American campus scene have changed. Instead of girls, they are chasing college presidents. They should know that there is more benefit in chasing girls."

Student freedom in government and journalism highlighted a two day student government conference held here for representatives from 23 state supported institutions of higher learning in Massachusetts.

The public relations committee of the student senate was responsible for the conference which was held for the purpose of exchanging ideas on student government set-ups, principles, and practices.

Schools invited to the conference included all of the state colleges as well as the state supported junior and community colleges.

Each school was requested to send delegates concerned with some aspect of student leadership in government. The delegates represented student council or senate, student judiciary, class officers, and student newspaper.

On Saturday morning a delegate from one of the schools, a representative of the faculty or administration at UMass, and a student from the University spoke on each of the five areas outlined in the conference.

The areas covered relations between faculty senate and student senate, incentives and recognition for student leaders, student government and the role of the campus newspaper, administrative control of student government—the degree of such control, and the responsibility for the spending of student tax money.

The first topic discussed in the opening convocation concerned the relations between the faculty senate and the Student Government. Don Wilkinson, a delegate from North Adams State Col., opened this session with the statement that "the faculty and administration should listen to what the student has to say, because unless they do, little will be accomplished."

Dr. Wellman, representing the UM faculty, started his speech by saying that relations must be prefaced with responsibility. (The responsibility is to the trustees.)

THERE ARE THREE groups upon which this responsibility may possibly fall, Wellman continued—the administration, the students and the faculty.

It was determined that the administration is the mediating group between the university community and the university itself. It answers to the "political heads and machine of the state"—thus it does not command this responsibility.

The student is not responsible either according to Wellman. He (the student) is concerned with research and public service. Wellman depicted the student as the transient, and the third group—the faculty—as the permanent.

THE FACULTY is responsible as the teaching, research, service portion of the university.

Student Sen. John Greenquist rounded out this topic with the statement that student interests and opinion should be considered (by faculty members) when student issues are under discussion.

Jim Daley, from Salem State, opened the speeches on incentives and recognition for student leaders by suggesting that perhaps student leaders are chosen because the student body sees a part of itself in these people. He cautioned student leaders with the phrase "the only time that you must not fail is the last time you try."

ROBERT MORRISSEY, director of Financial Aid at UM, suggested incentives for student leaders including grants-in-aid, academic credit (i.e. journalism credits for work on the Collegian and other publications) and government credits for senators and officers, free summer courses—so that leaders could have a lighter load during the school year, and the possibility of a 5 year plan for student leaders—allowing one year strictly for student leadership jobs.

Athletic Majors Host Career-Day Program

By PAMELA METAXAS
Staff Reporter

The departments of Men's Physical Education, Women's Physical Education, and Recreation combined to present the annual Career Day Program Saturday. Interested high school students in each of these three fields were invited here to learn more about the fields and to participate in various activities.

In the morning the three departments offered tours and meetings with the faculty heads and majors in each department.

AT THE CAREERS DAYS luncheon in the S.U. Ballroom three majors spoke to the students on the topic, "Campus and Career Opportunities in Physical Education and Recreation."

Marge Smith, a junior Phys. Ed. major, spoke on careers for women.

She began by assuring the students that the campus "grows" smaller with familiarity. She added that the four years of college life are precious and "closing yourself off from opportunities is defeating your purpose." Students owe it to themselves to participate, she said.

In WOPE the majority of activity is concentrated in WAA (Woman's Athletic Association), responsible for such things as band, synchronized swimming and skiing.

She pointed out the three main programs that the Physical Education department is having this year:

- A golf clinic was held in October to provide instruction and information on proper golf techniques.
  - During Thanksgiving recess the New England gymnastics competition will be held here.
  - Dec. 8 there will be guest lecturers on modern dance.
- She remarked that the entire department is growing and it gives the students a "feeling of pride to mature as it matures." Women's Physical Education hopes to attract the "kind of people whose interest in living is reflected in everything we do," she concluded.

Stephen Shea, a senior physical education major spoke on the expanding career opportunities in men's physical education.

It is necessary, he said, to evaluate what you are interested in and then choose from the many activities offered at the university.

He pointed out that UMass tries to educate its students two ways:

NEWS REVIEW

By SANDY FAIMAN, Staff Reporter

The Nation

AN ARTICLE WHICH appeared in Look magazine, written by Eric Sevareid, disclosed that twice during August 1965, U Thant Secretary General of the U.N. confirmed with Hanoi to undertake negotiation discussions.

Adlai Stevenson, representative to the U.N., disclosed these peace talk bids by Hanoi shortly before he died. They were rejected by the Johnson Administration.

QUESTIONS RAISED were, why did President Johnson reject the offers, and would the course of the war have been altered if the bid had been accepted.

AT THE U.N. General Assembly last week, another move to seat Communist China and to expel Nationalist China was voted down by a vote of 47 against, 47 for, and 20 abstentions.

A two-thirds vote would have been necessary to pass this bill. The United States was the leader in opposition to the seating of the Peking government. Among the nations which opposed the U.S. vote to reject Communist China into the U.N. were France and Great Britain.

THE QUESTION OF whether Red China would have accepted the bid to join the U.N. had it been approved, was brought up.

The State

A FIVE-MEMBER HOUSE COMMITTEE to investigate participation by students and faculty members of UMass in the Ft. Devens Veterans' Day demonstration protesting U.S. policy in Vietnam was proposed in the House of Representatives.

REP. GEORGE O'FARREL (Dem. Malden) proposed the inquiry and suggested that the participants be suspended for their actions, because Massachusetts taxpayers should not have to subsidize the education of those students.

DISAGREEMENT was raised by Rep. Quinn of Boston. He pointed out that this proposal violates the constitutional principle of the right of a citizen to speak out regardless of what his occupation may be, or what he represents.

A PROBE BEGAN in Boston into the anti-poverty youth work program, when cases of fraud and theft were disclosed. An immediate cut-off of funds and a rush of Washington investigators followed.

OFFICIALS OF the program denied the charges, but the investigating committee plans to probe deeper into the actual situation in Boston.

The Campus

THE STUDENT SENATE Ad Hoc Committee studying the University grading system completed and announced its results on Monday. The Committee, set up in April 1965, showed a "general dissatisfaction at UM with the 4.0 grading system and a general satisfaction at other schools using the system."

Sen. Jerry Benezra, chairman of the Committee, said that "our poll shows that there are problems within the system."

AT UMASS 55% of the faculty and administration registered that they were not satisfied with the present grading system.

Student vote showed that the present 1.8 graduating came was favored and that it should be retained.

THE FINDINGS of the inquiry have been sent to the Faculty Senate for consideration and action.

At the Student Senate meeting on Wednesday evening, a bill concerning the proposed location of the Medical School in Worcester was brought before the floor.

THE BILL was presented by Sen. Benezra and Gurwitz and passed by a roll call vote of 33-4.

It stated that the Senate should support the position of the Mass. Taxpayers' Committee for quality medical education.

THE STUDENT SENATE tabled a bill which proposed that counselor evaluations of students be made available to the evaluated student. A study will be made to determine whether these evaluations are objective and whether they actually fulfill their purpose.

A GROUP OF UMass fraternities and sororities, headed by Alpha Epsilon Pi Fraternity, is exploring the possibility of locating a fraternity complex of fourteen buildings in Hadley.

AEPI obtained an option of 38 acres of land, valued at about $200,000. The complex would cost approximately $3.5 million and would house about 1200 students.

THE LOCATION OF the land is off Route 116 in Hadley, and is about 1 mile from the UMass campus. Tremendous growth of the UMass enrollment and the need for expensive modernization of the existing fraternity houses has prompted the study by the student organizations.

THE CAMPUS BLOOD DRIVE proved extremely successful this year, with about 1000 students donating blood. The Hampshire County chapter of the American Red Cross conducted the drive, and the UMass Religious Council sponsored the blood drive.

Students who donated a pint of blood will be entitled to free blood if necessary during the coming year, or for any member of their immediate family. 70% of the blood will be used in community hospitals wherever needed, and 30% will be designated for use in state hospitals and federal institutions.

Last week a visit was made by Peace Corps representatives to the UMass campus.

ROBERT SATIN, former director of the Peace Corps in the Dominican Republic, described the role of the Peace Corps during the Dominican crisis.

He stated that the Peace Corps was not asked to leave, and that there still remain about 100 volunteers and staffers in the Dominican Republic.

HE EMPHASIZED the role of the volunteer, who "acts as a catalyst and makes a reaction take place."

Satin said that every volunteer brings to his assignment something called "organizational literacy."

In short, the volunteer makes the "community want to start solving its own problems."

THE PEACE CORPS representatives distributed literature on the many aspects of the Peace Corps, and questionnaires and registration forms for prospective recruits.

Publicity, Hometowning Task of News Service

Supplying hometown newspapers with news of students and the growth, industry and functions of the university is the task of Editor Dan Melley and the University News Service. His staff of a half-dozen turns out annually literally thousands of informative stories dealing with the University, its faculty and its student body.

"Hometowning" is probably the most important duty of the news service. It keeps more than six-hundred hometown newspapers and radio and TV stations informed of the accomplishments of its representatives among a student body of twelve-thousand.

The honors and commencement lists, participation in such functions as University Theatre, R.O.T.C. and Opera Guild along with special honors and achievements, all are handled under hometown news.

Another important function of the news office is reporting university news publicity about the latest educational developments and reports of increased public aid in attracting better students and faculty members.

This challenging and rewarding job, Melley says, is not without problems. Because of his small staff and the added burden of the large influx of students Melley regrets he no longer can get the "feel" of the campus. It is increasingly more difficult to be personally involved with student views, strengths and problems he explains. There is so little time also, to follow up faculty projects that often a timely news story on a faculty member's work goes unwritten.

The battle for news space is another problem with which Melley's staff must deal. For example, he says, in the mid-west, the great land-grant state universities are the primary universities and they have little problem maintaining news interest. Not so in Massachusetts, where Harvard, M.I.T., Tufts, Brandeis and numerous other eastern institutes demand great reams of copy often leaving little for their western cousin.

Another significant problem of the news service concerns preparing a story, Melley continues. Once a story leaves the news office, he says, and is in the hands of editors, their editing of a story may cause it to lose its particular significance or even be misconstrued. To avoid this is the challenge Melley and his writers face.

In addition to its concern with news media, the University News Service also runs a speakers bureau, arranges interviews and is the body quoted on matters dealing with student discipline. "The job of the University News Service," says Melley, "is to promote a favorable total picture of the university."

Peace Corps Team Succeeds; 150 Take Placement Test

"The response to the Peace Corps at the University of Massachusetts has been greater than any other campus of its size in the country, including some campuses which are even larger," remarked Tony Masso, returned volunteer from Panama and leader of the Peace Corps recruiting team.

Masso noted that by late Wednesday night more than 150 university students had signed up to take the Peace Corps placement test.

He also added in a Collegian interview, "It has been gratifying to note that UMass students are sincerely interested in doing some type of service work such as the Peace Corps which will be a credit to our country, a developing nation and to themselves. With a response such as this, we are looking forward to returning to campus next year."

Students who seek further Peace Corps materials and answers to their questions are urged to contact Frank Morrissey, of the Placement Office, Peace Corps liaison officer on campus.

Senate Preview

"It is imperative that all senators make an effort to attend tonight's senate meeting as there will be an important bill concerning the UMass medical school under discussion tonight," Senate President Dacey told this reporter.

The bill will be brought up under special business. Dacey urges all senators to at least come to the first part of the meeting so that this bill can be given the consideration it deserves—that is the consideration of the entire student senate.

Other items at tonight's meeting will include a resolution by Senator Tim Cunningham that the report of the Yahoo Investigating Committee be accepted. Such acceptance implies that the unanimous consensus of the committee, i.e., the senate transfer printing funds back into the Yahoo printing account, will allow Yahoo to print again.

Also on the senate floor tonight will be the bill to create a new senate executive council. The council will include the senate officers and at least four appointed senators to replace the current council of committee chairman.

Physics Dept. Gets $200,000

The University of Massachusetts has received federal grants totaling nearly $200,000 to support teaching and research programs in the physics department, according to an announcement today by Dr. Robert L. Gluckstern, head of the physics department.

Of the total, $50,000 comes from the U.S. Advanced Projects Research Agency to purchase equipment for the teaching of modern optics, and for the research programs of Dr. Norman C. Ford, Jr., assistant professor; Dr. Claude M. Penchina, assistant professor; Dr. Edward A. Soltysik, associate professor; and D. John D. Trimmer, professor.

A renewal of a research grant by the Air Force has added $55,000.

From The Chaplains--Thanksgiving Messages

This week we shall enjoy a brief change from the pressure-packed days of campus life as we return to loved ones and a reunion that is always enjoyed so thoroughly. From the day of its origin, Thanksgiving has been a festive occasion with a truly spiritual meaning. Realizing God's goodness to His children, it is little wonder that our founding fathers felt the need of setting aside a day to make known the feelings of gratitude in their hearts. For years millions have followed suit in an effort to acknowledge Him from whom comes every good. In 1965 we have the same opportunity. What better setting could be found than the beauty of the home with the family gathered together, prayerfully offering to God the thanks of a grateful people. Our wish for the University family—students, faculty and staff—is for a truly gratifying reunion of dear ones joining together in praising and thanking God for the innumerable blessings which in His goodness He so generously bestows.

Monsignor Power

As we give thanks for the many blessings that are ours as Americans today, let us also remember those who have little to be thankful for; the starving, the homeless and the dying in other parts of the world, in Africa, in South America and in Asia. Let us dedicate ourselves on this day to the elimination of war and the creation of peace, a peace based on understanding and good will, on cooperation and democracy.

Rabbi Louis Ruchames

The contemporary ideological presupposition underlying our celebration of the Puritans' original Thanksgiving festival goes something like this: "We give thanks to God for all of the blessings that we (as individuals and as a nation) have received."

How is it possible to celebrate all of life, to give thanks for the obvious "unblessings" that are a part of every individual and national life? The film, Zorba the Greek gives us a clue. At one point Zorba says, to his friend, portrayed as an inhibited and bookish sort, "You've got everything except one thing—madness. A man needs a little madness, or else he never dares cut the rope and be free."

I would make a special plea that this Thanksgiving Season we reject the pious platitudes about "all our blessings" and "how lucky we are", the effect of which is to cover the truth. Instead, let's risk "a certain madness" and dare to celebrate our recognition and thereby our thanks for all of life.

Censorship Problem — Not Here

We are indeed fortunate. It became evident at the Student Government Conference held here this weekend that UMass students enjoy a much greater degree of freedom than other Commonwealth state school scholars.

Delegates from student newspapers told of censorship that included preview of all copy by the college president and strict administrative fiscal control. It seemed that many presidents would rather have no student press than risk possible criticism that might damage the college's public image.

Faculty members feared they would sacrifice jobs if they supported student journalism and there have been few efforts to raise the caliber of the student papers. The most damning critique of the clamps on the student press were voiced by a student editor, "Would you dare to criticize if you knew you would be called uncooperative in recommendations from the school?"

The schools are very new for the most part and do not yet have the tradition of responsible student government long in evidence at UMass. Schools with strong senates have free newspapers—the two are natural partners. Through the conference the Collegian will support stronger newspapers and stronger, responsible student government. Rule by administration assures conformity to policy. It also makes sheep of students and what could be more agreeable than a silent, non-participatory graduate?

We hope our sister, UMass-Boston, will not follow the path of submissiveness but will establish a strong government and a healthy newspaper. A student press association of state schools is in the works to exchange news and plans for the student papers. We have the opportunity to take the lead in promoting free and responsible student journalism and are certain that the Student Senate will also encourage viable student government in the Commonwealth school.

"Thanks" With Turkey

An art exam tomorrow and you think you'll never get through the Gothic period. Damn this education business anyway. It's a pain in the brain.

Is it? Or do the minor irritations in a student's life obscure the many blessings in the situation?

Many people envy a student's life. They are justified. For we have just about everything.

We have the opportunity to learn, to develop ourselves and therefore lead a fuller life. We have intellectual stimulation in classes and in debates with roommates. We have physical development in gym classes and in runs to SBA.

We have showers and clean Gordon linen. Despite frequent complaints about the food by people who have nothing more significant to complain about, we have good food at the Commons and plenty of it.

We can enjoy the excitement of a football game. We can let loose at a dance. We can develop our talents in the various organizations on campus.

What other group of people have these opportunities?

We have many things to give thanks for over our big, fat turkeys.

A Thanksgiving Tragedy

Leg Horn Fog Horn's His Friend

Boy, was I lucky last Thanksgiving because, for some reason, the boss overlooked me. However, no such luck was with me this year.

But at least let me tell you how hard I tried to become a reject. For example, last week I went on a hunger strike which did nothing but frustrate me. The boss knew don well that I always went wild over fresh corn. So everyday he would pile mounds of the stuff around my house. Well, you can just ask my friend, Leg Horn Fog Horn, how great my will power is and you'll understand how after two days I snapped.

But did I give up? No. One day I asked Leg Horn to come over and help me pull some of my feathers out (what a guy will go through) so that it might look as though I had mononucleosis or something. Well, the boss took one look at me and sent me down to the infirmary to have a blood test. I didn't feel and look too much like a fool when the doctor told me that I was quite normal.

Well I tried almost everything. Even the army classified me as 4-F. But the boss was onewho never changed his mind. So, on Monday, at precisely five o'clock I will give my life for a most honorable cause—the American stomach.

Letters To The Editor

"Lip Service"

To the Editor:

John F. Kennedy was America's "gadfly" President. He stung a politically apathetic public into reassessing itself in terms of its function both within American and world society. He generated a unique youthfulness and fervor that revitalized the American Presidency and brought it into a new and different limelight characterized by scholasticism and vision. He challenged the American citizens, and especially the youth of America, to take an active part in social and political problems. He challenged America and the world to think.

John Kennedy has received perhaps more praise and prayers than any other man of this century. Americans especially have bathed him with many moving eulogies and erected countless monuments in his honor. We have immortalized many of his so skillfully conceived and delivered words and phrases. Yet, do words and monuments in themselves pay tribute to the man?

It is not because John F. Kennedy was a "loving father, fervent Catholic, or courageous soldier" that we honor his memory so, but because, as President of the U.S.A., he imparted to us as citizens the desire to strive for a better future through active participation in our government. Do not be caught up in an all-consuming verbal expression of how much J.F.K. meant to you and expect to do justice to him, your country, or yourself.

John Kennedy drove home to us the need to strive always for a better America and a better world through intelligent, practical, and active participation in America's social and political spheres. His tragic death shocked the world in 1963, but will it have served the purpose he would have hoped it would serve if in 1973 all we've done is paid lip and monetary service to the man whose goals he wanted to be our own? NO KNOCKS

In the light of recent happenings both on the campus in general and in my own dormitory I feel that the female population of the University should become aware of the existing situation regarding residents regulations.

Did you know that your corridor counselor has the same authority over you as the Nazi Secret Police did in Hitler's Germany? She has the right to break into the privacy of your room at any time of the day or night and check it, not only for illegal possessions but for cleanliness, neatness, orderliness and any other adjectives of that sort she may wish to utilize at the time.

What I am speaking about has nothing to do with periodic inspections for fire hazards and sanitation, to which I do not object. What I am speaking about is an outright invasion of your personal privacy. You are virtually at her mercy, you are never safe from intrusion—she doesn't need your permission—she doesn't even have to knock. She can enter and go through your room any time she wishes.

Don't misunderstand me, I am not attacking the counselors personally, but rather this obviously intolerable regulation.

Are we to allow ourselves to be subjected to this outright denial of our rights as individuals and as residents of the University community?

We have rented these rooms for the academic year, and, while I agree that certain controls are necessary and conducive to better dormitory conditions, I also feel that the corridor counselors should have no authority over the condition of our rooms outside of specific regulations and authorized inspections.

I recommend that steps be taken to right this injustice and that the rules regarding residence regulations and counselor's authority be revised and made more specific.

Psych — A Wide Field

To the Editor:

I am a senior, and have been a psych major for my four years at the University. On several occasions, I have had cause to complain about specific courses; however, on more occasions I have felt pride in the eclectic nature of the department which so adequately prepares a student in the field. As an undergraduate, a student will get only this one opportunity to be familiarized with all aspects of psychology, and this is the only way he will be able to choose his field of specialization on the graduate level. In addition, I had reaffirmation of my position last weekend when I took the advanced graduate record exam in psychology, and realized how necessary it was that I had been taught the various courses which at one time I might have thought were inapplicable or inadequately taught.

A Bugged Eater

Although the cold weather season is upon us, and most bugs have either gone south, gone underground, or died, it seems that both the North and South Dining Commons have their own supply of these pests. I realize that fried grasshoppers and chocolate-covered ants are considered delicacies in many of the higher class restaurants in New York City and other areas, but to my knowledge there has been no request for such items at UMass. Today was the third time I have found a bug in my food this semester. It has happened twice in the North Commons and once in the South Commons. Perhaps if the kitchens were kept cleaner and the food prepared with more care, the food would be more enjoyable in more ways than one.

Function and Freedom Discussed

By JIM FOUUDY, News Editor

With the role and function of the college press as a common ground, the Publications Workshop of the Student Government Convention began, developing into what was both an informative and useful discussion of the campus press and related problems at the various state and community colleges.

THE WORKSHOP, moderated by Collegian Editor Peter Hendrickson and attended by delegates from eight state schools, was a sounding board for questions of censorship, staff organization, budgeting and community relationships and set the ground work for information and news exchanges as well as a future publications conference to include all state colleges.

Although many of the situations were localized, most of the delegates expressed a complaint over the lack of faculty and administrative support and occasional control of student publications.

BILL LYONS of S.M.T.I. commented that at his school "conditions for faculty are so bad that they haven't time to consider student problems."

A representative from a community college said that her president reads all material before it is printed and other delegates spoke of press censorship often times due to the newness of their schools and the desire on the part of the administrators to build up a good first image.

Editor-in-chief Hendrickson told the delegates of the Collegian's ability to cooperate with faculty and administration and stressed that the college press should be a "community press" reflecting the various phases of the academic community.

HENDRICKSON went on to suggest that some of the campus newspapers seek help and advice from local commercial papers, and suggested that they write to other schools to find out how they solved some of these very same questions.

While degrees of censorship varied, all delegates agreed on the common problem of staff organization. As one delegate pointed out, "the kids don't seem to care about the paper...I do most of the work."

THE TYPES of organization ranged from the Collegian's system of editors and day editors to Andre Senecal's (The Chief, Holyoke Community Col.) explanation of their "triumvirate editors."

Pointing out recruitment difficulties at the community college, Victoria Bates of Quinsigamond Community said that since her classmates do not live on campus it is difficult to hold meetings and organize staffs. "The idea of living on campus and the feeling of belonging you get from it would help us an awful lot," she said.

OTHER delegates pointed to the fact that their schools are commuter colleges and to general student apathy as a cause for organizational problems.

Attending the morning session of the workshop, Dr. Dario Politella, Asst. Prof. of Journalism at UMass, stressed to the delegates the importance of a competent faculty advisor for their staffs.

He also suggested to the group that they seek solutions to their problems through schools and organizations which have already met and solved them.

ALTHOUGH the workshop ended, the ideas and suggestions discussed left with the delegates and most of them looked forward to exchanging newspapers and information and the possibility of a future conference.

Workshops: For Men's and Women's Affairs

By JACQ

Both sessions of the Men's and Women's Affairs workshops dealt primarily with the problems of freshman orientation.

John Greenquist, chairman of Men's Affairs, and Cathy Walsh, a representative from Women's Affairs, stated the main functions of their respective committees: to represent student interests to the Administration and make recommendations for changes in rules and regulations; to review the rules in effect and to coordinate them with the changing status of the University.

THE SESSION began when Sen. Greenquist stated that presently his committee was working on an improved Freshman Orientation Program.

Gary LeBeau, freshman class president at UM, said the problem is to overcome the apathy of upperclassmen which develops during the second or third semester and is transferred back to the present freshmen.

Fred Cenedulla (UM) said that it is the responsibility of the whole school to orientate freshmen.

WHEN THE DISCUSSION became centered around the establishment of an all freshman residence hall, Butterfield and Van Meter were cited as examples of predominantly freshman dorms where there is still a great amount of spirit.

While the delegates thought that grouping freshmen together was a good way to instill unity and a feeling of belonging, they also thought that upperclassmen had an integral part of orientating freshmen; that juniors and seniors were an especially good influence.

OF PRIMARY importance in the integration of freshmen is contact with upperclassmen. This assumption ruled out suggestions of a strictly freshman dorm because segregation would inhibit maturity.

The Dean of Women from Framingham State Col. stated that they had experimented with all-freshmen dorms and it proved successful. They then reverted to the system of having the same percentage from each class on each corridor.

FATHER QUIGLEY (Catholic chaplain from UM) stated that the students are divided and that the first two years are characterized by insecurity and the next two by extreme self-sufficiency. He

Judiciary

Discipline Defined

By CLIFF SNICKERS, Staff Reporter

Heading up the Judiciary Workshop were Ed Waterman of Men's, and Marion Smith of Women's Judiciary at UMass.

The workshop was run in two one-hour sessions from 2 to 4 p.m. Each session was begun with a brief description of the nature of the judiciary system at UMass.

In the discussions that followed, points were brought up regarding the extent of authority and degree of development of similar bodies at the schools of other delegates.

A significant point which generated much comment at both sessions was the statement that the existence of a student judiciary serves the university community in innumerable, subtle ways, in creating an atmosphere of interdependence within the student body, thus putting into practice the theory of "universality."

Dean Field, who attended the first session, commented that within a true university, "Students and faculty ought to be involved." He felt that the judiciary board acts as a strong stimulant to build a sense of involvement.

"Discipline," he explained, "deals with student culture. Therefore, if students are given a voice in the responsible regulation of this discipline, they feel a direct communication with the needs of the student culture."

Commenting on the same point at the second session, Ellis Whitaker, student government advisor at S.M.T.I., suggested that punishment invoked by a student judiciary board will carry much more weight with a student than any measures against him at a higher administrative level."

A second among the points of interest which arose in the course of discussion was the fact that there exists at UMass a joint board composed of members of both Men's and Women's Judiciary which is empowered to determine the constitutionality (on the basis of the Senate constitution) of legislation enacted by the Student Senate.

Senators Vera Swartz and Jim Collins exchange views on student government with other delegates at workshop.

Campus Leaders

Jim Allen of the Student Senate asserted that the primary incentive for student leaders is personal interest. Recognition is extended in many ways at UM, Allen said, mentioning the various honor groups recognized annually at Student leaders night.

According to George McGee of Mass. Bay, the most important issues under the topic of Student Government and the relationship of Campus Newspaper are the delegation of authority (in the paper) and the answers to the question "to whom do we owe the ultimate answer?"

McGee mentioned three possible ways of running a newspaper—the authoritarian way, the democratic way and the supervisory way. The third way is the only workable one, according to McGee.

Dr. Dario Politella, administrative coordinator of publications at UM, simplified this topic by saying that there is a problem—the lack of communication—and there also is a solution—a core of press officers informed on student government workings. Politella urged a "war against poverty of information" between student governments and publications.

COLLEGIAN editor Peter Hendrickson urged active lobbying on

also said that he feels that a student won't commit himself unless it will add to his character.

QUIGLEY went on to say that there is a need to consider the social needs of freshmen. As an example he cited the fact that freshmen men often feel socially insecure because they can't dance. "The credentials of a mature graduate are social knowledge and this is what is missing in many students", Quigley said.

He pointed out that at UM one tends to become self-centered with no interests in other people; however at Ivy League schools there is an outgoing spirit according to Father Quigley.

THE DEMANDS (needs) of society are social, cultural, and intellectual he said. Furthermore these should also be the requirements of a UM graduate in Quigley's opinion.

At one point the delegates and representatives discussed counselors. It was pointed out that at Framingham there are dorm representatives similar to UM counselors only without financial remunerations.

Framingham's Dean of Women expressed hope that with the passage of the Willis Report all the state institutions will benefit financially and academically.

IN SUMMARY it was pointed out that it is important to make the freshman feel as though he is a part of the school; the big brother and big sister programs should be set up in the spring in order to permit summer contact.

IT IS IMPERATIVE that students develop the aspect of being on their own and this can only be achieved by the college experience of mixing without other people or academic classes.

It was also concluded that apathy is a definite problem on campus and that it is most flagrant in the upperclasses and can only be solved by the common denominator of students and faculty.

Only through personal identification and personal contact can we hope to correct the situation, for the responsibility can't be shifted entirely to the student leaders because as Sen. Downes put it, "student leaders are often more worried about other leaders rather than about those whom they are supposed to be leading."

Grenier, Business e RSO, then put s to the group topic.

First he asked "what is the authoritative source for the responsibility of your funds? Is it the campus community, trustees, the constituents of the student leaders, their peers, or the money itself?"

Secondly, DeGrenier queried whether the management feared a loss of power, asking thirdly, who has the custodial responsibility of spending these funds?

SENATE Treas. Gary Bombardier stressed the fact that administrative control in this area is necessary only when students fail to be responsible.

The implication (behind student taxation) as Bombardier sees it, is that the taxes are imposed by a representative, responsible student body; then they are approved by the administration and collected from the student body.

Before taxes can be collected, certain criteria must be met, according to Bombardier. First, a need must be determined before a tax is imposed. In order to do this, a budget must be devised so that a tax can be well and fairly determined.

Following the speeches, the delegates dispersed to workshops dealing with judiciary, class officers, publications, budgets and finance, academic affairs, services, men's and women's affairs, and activities.

Class Officers

Are They Leaders Or Puppets?

By KAREN ROSE, Senate Reporter

The class officer workshop under the leadership of Bob Keough, sophomore class president at UM, discussed many issues including one brought up by Armand DeGrenier that possibly class officers are no longer necessary, especially in a place the size of UMass.

The arguments on this point were that tradition doesn't necessarily indicate the need for officers, and that the function of officers is purely social and the positions should be thrown out.

Keough stated that officers are necessary for many functions—including the social side.

ANOTHER UM delegate, Doug Green of the freshman class, said that officers are necessary for a sense of identity.

Bob Simkins from Holyoke explained that the officers at Holyoke Community Col. have no real power as of now—they have no funds to spend and that in essence they are only chosen class representatives of the school. He concluded by saying that a revamp of system is now in progress.

UM FROSH Pres. Gary LeBeau made inquiries as to the set up of executive councils at the various schools. Here it was brought out that many state schools have one Student Government body encompassing all three (legal, judicial, administrative) functions of the student groups here at UMass.

John Mullin of UM here injected the idea of an all student president—that is a president of the entire student body above the various class presidents.

The discussions then reverted back to the role of the class officers.

Mel Bowser, the delegate from Boston Gas (which is how all delegator from UM-Boston were classified) brought up the point that our Boston campus has no officers or student government at all and is looking for a president to follow.

THE WORKSHOPS were called to a close and the various officers exchanged final remarks as well as addresses so that correspondence can be exchanged on the duties of officers.

Closing Address

Student Rights Defended

By KAEN ROSE, Senate Reporter

NOFFSINGER SAID THAT student rights are so basic that they shouldn't have to be reaffirmed.

He said that the idea of student rights had recently been treated as though it were a radical idea. This is not so he said "the idea was a healthy one a century ago and is still healthy in the 1960's."

There are three difficulties in solution to problems on student rights that Noffsinger mentioned in his speech. The obstacles are the fact that there is no easy solution to such a problem, the fact that pressure groups must be considered when discussing students rights, and that in no case should individuals indulge in unreasonable, quick actions on student rights.

STUDENTS INVOLVED in work for student rights must make self examination before getting involved, they must be willing to learn from experience, they must incorporate an attitude of self respect and a minimum of self pity into their personalities, they must assume the honesty to blame themselves for their mistakes, and they must realize that verbalizing a problem doesn't solve it.

Dr. Noffsinger left the assembled students searching in their minds to see if they met his proposed criteria for a leader.

Activities

R.S.O. Work Discussed

By LINDA PERLSTEIN

The Activities Committee workshop led off with Chairman Jim Watson, (Chairman of UMass Activities Committee on campus outlining the committee's structure. He explained how a group becomes an RSO organization pointing out that the two criteria used to judge a group are: "Is it a democratically run organization and does it fulfill its aim and purposes as stated in its preamble."

The attending delegates then explained the mechanisms by which their organizations become recognized on campus. It was found that most schools had some form of recognition by the Student Government and almost all had constitutional approval.

A discussion then followed on the problem of what might happen if some group like the Young Nazi Party wanted to be recognized on a campus. Many schools felt that the student government might approve a constitution of such a group but that they either wouldn't be accepted by the student body or the administration.

A question on how much backing the student governments have on campuses, brought out by Chairman Watson led to the closing half-hour's discussion on election procedures and voting turnout.

Chief Justice Marlon Smith of Women's Judiciary, with Chief Justice Ed Waterman and Skip Davis of Men's Judiciary, explained the functions and responsibilities of the UMass Judicial system at the Judicial Workshop.

FOOD SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

Tonight a discussion of professional opportunities in food science and technology will be presented by the staff of the Department of Food Science and Technology. This meeting is held as part of the effort of the University to encourage academic counseling. The purpose of the discussion is to afford an opportunity for undergraduate students who are interested in science but are undecided about their major to learn about careers in the food science field.

DEAN'S OFFICE

Permission can be granted for special scheduling for bona fide reasons of employment only. Students whose continuance at the University is dependent upon such special scheduling should report to the appropriate student personnel Dean prior to pre-registration (Counseling Day Dec. 1) and substantiate their request with a letter from their employer. Schedule exception cannot be granted at the time of registration. It is incumbent upon all students to plan ahead carefully and to make requests for schedule exception at the time of pre-registration. Any major change in a student's personal circumstances which might justify any schedule exception following pre-registration should be reported to the appropriate personal Dean in writing at once.

- By placing equal emphasis on liberal arts course for the first two years and major courses for the last two years.
  - By presenting over 100 clubs and activities.
- The men's physical education department is active in that it offers many programs including an intramural program in such sports as basketball and squash, he said.

HE COMMENTED that the men's physical education program here is "second to none" and that several graduates have gone on to outstanding careers in their respective fields.

In short, the student should consider the program at UM since there are excellent facilities, the breadth of the program is large and the cost of attending the university is minimal, he concluded.

James Romanowicz, a recreation major spoke on the importance of recreation on every day life. At the university, he commented, recreation activities are offered in music, drama, arts and crafts and in social recreation.

FOR THE INTERESTED student there is the University Band, folk and square dances weekly, the Musicals and Chorale and numerous plays and concerts.

There are approximately 200 special interest clubs at the university and many are connected with recreation he said. A B.S. degree in recreation "offers fifteen different recreational positions here and abroad" and the recreation graduates are "today's leaders of leisure."

The starting salaries are $5500-6000 a year and increasing. A career in recreation can "give meaningful and satisfying reward to your life," he concluded.

Dean William Tunis ended the afternoon program by presenting the entrance requirements for the prospective student. He pointed out that over 14,000 applied for this year's freshman class and only 3600 were accepted.

The most important criteria is the secondary school record for it is the "best predictor of academic success," he said.

HE ALSO POINTED OUT that the university will accept the qualified student from the community college level after the first year if he is interested in a career in physical education or recreation. This year the university accepted over 200 students from the community colleges. These included students in other major fields.

The dean concluded by urging the student who does not meet the university entrance requirement to enter a community college for one or two years and then transfer to the university.

"I can't overemphasize the importance of our community college system for these young people who have a sincere interest in the university but who do not qualify," he said.

The afternoon program consisted of various programs including tours, activity clinics and question and answer periods.

ENGINEERS, SCIENTISTS, MATHEMATICIANS: Explore the unique opportunities at

National Security Agency

... where special programs encourage rapid professional advancement for the engineer, scientist and mathematician launching his career.

NSA is a scientific and technological community unique in the United States, perhaps in the world. Unique in its mission, its operation, its requirements... unique, too, in the scope of opportunity it affords a young scientist or engineer beginning his career.

A separate agency functioning within the Department of Defense, NSA is responsible for developing "secure" (i.e., invulnerable) communications systems to transmit and receive vital information. Within this area, which encompasses the whole field of cryptology—the science of codes and ciphers—NSA project teams pursue a broad spectrum of investigations taking them well beyond many known and accepted boundaries of knowledge. Beginning with basic research, these investigations progress through applied research, development and design, prototype engineering, and on into various phases of applications engineering.

At NSA you might specialize in any or several of these sectors, depending on your talents and special interests:

ENGINEERING. Antenna/transmitter/receiver design... high speed computers (digital and analog)... transistor circuitry... advanced radio communications techniques... microwave communications... audio and video recording devices... cryogenic studies and applications... integrated circuitry... microminiaturization.

PHYSICS. Solid state (basic and applied)... nuclear magnetic resonance phenomena... electromagnetic propagation... upper atmosphere phenomena... superconductivity and cryogenics (Ph.D. graduates only).

MATHEMATICS. Statistical mathematics... matrix algebra... finite fields... probability... combinatorial analysis... programming and symbolic logic.

Unequaled Facilities and Equipment

In a near-academic atmosphere, NSA scientists and engineers enjoy the most fully-instrumented laboratories and use of advanced computer and other equipment, some found nowhere else in the world.

Skilled clerical and technical support will free you to concentrate on the most challenging aspects of your projects, and thus help speed your professional growth.

Outstanding Colleagues

You will work alongside people of enormously varied backgrounds and intellectual interests, over 500 of whom hold advanced degrees.

Researchers at NSA also receive constant stimulus from outside the agency. To assist in certain program areas, NSA often calls on special boards of consultants—outstanding scientists and engineers from industry and academic centers as well as from other government agencies.

Career Development Opportunities

Your professional growth and earning power expand from the day you join NSA, without having to accumulate years of "experience." NSA career development is orderly and swift; substantial salary increases follow as you assume more and more responsibility.

A number of NSA career development programs help shorten the time when you can contribute at your maximum potential. These programs include: ADVANCED STUDY. NSA's liberal graduate study program affords you the opportunity to pursue part-time study up to eight hours each semester and/or one semester or more of full-time graduate study at full salary. Nearly all academic costs are paid by NSA, whose proximity to seven universities offering a wealth of advanced courses and seminars is an additional asset.

IN-HOUSE TRAINING. The new NSA employee first attends a six-week general orientation program, followed by a period of specialized classroom study designed to broaden familiarity with an area or areas of heavy NSA concern (e.g., communications theory, cryptanalysis, computer logic and analysis, solid state physics). Formal study is complemented by on-the-job training, as you work and learn under the guidance and direction of highly experienced associates.

PROFESSIONAL ASSOCIATIONS, TRAVEL. The agency fosters a climate of recognition and advancement for its young professionals by encouraging participation in professional association affairs, and assisting you to attend national meetings, seminars and conferences as well as visit other research facilities where related work is underway—government, university and industrial—throughout the United States.

Liberal Personnel Policies, Attractive Location

NSA policies relating to vacations, insurance and retirement are fair and liberal. You enjoy the benefits of Federal employment without the necessity of Civil Service certification.

Located between Washington and Baltimore, NSA is also near the Chesapeake Bay, ocean beaches, ski resorts and other popular summer and winter recreation areas, not to mention the varied leisure-time attractions of the nation's capital itself. The location permits your choice of city, suburban or country living.

Campus Interviews— Check Now for Dates!

Representatives of the National Security Agency will conduct interviews on campus soon. Check with your Placement office as soon as possible to schedule an appointment.

Foreign Students To Sponsor International Food Fiesta

By M. AARIF GHAYYUR

Students and residents in the Amherst area have an opportunity to taste foods of several lands on Sunday, December 5.

The program - International Food Fiesta-sponsored by the UMass International Club, will be held at 5:30 P.M. in Farley Club Hall behind Machmer Hall. Dishes from Indian "poori" and Arab "Sheesh Kabab" to Switzerland's "Birchermulsi" and Africa's "Yakitori" to Japan's "Yakatory" and China's "chow mein" will be available. All are cordially invited.

Many girl's dorms are inviting foreign students for dinners and round table discussions.

During October Eugene Field invited two students from Pakistan and three from India for a dinner and discussion of the Kashmir dispute. Students from Nepal, the Philippines, Japan, and China have also been guests at their weekly dorm dinners.

Last Friday Emily Dickinson invited students from Malaysia, Indonesia, India, Africa, and Pakistan for a dinner and short discussion about their respective countries. Susan Ashley was in charge of arranging the program.

In the future, several other dormitories are planning to invite foreign students. Those dorms and foreign students interested in the program should contact Alladin Hashim, President, or Carol Woodcock or Pat Gordon, secretaries of the International Club.

Members of the UMass International Club enjoyed themselves last Saturday at Smith College at a dance arranged by Amherst College. A well-known band provided the music.

This was the first dance given for foreign students this semester. Others will follow.

Hatem A. Hussaini, a graduate student in government, gave an interesting talk on the Arab World in the third "Land and People" series of the International Club last Wednesday. Color slides accompanied the talk.

"The Arab people" said Hatem, "have a glorious past not only of great Muslim civilization but also of ancient Egyptian civilization, and are working hard to get the same place in the committee of nations."

7-2 SLATE...

It was at Storrs that the Redmen started their trend of second half greatness which was to last for the remainder of the season.

DAVE GIARLA

The Redmen gave URI a 30-0 beating on homecoming day, showing a staunch defense and powerhouse offense featuring the passing of Landry, the receiving of Morin and Meers and the running of Vandersea, Durkin, Lewis and the little man who made the big play all year, Bob Detore.

BU was a victim of another second half Redmen surge, this time at Boston. Trailing 12-6 at halftime, UMass struck for three quick third period scores and came out on top, 34-18. Don Durkin and Phil Vandersea were outstanding at BU, as was Detore.

The Redmen ball was really beginning to roll when Vermont crossed its path at Alumni Stadium. The Cats succumbed 41-6.

BILL CONNER

but not before giving UMass fans some anxious moments. Landry had a great afternoon against UVM, completing 20 out of 25 passes, while Meers and Morin had field days.

It was the defensive team's turn to shine against Holy Cross. While the Redmen offense was having its usual first half troubles, the UMass defensive unit, led by Kelley, Dallas and Qualey made shambles of the Crusader attackers and actually scored the half's only touchdown when Dallas ran a blocked punt into the end zone. The offense moved well in the second half, and the Redmen had themselves a cherished 27-0 victory.

In the finale at Durham, New Hampshire, the Redmen really turned on the power, destroying UNH 46-0.

A 7-2 season, second place in the YanCon, 253 points scored for, 59 scored against, several broken records by Morin, Meers, and Landry, and a six game winning streak. The 1965 season was certainly a very successful one for Coach Fusia, his staff and players.

GREG LANDRY

By MIKE GOULD

Coming in like a lamb and going out like a lion, Vic Fusia's 1965 Redmen showed themselves to be an explosive, aggressive, and highly entertaining unit.

After surmounting their traditional early season barriers, the Redmen proceeded to demolish their last six opponents by the impressive total score of 198-31.

Early season losses to Maine and Buffalo undoubtedly cost UMass a bowl invitation as well as the beanpot, but the Redmen players and coaches displayed a great deal of ability and drive as they turned what appeared to be a lack-luster season into one of which Redmen followers can be proud.

It is unfortunate that the Maine game was first on the Redmen schedule. One can not say whether the outcome of the contest would have been different at a later point in the season, but an experienced Landry, Harrigan, Mitchell, and Smith along with a healthy Swanson and an acknowledged Detore would no doubt have made a great deal of difference. One must, however, give the mighty mites from Maine a great deal of credit for their great season which will terminate with a Tangerine Bowl game against East Carolina.

After releasing its frustrations against AIC, UMass ran into a hard-nosed Buffalo team. A series of costly mistakes by the Redmen gave the Bulls an 18-6 victory.

The Buffalo game seemed to be a valuable lesson for Fusia's skillful but inexperienced soph-

the rugged treatment given him by the Bulls, Greg kept coming back for more, showing great poise, determination, and ability under extreme pressure. The Buffalo game brought out the best in Landry, and, if the remainder of the season is an indication, the game had a positive effect on the entire UMass team.

During the second half of the UConn game, the Redmen showed their first signs of jelling into an outstanding football team. Trailing 7-0 at half-time, UMass completely dominated proceedings after intermission to score a 20-7 victory.

EIGHT REDMEN WIN PLACES ON YAN-CON ALL-STAR TEAM

The University of Maine's Yankee Conference champions and the runners-up from the University of Massachusetts dominated the 1965 all-conference football team, it was announced today. The selection was made on a vote of the six New England state universities.

Maine, which will play in the Tangerine bowl, placed four men, headed by spectacular Dick DeVarney, on the offensive unit and three men on the defensive team. The Redmen from Amherst have four men on the offensive team and four men on the defensive team.

The third place University of Vermont Catamounts placed two men on each unit while the University of Rhode Island Rams had one on each eleven. Connecticut placed a man on the defensive eleven.

Joining DeVarney, a senior from Laconia, N.H., who was picked for the quarterback post, are Bill Pasquill, a junior from Kittery, tackle; Ivan Brawn, a junior from Bucksport, a guard, and Frank Harney, a senior from Wellesley Hills, Mass., a halfback.

Bob Meers, a senior from Hudson, Mass., and Milt Morin, a senior from Leominster, Mass., were selected for the end positions for the third straight year. Bill Connor, junior from Rockland, Mass., a tackle, and Phil Vandersea, a senior from Whitinsville, a fullback, are the other Redmen named to the offensive unit.

Rusty Brink, a senior from Lowell, Maine, is a repeat performer at center for the University of Vermont and joining him from the Catamounts is Joe Soldano, a sophomore from Toledo, Ohio. Rounding out the offensive team is halfback Wayne Zdanowicz of Jersey City, N.J., a senior at the University of Rhode Island.

UMass Students March In Viet Nam Protest

By Jane Roland, Staff Reporter

Over one hundred people from the Amherst-Northampton area were among the more than 30,000 marchers in Washington, D.C. on Sat., Nov. 27.

The Vietnam demonstration, according to the March coordinators, was "a positive one, designed to offer alternatives to the present policy: immediate cease-fire leading to negotiations and a return to the Geneva Agreements of 1954."

The majority of marchers were well-dressed adults and middle-aged people, many in family groups with teen-aged children and small babies. The stereotyped bearded protestor was infrequently seen, although there were many neatly dressed college students.

THE DEMONSTRATION started at 11 a.m. with picketing around the White House. Clergymen and veterans marched in front of the House, all others on adjoining streets. At 1 p.m. the demonstration moved to the Washington Monument for speeches at the Sylvan theatre.

Speeches were given by Dr. Benjamin Spock, Ronnie Dugger, editor of the Texas Observer, and representative George Brown of California. Mrs. Martin Luther King, Jr., stressed the emotional aspects of the war, and Carl Oglesby, president of National Students for a Democratic Society, spoke in relation to his recent trip to Vietnam.

Norman Thomas, former presidential candidate for the Socialist Party, said "I'd rather see America save its soul than its face" when questioned about the honor of discontinuing the war.

JUDY COLLINS, Mark Spoelstra, and Len Chandler, well-known folksingers, performed between the speeches.

Among the demonstrators was a small minority which had received much press coverage—those in favor of a Viet Cong victory. March coordinators agreed to let this group carry whatever signs they wished. A small skirmish broke out early in the day when one demonstrator tried to tear a Viet Cong flag away from another.

There was little outside heckling. Joseph Mlot-Mroz, a Polish freedom fighter, left soon after he arrived, and a small delegation from the Hell's Angels paraded for awhile. One UMass student was hit with an egg. No one was hurt.

THE DEMONSTRATION, conceived by the Committee for a SANE Nuclear Policy, was supported by many political organizations, as well as Professors for Peace, Artists and Writers for Peace, Veterans for Peace, and other ad hoc groups.

Some of the individual sponsors were world renowned baby doctor Benjamin Spock, Dr. Sabin, inventor of the Sabin anti-polio vaccine, writers John Hersey, Louis Untermeyer, and Saul Bellow, actor Tony Randall, Nobel Prize winner Albert Szent-Gyorgi, and former senatorial candidate H. Stuart Hughes.

Investigation Sparked By Marchant's Photos

By JANE ROLAND,
Staff Reporter

University Director of Security John C. Marchant has come under fire for acts which some people feel are intimidations and infringements on student civil rights. The protest is a result of pictures taken by Marchant of individual students at the Viet Nam Teach-Out in Amherst, Oct. 17.

Because of this, Dr. John Brentlinger presented a motion to the Committee on Student Affairs to present to the Faculty Senate. The motion states that (1) The Faculty Senate regrets and deprecates this occurrence of photographing and that (2) they instruct the University Security officer that neither he nor his subordinates, in official or unofficial capacity, may investigate into student groups.

Part Two was based on the grounds that any sort of investigative procedure is inconsistent with the University aim of encouraging free and independent political thought and activity; and that University Security force members cannot divest themselves of their role as police officers.

At the regular meeting of the Committee on Student Affairs on Nov. 5, Director of Security Marchant attended to discuss the issue. He indicated that he photographed participants in the demonstration "as a private citizen, on his own time, with his own equipment, and for his own purposes."

The issue raised was whether or not these actions could be construed as an intimidation and an infringement on the students' civil rights. Dr. Brentlinger believed that such activities could be interpreted as intimidations, especially when the group involved is in the minority.

Although he said that the pictures were not for security purposes, Mr. Marchant stated that he would not hesitate to give them to the government if he believed this would be in the best interests of law and order. He held that he did have the right to photograph any demonstration.

When Sidney Finehirsh, president of the Young Independents, which had supported the Teach-Out, said that some members of the group did feel intimidated, Marchant answered that any photographs taken were to protect the students' interests rather than to intimidate them.

Finehirsh replied that the students had not asked for paternalistic protection, and that there have been cases in the past where such pictures have been used for harassment. Dr. Brentlinger mentioned as an analogy the photographs taken of Negroes in the South trying to register to vote.

According to the unpublished minutes of the Oct. 21 Faculty Senate meeting, President Lederle had mentioned something to the effect that "no useful purpose was served by photographing a legal gathering of students."

Jurisdiction Questioned

By LINDA PERLSTEIN,
Senior Reporter

At 9:40 last Wednesday morning the fight to bring the Medical School to Amherst went to court. A representative group of Massachusetts Taxpayers headed by such distinguished people as Dr. Paul Dudley White, and Edward Weeks, editor of the Atlantic Monthly petitioned the Court to reverse the Trustees June 11 decision and to prevent them from spending taxpayers money to locate the Medical School in Worcester.

In a brief hearing before Supreme Court Justice Whittemore, the representative of the Attorney General's Office asked for a demurrer. This raises the issue of whether the court has jurisdiction to decide the matter before it.

WHITTEMORE refused to decide the matter singly and because the suit's importance will report the case to the full bench of the Supreme Court. They will make the final decision as to whether this matter can be decided on a legal basis.

Included in the taxpayer's petition was a requested for a preliminary injunction to restrain the Trustees from any further action. The injunction, sought by attorney, Raymond Cross of Northampton, was denied by Whittemore because he felt the matter of pending action was academic at this time.

THE DENIAL came with an understanding that if the Trustees did act, an injunction could be issued at that time.

If the Supreme Court should decide the matter is justiciable, a trial will follow.

The main issue at the trial would be whether the Trustees had any power to set up a branch of the University without the consent of the legislature.

Mrs. Charlotte Staab, chairman of the Massachusetts Taxpayers for Quality Medical Education stated that, "The main point gained by he hearing is that the case was not dismissed at this level but is being sent to the full bench."

The court fight may take many months before being decided.

Kenneth Walker appointed editor of UM publications

Kenneth H. Walker of East Northfield has been appointed University Editor in the Office of University Relations at UMass.

In making the announcement, Robert J. McCartney, UMass Secretary and Director of University Relations, said that Mr. Walker's prime responsibility will be to edit all University publications.

A native of Brattleboro, Vt., Mr. Walker graduated from Northfield High School, and attended Northeastern University. His first professional journalistic experience came with the Greenfield (Mass.) Recorder.

Lederle To Meet Students On University Affairs

In order to encourage and continue personal contact with the students at the University, President Lederle will hold a student visiting hour in his office on Thur., Dec. 9 from 4-5 p.m.

Any student who would like to meet and talk with the President about University affairs or other campus topics is invited to come into the President's office in South College during the hour.

Further student visiting hours will be scheduled according to the demands of the President's schedule and the success of the visiting hours. All students are invited to take advantage of this and future opportunities to meet and speak with the President.

Additional meetings will be announced in the official notice column of the Collegian.

Bellotti Discloses Plans During Campus Speech

By PAT PETOW,
Staff Reporter

"I believe it was right, and if I had to do it again, I'd precisely the same thing," declared Francis X. Bellotti at the outset of two hours of fending questions from a UMass audience.

Speaking Nov. 22 in the Middlesex Room, S.U., for the Political Science Association, Bellotti was referring to his 1964 Democratic primary challenge to the then-Governor Peabody.

The former Lt. Governor of Massachusetts, calling himself a product of social legislation, explained that in his opinion what was happening then should not have been happening; and so he ran on principle.

DISCLOSING HIS NEXT election plans Bellotti indicated he may seek the U. S. Senate seat or Attorney Generalship. The Quincy attorney thought he would receive greater party support for Attorney General.

He ruled out a campaign for governor, unless the present situation changes, and at the same time affirmed that he and Peabody would wish to avoid another intra-party fight. Bellotti said on the possibility of Peabody seeking the governor's office, "There's always the adventure of coming back."

He was asked, among others, parochial questions regarding UMass. Although he did not know why the Trustees voted for the Worcester Medical School site, Bellotti declined to name Amherst as his choice while expressing concern for developing the resources of the Western part of the state.

"I SEE NO REASON why you cannot have a law school," Bellotti said amicably. "I favor a good state law school . . . I think they're essential ultimately."

On the issue of tax proposals, he said, "I think a sales tax is a very depressing thing to the economy." He further opposed the sales tax, as well as other tax plans of raising about 200 million dollars, because he was disenchanted with lack of specific ties to the money's use.

Bellotti expressed the view that present and forthcoming

Student Gov't Conference

By MIKE ROSS,
Staff Reporter

The Student Senate Services Committee is going to investigate wages on campus. The current going rate of $1.00 per hour may be challenged and the campus committee envisions a campus wide $1.25 per hour minimum wage.

This investigation was disclosed at the Services Committee meeting held during the Student Government Conference Sat., Nov. 20 in the School of Business Administration.

THE ROLE OF A service committee was described by the Dean of Women of Framingham State College as "a place where a student can go to voice even the most minor complaint and can feel that somebody will listen and investigate his complaint."

The UMass Senate Services Committee, in particular, is open to any gripes the students may have. The function of the Committee is to examine complaints and to funnel legitimate problems towards solutions and people who can provide solutions.

Also under old business are three bills to amend various sections of the Senate By-Laws.

One bill moves to empower the senate executive committee to act on behalf of the senate between June and Sept. Another bill calls for the Senate Treasurer to be appointed ex-officio chairman of both the Budgets and Finance Committees of the Senate.

The other bill is a series of amendments to the financial policy booklet.

Meal Tickets and Exec. Council Topics for Senate Meeting

By KAREN ROSE,
Senate Reporter

Two bills concerning formation of a new executive council will be brought before the Student Senate tonight.

A bill stipulating that students have specific control over dining commons tickets and one requesting the extension of Inter-Library Loan Service to include courses will also be brought up under new business.

The bills on the executive council are a direct result of the defeat of a similar bill last week.

The provisions of these bills require a council of the four officers and at least four committee members to be recommended by other officers and chosen by the president and approved by the Senate.

The purpose of the committee, as outlined in Senator Bob Cripp's bill, is to assist the president in administering his duties.

The second bill, drawn up by Senator Tim Cunningham, moves to amend the Student Government By-Laws by giving the Senate president power to establish a cabinet to assist him with his duties. The bill's provisions are similar to those in Cripp's bill.

Another bill drawn up by Senator Cunningham would have the Senate recommend to the Board of Trustees that the present policy regarding transferability of Dining Commons tickets to be changed so that students may transfer tickets at their own discretion since they are the legal owners of the tickets.

Bills under old business include a resolution to accept the report of the Yahoo Investigation Committee. If this bill is passed the Senate Treasurer will transfer the prescribed printing funds into the Yahoo account and the magazine will be allowed to publish.

Campus Wage Rate Challenged

Last year, the Services Committee initiated what turned out to be the Vending Machine Campaign. As a result, 15c items in the machines were replaced with less expensive items, and a student cultural fund was established to channel monies from these machines back to the students by providing for such things as guest speakers.

UMass students can bring their "gripes" to the attention of the Service Committee in a variety of ways. They can indirectly contact any senator or get directly in touch with either co-chairmen of the Committee, Betty Chambers or Rusty Leavitt.

The Service Committee has only received 10 to 15 complaints this year. The complaints have ranged from "why are we getting fatty or rare meat" up at the commons to the desire for improved wages.

Several of the delegates of the smaller state schools at the Government Conference said that they would like to receive more complaints because when someone gripes he is interested in seeing some phase of a school's system improved.

The UMass Senate Service Committee will listen to and follow through all legitimate complaints and will attempt to find solutions.

Vietnam talks planned

The growing U.S. involvement in Vietnam places responsibilities on each citizen to become better informed on this issue. In the interest of promoting an informed public opinion, two local groups—Forum and the Universities Committee on Problems of War & Peace—are presenting a program on Vietnam on Dec. 2, 3, and 4.

Bernard Fall, author and lecturer on Vietnam, will speak on "What Next in Vietnam," at 8:00 p.m. Dec. 2, at Chapin Auditorium, Mt. Holyoke.

"Vietnam and Its Ethical Implications: Two Views," will be discussed by Henry Steele Commager, Professor of History, Amherst College, and Mr. Alvin Friedman, Deputy Asst. Secretary of Defense, U. S. Government, Dec. 3 at 8:00 p.m., in Johnson Chapel, Amherst College.

On the following afternoon, Dec. 4, a symposium on the issues in Vietnam will be held at 1:00 p.m. at Mahar Auditorium.

Professor Commager in Saturday Review, July 10, 1965 has questioned the political morality of the U.S. in both domestic and foreign policy.

"Even the present war in Vietnam," he said "tempts us constantly to indulge in a double standard. We complain, and rightly, that other countries do not abide by their international agreements, but we are ready to forgive ourselves for brushing aside international agreements when we face something we regard as an 'emergency'."

Mr. Friedman, who is an International Security Affairs Division officer, will discuss the implications of this issue from the government's point of view.

At the Symposium on the following afternoon, three panelists will present the two sides of the issue. The audience will then have a chance to discuss the subject.

In other Vietnam related activities, Smith College will host a Young Americans for Freedom "Debate-In" Dec. 7.

The Debate-In, one of 22 across the country, will feature debates between conservative YAF members and representatives of the left-wing Students for a Democratic Society who recently participated in the Washington March to end the war in Vietnam.

The Debate-In's are part of a larger YAF project called "The International Youth Crusade for Freedom in Vietnam."

Young Independents (Mass SDS) Policy Statement No. 1

American Foreign Policy is based on many illusions about the nature of world politics which have led to the disasters of Vietnam and the Dominican Republic and could lead to nuclear holocaust if not corrected.

These illusions are:

1. The menace of monolithic international Communism—Conditioned by Cold War propaganda we view Communism as a "product of Satan" which must be stopped at all cost. Further, all Communist countries are grouped together as a single evil force opposed to the good intentions of the "Free World." This fairly tale method of thinking (the good vs. the evil) has led to beliefs that any group suspected of Communist tendency, no matter how slight, is controlled by Moscow or Peking and must be destroyed.

A more accurate picture of the world would realize that there are a number of nation-states competing for what nation-states have always competed for: strategic power, markets, and natural resources. Ideology is a force to these states to justify their intentions. The Free World is not free with men like George Wallace (Alabama), Francisco Franco (Spain) and Cao Ky (S. Vietnam) in its camp; and the Communist World is not a "working paradise" with strikes illegal, few consumer goods, and a bureaucratic elite.

2. Revolutions in undeveloped countries are against the interests of the United States. We are by nature a conservative people. We have known relative freedom and abundance for the past 200 years. We not only have no reason for change but are indeed committed to the status quo.

But conservative American lives in a revolutionary world where people are demanding freedom from colonial rule, feudal institutions, and hunger as a way of life. The conservative American has difficulty in sympathizing with the revolutionary Black and Yellow peoples. As a result we have tended to support colonial and oligarchical rule to protect the status quo. We have viewed revolutionary movements with suspicion as Communist inspired and controlled, especially when the revolutionaries demand such a social reform as nationalization of the basic industries which often are owned by American interests.

Again, a more accurate view of the world would realize that we do live in a revolutionary world and that to oppose the forces of revolutionary social change is pure folly. America must rediscover its own revolutionary heritage and become an inspiration for the undeveloped countries of the world instead of the "friend of the reactionaries."

We can follow the application of these assumptions and the disasters they have led to in the example of Vietnam. Working from the assumptions that revolution anywhere aids monolithic communism, the United States began helping the colonial power, France, in suppressing the popular revolution in 1950. France had lost the war by 1954; and the Geneva Treaty provided for interim government in South and North Vietnam until 1956, when a free election would take place. The free election was blocked by the United States because of the certainty that a communist would win. (Former President Eisenhower said in his recent book, Mandate for Change, that had the election been held, Ho Chi Minh would have received 80% of the vote, p. 449) Even an independent nationalist like Ho Chi Minh was not acceptable to the United States because he was also a Communist. It is ironic that a democratic country like the United States blocked the democratic process out of its paranoid fear of Communism.

The man the United States put in power was Ngo Dinh Diem, who destroyed his opposition, favored Catholics in a Buddhist country, and refused to deal with social issues such as land reform. It was the oppressive Ngo Dinh Diem, the U.S.-created dictator, who pushed the revolutionary forces more than ever into the hands of the Communists. It is another irony of history that the very policy the United States used to stop Communism aided its growth.

The Vietnamese Civil War was on again by 1960. This time against the regime of Diem. The United States was again faced with the same choice as 1956, either allow a National Liberation Front victory or prop up the Saigon government with more military advisors and war material. The United States still working under its basic Cold War assumption chose to supply troops and guns to a country which wanted, dams, factories, tractors, and its own government.

Today this choice has meant 120,000 troops, napalm bombs, and air strikes into North Vietnam. Diem is gone, but in his place is Air Marshall Cao Ky, who has said himself, "the Communist were closer to the people's yearning for social justice and independent national life than his own government." (Reported by James Reston, N. Y. Times, Sept. 1, 1965, P. 86). Premier Ky has had some flattering remarks about another dictator. When asked who his heroes were, he said, "I have only one—Hitler. I admire Hitler because he pulled his country together when it was in a terrible state in the early thirties. But the situation here is so desperate one man would not be enough. We need four or five Hitler in Vietnam." (Reported in the N. Y. Times, July 16, 1965; P. 3)

Young Independents ask you to observe the following facts:

1. Daily (as anyone can read in newspapers) United States planes are dropping thousands of tons of bombs and napalm indiscriminately killing hundreds of Vietnamese combatants and noncombatants alike.

2. The basic conflict in Vietnam is a Civil War, not an international war.

3. We are not helping the people of South Vietnam toward freedom and democracy.

4. Ho Chi Minh is a Vietnamese Nationalist who has resisted Chinese domination for years. Young Independents ask that a cease fire supervised by the United Nations go into effect immediately. Bombing of North Vietnam should cease. Negotiations with all concerned parties including the Viet Cong begin, leading to United Nations supervised election. After a Vietnamese national government is formed, all foreign troops should leave, and development of the Mekong River Valley supervised by the United Nations should begin for the United Nations should begin for the benefit of all of Southeast Asia and the world.

SDS works on the campus and in the community, in urban ghettos and rural slums, and in Berkeley, California and Washington, D.C. in order to bring about our vision which will, "LET THE PEOPLE DECIDE!"

VIETNAM: VICTIM OF THE COLD WAR

Preamble to the Young Independents Constitution

Young Independents is an organization of students of the University of Massachusetts and a member chapter of students for a Democratic Society, being hereby formed for political action to further Human Rights at home and abroad, Peace in the Atomic Era, and General Welfare in an automated society. Further, we hereby dedicate ourselves and our organization to further the concept of the university as a truly educational institution.

We declare ourselves and our organization independent of either major political party, recognizing the historic role of "Third Party Politics" in the American political system.

Students for a Democratic Society is an association of young people on the left. It seeks to create a sustained community of educational and political concern; one bringing together liberals and radicals, activists and scholars, students and faculty.

It maintains a vision of a democratic society, where at all levels the people have control of the decisions which affect them and the resources on which they are dependent. It seeks a relevance through the continual focus on realities and on the programs necessary to effect organization. It feels the urgency to put forth a radical, democratic program counterposed to authoritarian movements both of Communism and the domestic right.

VIET NAM! SHOULD WE BE THERE?

An Angry Letter

The "Moral" War

I was not in the least surprised to see a letter such as Mike Gibson's in "The Collegian" Friday, Nov. 19. In fact it was long expected. It seems that President Johnson and his policy makers have planned well in allowing the crimes of the war in Vietnam to seep through the press just gradually so that we become "accustomed" to seeing and hearing about the increase of American atrocities there. And therefore I'm not surprised at seeing such an abominable thing appearing in print.

Mr. Gibson, you say "to argue against this war, any war, on moral grounds is assinine." Well, my dear sir, just what do you suggest for those who do not like war? If we show you the legal facts, you simply ignore them. And those moral questions! You seem to have filed that "dilemma" in your little cabinet and somehow lost the key to open it. So you say, "it is worth waging a war and suffering all that goes with that war to assure our own country's freedom." Mr. Gibson, by that absurd statement you clearly exhibit a lack of any knowledge at all as to what is happening in Vietnam. Surely even the government doesn't claim we are waging war for our freedom, but for the freedom of the Saigon Government, to which we are certainly most honorably committed. For the freedom of the Saigon Government, sir, which is illegitimate and dictatorial, and as even you must realize, a mere puppet to U.S. demands.

Why then do we support this government? In legal-legal terms, we are blatant violators of our own constitution (this being an undeclared war by congress), as well as the U.N. charter which outlaws all "threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any state," and rules that the Security Council alone "shall determine the existence of any threat to the peace, breach of the peace, or act of aggression." Again, there must be a solid reason for illegally (I won't use immorally, Mr. Gibson, for you want "good" reasons) barging in on an obvious civil war in Vietnam. And indeed, I believe there are a few substantial reasons, in fact unavoidable reasons for our presence in Vietnam, according to how one looks at it, obviously.

As you know, Mr. Gibson, Vietnam is a country in Asia. It is an underdeveloped land, similar in a great many respects to the rest of Asia, Africa, and Latin America. There is a revolution going on in Vietnam which is perhaps a greater threat than the one which succeeded in Cuba. For if the Vietnamese revolution is successful also, it just might provide, as an example, the necessary thrust and inspiration for those other underdeveloped and oppressed African, Asian, and Latin American peoples to take up arms against their oppressive rulers, where they have not already done so. You see, total U.S. owned assets invested in foreign countries amount to nearly $100 billion, and private investment is growing rapidly, at the rate of about $6 billion a year. Countries successful in revolution usually nationalize foreign holdings—sometimes not compensated for. Therefore wholesale nationalizations and the permanent end of a "favorable climate" for foreign investments (e.g. Cuba) is, in essence, a blow at the very existence of our type of economic system everywhere. Voila Santo Domingo. So Mr. Gibson, we can perhaps find other reasons for our presence in Vietnam, if we desire to thrust aside that which we call "morality." When are we to be "moral," Mr. Gibson?

Stop Communist Expansion

Editor's Note: The author of the following article is Captain Robert W. Frost, an ROTC graduate of the University of Massachusetts. He entered the Army in 1958 and is now a helicopter and fixed wing aviator on assignment to Viet Nam in December of this year.

By Capt. Robert W. Frost

How many times must the American people be told that we are at war? Why can't the Vietnam critics realize that surrender or capitulation there only paves the way for further wars until this Nation and its Allies become isolated strategically and ideologically. Perhaps when that happens the opposition will suddenly but too late realize that very shortly they will have lost their "inalienable right" to oppose Vietnam. Vietnam is most assuredly a strike by North Vietnam and the Viet Cong to overrun a government of the South. Our commitment to that government is just as definable as our role in NATO. The government of South Vietnam has asked our aid and we are providing it. Secondly our national interests and those of other free nations are also very much at stake. To lose in Vietnam only proves to Communism that this Nation can't withstand "wars of liberation". The Free World would then be subject to repeated wars of liberation throughout Southeast Asia and anywhere else the Communists choose.

Today we must show communism that such wars will not be tolerated. Therefore the U. S. for its own survival and the survival of all free nations must intervene in the affairs of a sovereign nation if that nation would fall to Communism without our intrusion. This includes not only requests for aid and intervention, but intervention without request. With diplomatic statements and policies announced to this effect and with military pressures applied in force where needed it will become clear to Communism that our resoluteness is unquestionable. The Communist respects force and when confronted with it he negotiates. Until the Communist respects peace the U. S. must strive for this world goal only by negotiating from power at the ready. The Communist respects power because he listened in Greece, in Berlin, in Lebanon, in Iran, in South Korea and in Cuba. Thus we must continue with ever increasing force in Vietnam while continuing to strive for negotiations, simultaneously.

WE ARE AT A STRATEGIC crossroads here in the mid - 60's and it calls for a shift in our public opinion, public feelings and public support. Till now our enemies have always been obvious. In the past aggression has been overt and left this Nation no recourse but to arm itself and defeat the aggressor in the name of freedom, liberty and self-preservation. The end of hostilities resulted in the disarming and pacification of the aggressor and the reinstatement of that nation in the world of nations. The underlying current of democratic cultures to this time is they are profoundly unwarlike and to them war can only be waged to end war. Today the situation is changed and this Nation is essentially at "peace", yet everyday throughout the world aggression takes place. The democracies have been slow to react, yet two live incidents show that our response time has to be speeded up if we are to survive as a Nation. These incidents are the Dominican Republic and Vietnam. As yet the United Nations is not ready to commit strike forces to combat subversion, and wars of liberation and until the U.N. is ready who will act as the force to stop Communist aggression? The United States! Our survival and that of the free world depend on it! Like it or not, Americans, that is our position. These two countries would be communist now had we not intervened and intervene we must continue to do until the U.N. can take our place. These subversive attempts can only assure this Nation that Communism has not changed in its strategic mission of isolating the U. S. by gradually engulfing weaker nations that supply us with raw materials and overseas facilities. Once we are pushed back to fifty states and territories then total war will be imminent and fatal for us, our remaining allies, and the world. Thus the mid-60's is not to wage war to shift we must make here in the end war but to wage war to end communism. For by fighting when necessary we end the spread of communism and contain it within its present boundaries while at the same time striving for world order through the United Nations.

SHOULD COMMUNISM do an about face and say to the world that they will stop formenting trouble and live peacefully with the world within our present boundaries then we the West would listen. But that day is far off because Communism is spreading and is subverting.

I must digress here and explain why Russia or Red China have not been singled out but have been kept under the general heading of Communism. Americans must firmly believe that when a Manifesto says world revolution is the only method by which Communism can spread until it dominates the world, this tells us to be on guard. Americans must firmly believe that when Communist officials say "war between us and the West is inevitable" or "we will sign any pledge, any paper, any treaty, if it suits us for our time will come perhaps in 10 years, perhaps in 20 years but it will come and when we have lulled the capitalist nations to sleep with our peace overtures, our negotiations, our signatures we will strike and smash them with a mailed fist.", this tells us to be on guard. Americans must firmly believe that when they see South Korea invaded, Hungarians ruthlessly suppressed, Tibet overrun with genocidal tactics, and Indian territory occupied, this tells us to be on guard. Americans must firmly believe that when they see subversion win in Cuba, see it attempted in Vietnam, Peru, Venezuela, Dominican Republic and Africa, this tells us to be on guard. Therefore Communism whether it be Russian or Chinese is still dedicated to our extinction.

ONCE POLICY IS MADE it is time to join ranks and press forward. Our President has chosen force with the one hand and peace with the other and we the majority support him. Those who cry for peace in defiance of our policy only advocate a policy which is already in effect, but their pleas do not have the back up power which the Communist understands. Continued opposition by these peacenuts will misinform our enemy, strengthen his will to fight, lengthen the war and increase our casualties. These peacenuts don't achieve, through academic questions, through dialectic, through logic, and through demonstrations, peace in Vietnam. They do achieve confusion among the people, resentment of those selected to fight, misunderstanding abroad, and psychological propaganda which aids the enemy. The critics urge settlement but so does our President. All the Communists have to do is look in his other hand. These critics are within their Constitutional Rights to speak and to congregate but we must not be driven off our selected aim by their antics. Further debate and demonstration is unnecessary. Therefore the peacenuts are demonstrating when our ranks should be closed and debating on this issue when debate should be over. In short the minority is attempting to rule, is out of tune with the times and is appearing quite foolish.

The Weak-Willed and the Gutless

I am sick of listening to the cries of weak-willed, gutless individuals who are protesting against our government's policy in Vietnam, and who, when given the opportunity, will protest and rebel against any controversial issue which may face our society. It is fine to criticize government policy, and to try to effect policies which one feels would be for the betterment of the nation and the world. But even while criticizing the government and formulating what appears to be a superior policy, it is the duty of every loyal American citizen to pledge his full moral support to his nation.

Our nation was founded on the principles of freedom and democracy. Over the past 189 years we have fought to keep, not only our own nation free, but to promote and insure freedom and democracy for all individuals and nations who desire to be free. Every hour of every day many brave, patriotic Americans are giving their lives to uphold the American ideals of freedom and democracy. Many have gone to Vietnam because they were called to go. Many have gone because they wanted to be there. No matter what the circumstances for their being there, they are all giving their maximum efforts for the same purpose, to bring forth the American ideals of freedom and democracy. It is the duty of every loyal American to give them his full moral and spiritual support.

'BEACH BOYS' CONCERT

Sorry to see them go:

Technique, Clowning—Beach Boys

by JON HUTTON

Last Tuesday's concert was opened by a group called the Prince Spaghetti Minstrels. Their program was varied and entertaining, but marred by acoustical difficulties.

They seemed used to performing in a much smaller audience, and did not project themselves as well as they might have. Their voices could barely be heard above the overpowering amplification of the instruments (especially the bass).

A notable exception was a solo by a female member of the group, accompanied by a single guitar. Her voice was clear, steady, and capable of either strength or wispi-

Overpowering instrumental sound and the poor acoustics of the Cage haunted the rest of the performance as well, but seemed to impair the rock and roll groups less than it did the Minstrels.

THE BOSS TWEEDS, a campus group, appeared next and presented a good, though undistinguished, performance. They lack notable technique and showmanship. Their program included an "original" song ("If") with some bright, fresh lyrics by Rudyard Kipling. My heart went out to Kipling.

The Bold, at present the reigning campus group, more than filled the bill for showmanship. Although their attempt at musical humor was not successful, and although their final number degenerated into a display of gymnastics, their command of instrumental technique made them a highlight of the evening.

THE BEACH BOYS themselves were also impaired by the sound setup, but their "Beach Boy Sound" came across in spite of the difficulties.

Their lead singer clowning his way through song after song, thoroughly enjoying himself, and being enjoyed in his exuberance.

The Beach Boys' technique was unquestionably good, and everyone present was treated to a good show and to good popular music. The audience was sorry to see them go at the end of the concert.

Piper Toyama is an interesting member of the class of '69. He is a native of Hawaii, and he can tell you anything you want to know about surfing.

His home is in Honoka, Hawaii, about ten minutes from the beach and the surf. Piper has been surfing for seven years. According to him, "surfing is like a disease—once it hits you, you just can't stop."

Piper became proficient at surfing within seven weeks. The two most important things for a beginner to do, he says, are to get a board that fits him well and to learn the right time to catch the wave.

Piper can explain from experience how to "hang five", "hang ten", what a "wipe-out" is, and exactly what "baggies" are. "Hanging five" is done when the board begins to rise in front. The surfer moves up to the front of the board and puts his weight on one foot, which he curls over the front edge of the board.

"Hanging Ten" is the same principle. It is used to regain balance of the board, and the surfer curls both feet over the front edge.

A "wipe-out" occurs when the surfer loses balance and tips over, board and all. "Baggies" are cut-down levis that are worn by surfers.

Piper made his first board himself but soon found that bought ones made surfing easier. A good board costs between $100 and $125.

Besides surfing, Piper has taken lessons in Aikido, which is a form of self-defense like Karate. He was a member of a club in Hawaii for three years that met at least once a week.

Piper is a freshman here and is majoring in psychology. He decided to come here because he wanted to experience life in an environment completely different from his own.

Although he is really enjoying his life here, he admits he does miss the "waves and the weather" of Hawaii sometime. He probably means that he misses the surfing.

WMUA Goes Exciting

A new WMUA show, featuring campus talent and sprinklings of lively conversation will premiere soon after taping this Sunday at 5 in the SU Ballroom.

The "Joe O Show", fashioned after the late night variety shows will have a live performers and a live audience composed of invited guests and anybody else who want to participate.

The talent will run from a big band sound to folk singing to comedy monologues; an interview with the Beach Boys will spotlight the talk portions.

The show's host, sophomore Joe Oleksiewicz, a speech major from Turners Falls, says "as far as I know, nothing like this has ever been tried here before."

If the first show is a success, Oleksiewicz says the it might develop into a series of "specials", a weekly or a bi-weekly affair.

The hour and a half broadcast will include in its performers Skip Spiro's band to give a big band treatment to the show's theme song and may be a permanent feature if the show is more than a one-shot.

Pete Ward, the show's announcer, and Janet Lavin will provide folk music. Ward plans to sing an original composition.

Jane will bounce back for some pop songs and Dave Schneider will give out with his part-time professional singing in this field.

Comedy will be provided by Steve Rosoff, another pro who has worked in California and writes all his own materials.

In addition to the Beach Boys interview, Oleksiewicz will be talking with Dr. Robert Feldman, the psych professor whose recent Collegian editorial on religion provoked so much comment.

Joe O will also chat with Frank Klanfer and Dan Weir of the University Theatre.

Oleksiewicz says he hopes to have a large audience on hand for the taping Sunday.

Holiday Packing?

Index photo

Plan on flunking out at the end of this semester? Just packing Christmas presents for that welcome vacation? Or only trying a new decorating scheme for your room? Hate to rush you procrastinators, but the Christmas vacation is only three short weeks away and, if you don't want to be caught with the overwhelming last-minute packing, better get going and get all those clothes and books ready to travel!

Movie Committee To Promote Foreign Films

The movie committee of the Student Union is trying to increase interest in the foreign films by improving the public understanding of them. In accordance with this goal, the committee is conducting coffee hours and discussions following each program.

The first coffee hour was held after "La Dolce Vita" on November 21. Discussion of the film was lead by Rev. Charles Thoman, a Jesuit priest who is working at the Newman Center while studying for his doctorate.

After next Sunday's film, "Knife in the Waters," Mrs. Kosinski of The UMass Russian Department will be at the coffee hour to answer questions.

This year's foreign films were selected last spring by the Student Union movie committee, which also runs the Thursday night movie series. In choosing the films, the committee consulted Richard Strongren of the Speech Department, who recommended many of the films and directors. The committee tries to select a variety of films from different countries and by different directors. Most of the movies are European, but this year there is a Japanese film, "Woman in the Dunes," which will be shown on March 13.

All the films selected for the series are subtitled. Janet Kopeck, chairman of the movie committee, explained that dubbed films are never ordered because they are often poorly done.

The films ordered are the latest offered, although most of those are at least two years old.

Attendance at the films has been from the four-college area. The majority of the audience is faculty and foreign students. Although attendance has not been generally good, "La Dolce Vita" was a sell-out.

The movie committee is already planning to bring the film back next semester. Meanwhile, improvement of attendance will depend upon the coffee hours and discussions.

Willis Report chairman resigns from Senate

Senator Kevin B. Harrington (D-Salem), majority floor leader who headed the special commission which made a two-year study of education in Massachusetts that resulted in the Willis-Harrington report, has resigned from the joint committee on Education.

Senate President Maurice A. Donahue of Holyoke, who announced the resignation, immediately appointed Senator

Charles V. Hogan (D-Lynn) to fill the vacancy.

In an explanation of his resignation, Senator Harrington said that by tradition the majority floor leader serves as a member only of the Rules committee. He said he had requested a continuance as a member of the Education committee until legislation based on the Willis-Harrington report had been completed.

ENGINEERS, SCIENTISTS, MATHEMATICIANS: Explore the unique opportunities at

National Security Agency

... where special programs encourage rapid professional advancement for the engineer, scientist and mathematician launching his career.

NSA is a scientific and technological community unique in the United States, perhaps in the world. Unique in its mission, its operation, its requirements... unique, too, in the scope of opportunity it affords a young scientist or engineer beginning his career.

A separate agency functioning within the Department of Defense, NSA is responsible for developing "secure" (i.e., invulnerable) communications systems to transmit and receive vital information. Within this area, which encompasses the whole field of cryptology—the science of codes and ciphers—NSA project teams pursue a broad spectrum of investigations taking them well beyond many known and accepted boundaries of knowledge. Beginning with basic research, these investigations progress through applied research, development and design, prototype engineering, and on into various phases of applications engineering.

At NSA you might specialize in any or several of these sectors, depending on your talents and special interests:

ENGINEERING. Antenna/transmitter/receiver design... high speed computers (digital and analog)... transistor circuitry... advanced radio communications techniques... microwave communications... audio and video recording devices... cryogenic studies and applications... integrated circuitry... microminiaturization.

PHYSICS. Solid state (basic and applied)... nuclear magnetic resonance phenomena... electromagnetic propagation... upper atmosphere phenomena... superconductivity and cryogenics (Ph.D. graduates only).

MATHEMATICS. Statistical mathematics... matrix algebra... finite fields... probability... combinatorial analysis... programming and symbolic logic.

Unequaled Facilities and Equipment

In a near-academic atmosphere, NSA scientists and engineers enjoy the most fully-instrumented laboratories and use of advanced computer and other equipment, some found nowhere else in the world.

Skilled clerical and technical support will free you to concentrate on the most challenging aspects of your projects, and thus help speed your professional growth.

Outstanding Colleagues

You will work alongside people of enormously varied backgrounds and intellectual interests, over 500 of whom hold advanced degrees.

Researchers at NSA also receive constant stimulus from outside the agency. To assist in certain program areas, NSA often calls on special boards of consultants—outstanding scientists and engineers from industry and academic centers as well as from other government agencies.

Career Development Opportunities

Your professional growth and earning power expand from the day you join NSA, without having to accumulate years of "experience." NSA career development is orderly and swift; substantial salary increases follow as you assume more and more responsibility.

A number of NSA career development programs help shorten the time when you can contribute at your maximum potential. These programs include: ADVANCED STUDY. NSA's liberal graduate study program affords you the opportunity to pursue part-time study up to eight hours each semester and/or one semester or more of full-time graduate study at full salary. Nearly all academic costs are paid by NSA, whose proximity to seven universities offering a wealth of advanced courses and seminars is an additional asset.

IN-HOUSE TRAINING. The new NSA employee first attends a six-week general orientation program, followed by a period of specialized classroom study designed to broaden familiarity with an area or areas of heavy NSA concern (e.g., communications theory, cryptanalysis, computer logic and analysis, solid state physics). Formal study is complemented by on-the-job training, as you work and learn under the guidance and direction of highly experienced associates.

PROFESSIONAL ASSOCIATIONS, TRAVEL. The agency fosters a climate of recognition and advancement for its young professionals by encouraging participation in professional association affairs, and assisting you to attend national meetings, seminars and conferences as well as visit other research facilities where related work is underway—government, university and industrial—throughout the United States.

Liberal Personnel Policies, Attractive Location

NSA policies relating to vacations, insurance and retirement are fair and liberal. You enjoy the benefits of Federal employment without the necessity of Civil Service certification.

Located between Washington and Baltimore, NSA is also near the Chesapeake Bay, ocean beaches, ski resorts and other popular summer and winter recreation areas, not to mention the varied leisure-time attractions of the nation's capital itself. The location permits your choice of city, suburban or country living.

Campus Interviews—Check Now for Dates!

Grading Discussed

4.0 System Opposed

Editor's Note: The UMass Student Senate recently released a poll showing general disagreement among students, faculty and administrators with the present 4.0 grading system now in use. The poll is now in the hands of the Faculty Senate for possible action.

This is the first in a series dealing with the problem in other colleges.

By CPS

Recently, the grading systems of American schools and colleges have become surrounded by doubts and questions.

Does grading have an adverse effect on the educational process? Or is it a necessary incentive to learning? Is grading the only practical means of measuring achievement? Can a system of evaluation be developed which would tell more than a letter or numerical code? Could such a system of evaluation be effectively used in any but a small college with a low student-faculty ratio? Can a college inaugurate such a system on its own?

Grades were originally instituted to provide confirmation of a student's achievement in specific areas and to compare his progress with that of his fellows. Grades became a convenient shorthand method of communicating this information.

But judging by recent criticism, the conventional grading system (A, B, C, etc.) seems to have become inadequate and obsolete, and no longer communicates much of anything at all. Not only that, but some critics consider it a real obstacle to the achievement of important educational objectives.

The grade-point average has become of overriding concern to today's student. Grade achievement no longer bears any relation to genuine scholastic enterprise, but rather it frequently testifies to the student's ability to choose easy courses and to second-guess the teacher when taking tests.

Conceivably it is possible for a student to complete his education and never have been challenged with a true learning experience. By sliding through in easy courses and cramming for tests with information which he immediately forgets, the student can leave college no wiser than he entered. The great pity is that he never realizes true learning involves more than mere memorization and cautious, conventional replies.

Widespread cheating is on result of the overemphasis on grades. Another is the neurotic fixation which many students have regarding grades; and another, the psychological pressure and tension under which many students operate, sometimes resulting even in physical illness.

Educators are aware of these

Davoren issues statement on proposed investigation of UMass demonstrators

Speaker of the House John F. X. Davoren (D) of Milford has issued the following statement concerning a proposed legislative investigation of UMass participation in anti-Vietnam policy demonstrations:

"I was most pleased with the action of the House of Representatives in sustaining my decision not to admit the late-filed measure of Representative George O'Farrell of Malden to investigate University of Massachusetts' student and faculty participation in the Vietnam protest demonstrations.

"WHEN I REFUSED to admit the measure, and indicated my strenuous objections to the whole proposition to the sponsor of the measure, Representative O'Farrell then sought to carry his fight to the floor of the House.

"I instructed my Majority Leader, Representative Robert Quinn of Boston to oppose its admission on behalf of the Democratic House leadership.

"I further indicated my disapproval of the measure by casting one of the 40 votes against its admission even though as presiding officer I do not normally vote except to break a tie.

"WHILE I STRONGLY support American foreign policy in Vietnam, I recognize the right of any individual American, including any student or faculty member at the University of Massachusetts, to hold and to express his own views on foreign policy. The right to dissent from prevailing popular views and attitudes is basic to our American democracy.

"I believe that academic freedom—the freedom of all those in the university community to engage in the search for truth—is a precious freedom which must be protected from legislative obstruction. I do not propose to be a party to an intellectual witch hunt designed to mold all thinking on the university campus into a legislatively proscribed mold.

"This was the real issue involved in the abortive attempt to establish a legislative investigating committee. I was delighted that good sense, reason, and a proper understanding of our American democracy prevailed and that this measure was rejected."

Student Union Report

SUG Board Announces Plans

By SHARON PALERMO,
Staff Reporter

The decoration of five trees, the SU Trim a Limb, to which the general public is invited, will be held Dec. 6 at 3:30 p.m. Refreshments will be served. The Christmas Dance featuring Ted Benard and his orchestra is Sat., 8-12 in the Ballroom, with admission $1.50 per person. The movie War and Peace will be shown Thursday.

The results of the elections at the last SUG board meeting are: Marianne Brady-Chairman, Joel Hartstone-Vice-Chairman, with the postponement of the election of Secretary.

Sketches of the proposed changes for the Hatch were presented, including extension of the East wing and the installation of a temporary floor covering the bowling alley.

Committees will study the proposals and a student survey may be conducted before it is decided whether changes will be made in the Hatch area. Finances must also be considered. The problem of bulletin board space in the Union was made with six possible solutions, from enlargement of the ride board to the taking away space from clubs. A vote on the propositions will be taken at this week's meeting.

If nothing interests you as much as research and development...

consider the advantages of a career in the laboratories of the David Taylor Model Basin

The David Taylor Model Basin, one of the oldest government laboratories, has grown steadily in size and responsibility and is now concerned with design concepts for aircraft and missiles, as well as with surface ships and submarines. Its five major laboratories conduct basic, applied, and developmental research in these fields:

HYDRODYNAMICS—Hydrofoil craft, interface vehicles, novel ship types, fluid dynamics, high-speed phenomena.

AERODYNAMICS—Aircushion vehicles, weapon release problems, V/STOL aircraft, aircraft performance.

STRUCTURAL MECHANICS—Submarine and surface ship structures, effects of underwater and surface explosions, ship and personnel protection, deep-sea research vehicles.

APPLIED MATHEMATICS—Computer-aided ship and system design, automated data processing, numerical techniques, management data analysis.

ACOUSTICS AND VIBRATION—Radiated, near-field, self and hydrodynamic noise, countermeasures, silencing devices, noise transmission.

An engineering or scientific career at the David Taylor Model Basin offers you many advantages:

1. Because of the mission of the Model Basin, you can be sure that you will be engaged in research, development, test and evaluation not as a bystander, but as an active and increasingly important participant. Whatever your discipline, you will have the opportunity to apply it to one of the important projects in which the Model Basin is engaged.

2. You will have the satisfaction and excitement of working on projects that advance the state of the art and are of national and international importance.

3. Working with you will be men whose engineering and scientific achievements have earned them wide reputations in their fields. Your contact with them will be of immeasurable value in your own development as a professional engineer or scientist.

4. You will work in a campus-like environment with 186 acres of laboratories and supporting facilities with millions of dollars worth of equipment. For instance, the Hydromechanics Laboratory has a Towing Basin 3/5 of a mile long, 50 feet wide, and 20 feet deep; a Maneuvering Basin that covers 5 acres. The Applied Mathematics Laboratory uses four high-speed digital computers to solve engineering and logistic problems. The ultra-high-speed UNIVAC LARC performs 250,000 computations per second. The Aerodynamics Laboratory is equipped with nine wind tunnels, subsonic, transonic, supersonic, hypersonic, for the testing of aircraft, missile and airborne component models. Ten pressure tanks, and tensile and compressive load testing machines are among the devices used by the Structural Mechanics Laboratory in research on hull structures for ships, deep-diving submarines and deep-sea research vehicles. Mechanical generators in the Acoustics and Vibration Laboratory can produce known forces in structures ranging from small items of machinery to complete ships.

5. The management of the Model Basin is interested in your professional development. It provides you with the opportunity to receive financial assistance and time (up to 8 hours a week) to attend classes at one of the six major universities in the immediate area, which offer courses in virtually every field. In addition, a number of graduate courses are conducted at the Model Basin. Under a new program, several employees are now engaged in full or 3/4-time advanced academic study and receiving full salary as well as all their expenses.

6. At the David Taylor Model Basin, you can reach the $10,000 to $12,000 level within four years. In addition, as a Civil Service employee, you get generous vacations and sick leave, inexpensive life and health insurance, and enjoy the benefits of an unusually liberal retirement program.

7. Within minutes of the Model Basin are the suburbs of Maryland and Virginia offering excellent living conditions, unusual recreational facilities, and some of the best public school systems in the country. Because the Washington area is a center for scientific research as well as for government, it boasts a large concentration of people of intellectual and cultural attainments. Washington, D. C. with its museums, art galleries, libraries and points of historical interest is just 12 miles from the Model Basin.

For more information about the David Taylor Model Basin and the opportunity it offers you, see the interviewer who visits your campus or write directly to Mr. S. DiMaria, Head, Office of Civilian Personnel.

PROFILE...

month rent included electricity, water and all utilities. Noel said he had a great time at the University and wouldn't trade his years there for anything.

"It was the most enjoyable experience of my life. However, I don't believe that I would enjoy it as much now. The University might have gotten too big to be as much of a personal experience as it was then."

Although enthused over the new Alumni Stadium, with its seating capacity of 25,000, Noel shed a tear for old Alumni Field, the scene of his college heroics.

"I felt sad to see where it was being torn down. When we filled the bleachers with 3000 fans and ran onto the field hearing the cheers of the crowd, it was as good to us as filling Yankee Stadium."

Nostalgia changed to enthusiasm as Noel spoke of his old friend Warren McGuirk who came to head the UMass School of Physical Education appropriately enough in 1949, Noel's freshman year. Noel said:

"All the progress that UMass football has made in the past few years can be directly attributed to McGuirk. His perseverance in changing the athletic scholarship structure and in working for construction of Boyden and Alumni Stadium has paid off."

In 1952 the highest amount a football player could receive was fifty dollars a semester. This tight-fisted attitude on the part of the University combined with the then low academic standards made UMass a place for football players to shun. UMass had to recruit players who were too dumb to get into any other school and this produced disastrous results. In 1950 the freshman squad went undefeated. But when the fall of '51 rolled around, only three players were left from the thirty-seven players on that squad. The thirty-four others had flunked out.

McGuirk realized that this was no way to build a football team.

"To get around the University's scholarship policy," Reebacker related, "McGuirk got the vending-machine concession for the entire University. The monies from the concession went into athletic scholarships."

"Now that the University is able to offer scholarships and has raised its academic standards, it is not avoided by good football players any longer," said Noel.

"It is amazing how the reputation of UMass has been improved in the past five or six years," Noel said. "When I first started coaching Marblehead in 1959, high school coaches discouraged their players from going to UMass. Now coaches steer their best players to the University."

Strangely enough Reebacker has not been to see a UMass football game since he left as a coach here in 1955. The only time he has been back was to participate in the Alumni-Varsity football game held by the M-Club last spring. Coaching duties at Marblehead have kept him tied up.

Oh, and what kind of an offense does Marblehead High use under ace-passer Reebacker? In their Thanksgiving Day triumph over Swampscott, Marblehead threw only one pass which was completed for a gain of two yards, while overwhelming Swampscott with their running attack.

Basketball Game UM vs BU Curry Hicks Wednesday Night

Intramural Report

By Dave Jaros

Now, after the Thanksgiving break the intramural winter sports get into full swing this week with basketball, bowling, and handball highlighting the agenda.

A record number of 76 teams started competition last night in quest of the campus championship in basketball. There are many strong teams and ties for league championships loom as strong probabilities, particularly in the dorm leagues, where most of the clubs appear exceptionally well matched.

Bowling, which has already started, has produced few surprises. After two rounds TEP, defending campus champ, leads the A league with a perfect 16-0 mark. PSD and QTV are close behind with 14-2 slates. In the B fraternity league TKE leads the pack with a 16-0 record and is closely followed by PMD, which stands at 14-2. Only one round has been completed in the dorm leagues and several teams are unbeaten. As usual the Grayson Flaming A's are among those with perfect records.

In handball, there are a record number of entries (59), as seems to be the case with all intramural sports this year. Kappa Sig's defending campus champion, Al Caruso, will be hard pressed to retain his crown.

Coach Gladchuk is still looking for basketball officials. Anyone who is interested is urged to sign up in the intramural office.

SWIMMING...

Lack of depth has always been a problem for Coach Rogers' teams, and this year is no exception. However, this year's Freshman squad, led by Prep-School All-American Bob Asquith, has excellent depth, and along with Mike Donehue, Pat McMahon, Dick Keyes, Flip Morton, Dave Larson and Bob Joyce should provide the power for future seasons.

The Mermen open on Dec. 4 against Tufts at the Boyden Pool in an important meet which will determine how much the spirit and effort of the team will contribute to a potential winning season for the fourth straight year.

The mermen will be competing against such powerhouses as Bowdoin, Wesleyan, Amherst, M.I.T., Coast Guard, and Holy Cross.

COLLEGE CAPER WEEKEND AT GROSSINGER'S Fri., Sat., Sun., Dec. 17, 18, 19

CALLING ALL COLLEGE STUDENTS!

Take advantage of the coming holidays. Enjoy the gala College Caper Weekend at Grossinger's, December 17-19. It'll be a "carnival" of fun, frolic, festivities, and festivities. # Morin, Meers, Toner, Ellis Chosen In Pro Draft End Milt Morin drafted by the Browns of the NFL in the first round.

By JOHN CUNNINGHAM

The Redmen have come a long way since John McCormack signed with the Minnesota Vikings in 1952 to become the first UMass player to play professional football. This year no less than four UMass players were drafted in Saturday as both the American Football League and the National Football League held their player drafts.

Both Milt Morin and Bob Meers, the two top ends in Massachusetts and starters at the University for the last three years were drafted. Milt Morin was the first round choice of the Cleveland Browns of the NFL and a 3rd round choice of the San Diego Chargers of the AFL. As of yet no news has been received of Milt's signing with either one of these teams. Milt is in an excellent bargaining position and is probably in no hurry to make his decision.

Bob Meers, the split end of the Meers-Morin combination, has signed a contract with the Minnesota Vikings of the NFL who had chosen him as their seventh round draft pick. It is rumored that the Vikings are going to convert Meers into a tight end. At 6'3", 215 lbs., Meers is not quite big enough now, but the pros know how to beef up a player. Nick Buonocenti of the Boston Patriots was considered too light for the pros at 185 but they pushed his weight up to his present 220 and he became an All-League linebacker.

Ed Toner, Junior tackle for the Redmen was a future draft choice of the Philadelphia Eagles (NFL) on the eighteenth round.

Ed Toner, tackle, was drafted by the Eagles as a future choice.

Toner still has a year of eligibility left and is not expected to sign any contracts until after his senior year. Probably Philadelphia is expecting to use Toner as a linebacker since his 220 lbs. is not going to be heavy enough to make the grade as a pro tackle. 6'2", Toner seems to be about as heavy now as he could be without slowing himself down considerably.

Bob Ellis, the co-captain of the Redmen, who was injured and unable to play this year was picked up on the fifteenth round by the Cleveland Browns of the NFL. The Browns intend to use Ellis as a defensive back. If the ECAC decides on Ellis' side he may have a year of college eligibility left. He probably will not sign a contract until he has used up his eligibility.

Bob Meers signed a contract with the Minnesota Vikings.

Bob Ellis was a draft pick of the Browns as a defensive back.

Basketball Seating Limited

The Department of Public Safety has limited the basketball attendance figure for the student sections on the floor in the Curry Hicks Cage to 3200. Student admissions must be terminated when this figure has been reached, and as a result, for the more attractive games we may not be able to accommodate all who wish to attend. ## Returning Letterman Aid Swimming Team

The UMass Swimming team returning almost fully intact from last year's winning season, is looking forward to an even better year.

The team, practicing regularly since Registration Day, is sparked by the return of Senior Co-Captains, Dick Daniels and Frank Wilson. Dick, who has been steadily closing in on N. E. Champion Mike Rothschild's school records in the Freestyle distance events, is looking better than ever. Frank, a consistent point-getter last season, has also shown improvement, and Coach Rogers expects fine things from him this year.

Ken Nowak, '68, perhaps the finest freestyle sprinter Joe Rogers has coached, has been converted to the backstroke this year due to lack of depth in this event. Ken, who does all strokes well, should prove valuable in any event he is called to compete in.

Steve Levy, '67, U.M. record holder in the 200 yd. butterfly event, has already equalled his best time of last year in practices and should improve with several weeks to go before the first meet.

The 50 and 100 yd. freestyle events rest solely in the hands of Junior Chip Wyser, who scored consistently in these races last year.

Dick Lennon, a specialist in the Individual Medley, should prove to be among New England's best in this event. Dick will also be swimming alongside of Ted Severn, '67, in the 200 yd. Breaststroke. Ted, a transfer student ineligible last year, could very possibly improve on Charlie Monnier's record in this event before the season ends.

Diving prospects are excellent with the return of Soph Tony Roubound, and converted breast-stroker, Dick D'Andrea. Norm Lovitch and Dwight Hamblett, Juniors, and Al Levine, Fred Anderson and Paul Belanger, Soph, will fill in the gaps and should get their share of points.

ALUMNUS PROFILE: Noel Reebenacker

By JOHN CUNNINGHAM

The name of Noel Reebenacker has been mentioned many times this fall in the Collegian sport pages. Reebenacker is the former UMass quarterback who in 1952 set most of the Redmen passing and total offense records which stood until Greg Landry came along this year.

In an interview Reeb commented about Greg Landry, UMass football and his years at the University.

Reeb was interviewed the day after his Marblehead High School football team beat traditional rivals, Swampscott, 16-2 in their annual Thanksgiving Day Game. Since 1959 Noel has been head football coach at Marblehead (Marblehead is a famous old Massachusetts seaport). Marblehead High has won two Northeastern Conference championships during Noel's seven years at the school, and Noel has become one of the most highly regarded high school coaches in Massachusetts.

Does Reeb regret the fact that his records have been surpassed by Landry?

"No," he said. "UMass football has improved tremendously since I played, and I always knew that some day somebody was going to come along to break my records. I hope he breaks the few records I still hold next season. I know he is capable of it."

Noel, who is 5'10", said that he believes he would be too short to play football the way it is being played today.

"A quarterback has to be tall to see over the backs of the big offensive linemen that are playing today. Landry at 6'3" is the perfect size for a modern quarterback."

During his undergraduate years at the university, Noel was a member of the Maroon Key and of Kappa Sig fraternity. He said that he didn't participate in any other extracurricular activities because playing football and studies took up most of his time. After graduation, Noel stayed on at the University for three more years coaching football and obtaining his Master's Degree in Math under Dr. Anderson who was head of the Math department at that time.

During the last two years of his undergraduate career and while he was in graduate school, Noel and his wife lived in E-1 Hampshire House. He cherishes many fond memories of Hampshire House, where the $35 per (Continued on page 11)

DRAKE TO BE BOTTLED?

Neighbors Protest License Renewal

Traditional meeting place of UMass students, the Drake is facing possible loss of its liquor license.

by GORDON DAVIDSON
Day Editor

One of the traditional University gathering places is threatened with extinction as the Amherst selectmen decided to give "further consideration" to renewal of the Village Inn's liquor license, after approving 18 other alcoholic license renewals.

The action was prompted by complaints from the Inn's neighbors who submitted a petition with about 40 names to the Selectmen asking that the Drake's license be discontinued.

Fifteen of the petitioners attended the meeting of the Selectmen. Their complaints centered on the behavior of the Inn's patrons, chiefly university students, not on the operation for the establishment. Their spokesman, Dr. Sheldon Clapps stated that "uncontrolled noise at nighttime, arguing, yelling, and swearing (I don't mind the swearing if it wasn't so loud), noisy automobile mufflers, throwing snowballs at window panes, breaks in the hedge, big brown areas of dead grass," were some of the major complaints.

OTHER PETITIONERS complained chiefly of noise, but also mentioned "upchuck" on their front lawns, lovemaking in the bushes, discarded beer cans and bottles," and other annoyances.

Bradford Parker, manager of the Inn, pointed out that cans of beer are not sold at the Rathskeller, and have to come from another source. "When a patron leaves the Drake there is little that can be done to control their behavior," he said.

Parker stated that he has always acted upon any criticism from residents and the police and has tried to control the behavior of patrons "to some extent". A policeman is hired to check identification, watch patrons as they leave, and warn the noisy ones.

PARKER suggested the possibility of having a police cruiser outside the Inn from 11:30 to 12:30 to curb disturbances. "Ninety-nine and a half percent of the students are the greatest kids in the world, but in any group of 12,000 people there a bound to be a few who cause trouble."

"We have had many student suggestions which we have acted upon, and it was university girls who suggested that the beer be poured at the bar, eliminating the broken bottles on the floor."

The Selectmen will meet early next week to make their final decision on the fate of the Drake.

Med. School Delayed; Suit Raps Worcester

Progress on the UMass Medical School has been halted for four months following a decision by state Supreme Court Justice Arthur E. Whittemore. He ordered that a suit filed against the proposed Worcester site be turned over to the seven-judge board to hear arguments by taxpayers, which cannot be completed for at least four months, however.

The suit reflected the opinion of the Massachusetts Taxpayers' Association for Quality Medical Education, headed by heart specialist Dr. Paul Dudley White, which argued that "cost of duplicating facilities which already exist on the university's main campus" is an improper use of trustee power. Arguments also were raised concerning the cost of building the school in Worcester rather than in Western Massachusetts.

In the legislature, action was held up on Gov. Volpe's request for $1.75 million to proceed with land acquisition and architect's plans for the Worcester site. Anthony M. Scibelli (Springfield), chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, questioned the finances of the Worcester location. He viewed the move to establish the UM branch in Worcester at a cost of some $250,000 as something of fiscal insanity. "We just don't have the money for it," Scibelli declared.

After reviewing figures, Scibelli said that the school would cost twice in Worcester what it would in Amherst. "If we go to Worcester, we have to build another university," he stated.

The Worcester site which has been selected is not part of the Worcester State Hospital, and is being used primarily for farming purposes. Classrooms, laboratories, and student housing will constitute a major expenditure of the medical school as well as the construction of a 400-bed hospital to be used for training purposes. Presently the completion date of the school has been set by Gov. Volpe and the UMass trustees as 1970.

Senate Elects Greenquist; Gives 'Yahoo' Go-Ahead

by KAREN ROSE
Senate Editor

"The most important thing most of us (senators) have to realize is that we need to let the student body know what we are doing," said John Greenquist shortly after his election to the Vice Presidency of the Student Senate at Wednesday's meeting.

He went on to say, "If more people are made to know what is going on in the senate it is my hope that they will become involved in student affairs. After all it is the students that we are supposedly working for."

gin of 30-13. Throughout the campaign speeches it was stressed that both nominees were qualified for the position insofar as scholastics, past activities, and such.

IN A MOTION compounded by parliamentary and personal rigamarole, the approval was given to Yahoo to publish again. The motion read "Resolved to accept the preliminary report of the Yahoo Investigation Committee to remove the funds from escrow."

Dissension developed here as to whether or not to accept the report. Senator Mark Tobin was among those who felt that the report should be mended.

Two bills concerning by-laws were passed at the meeting.

THE FIRST BILL, the work of Senator Gary Bombardier (Gorman), empowers the Senate Executive Committee to act on behalf of the Senate between the final meeting of the academic year and the first meeting of the following one. Bombardier stressed that the work of the Senate "is a 12 month operation".

The other by-laws bill stipulated that the Senate treasurer be ex-officio chairman of both the Budgets and Finance committees. This move was explained by Senator Bob Cripps (Mills) who said it is essential that the treasurer have a hand in selection of chairmen for these committees. He said he felt the treasurer must have someone knowledgeable in these areas to work with and pointed out that the treasurer is in a position to judge the qualifications of persons recommended to these posts.

It was also moved and passed at the meeting that the Senate recommend that Hugh Montgomery, Librarian of the University, requests that the Inter-Library Loan Service extend privileges (to use books from any of the libraries in the Four College group) to include undergraduates—sophomores or freshmen—enrolled in junior-senior courses at the University.

A NUMBER OF BILLS were tabled including Senator Garjian's resolution that the Senate "Recommend to the Administration that any personal evaluations of a student written by another student and held by said Administration (i.e. Dean of Students, Dean of Men, Dean of Women, etc.) be made available to the evaluated student and appropriate appeal be allowed if necessary."

In debate on the issue Senator Tobin said that he felt that legislation is not necessary on the situation and furthermore that the dossiers under discussion are available to the student upon request.

Senator Allen commented that "no doubt the administration realizes the situation... but not the problem."

DVP to Present Jules Feiffer

The Distinguished Visitors' Program is sponsoring a two part presentation on Jules Feiffer, noted cartoonist, satirist and author. On Sun., Dec. 5 at 8:00 p.m. in Mahar Auditorium, the Feiffer Film, in which actors recreate his cartoons, will be presented.

Mr. Feiffer will speak on "The Role of the Satirist in American Society" on Wed., 8:00 p.m., in the S.U. Ballroom. There is no charge for either event.

Feiffer's comic strips appear in 65 US newspaper, and leading magazines, including a monthly cartoon in PLAYBOY. LIFE MAGAZINE described them as "biting, intellectual, and strongly flavored with Freud".

Extending his talents to writing, he has turned out seven books, including a novel. The UNEXPURGED MEMOIRS OF BERNARD MERGENDELER (Random House), a cartoon collection, was released this fall along with the film.

It is the mark of Jules Feiffer's success that he has "made it" — as one of his Greenwich Village characters might put it — on his own terms, not by trying to sell something, but by trying to say something. More important, what he is saying is worth hearing.

25 Million Dollars

Expansion Needs More Fuel

In a message submitted to the State House of Representatives last week, Governor John Volpe asked for an increase in the amount of bonds which may be issued by the UMass building Authority in order to meet the needs of a rapidly growing University.

The request was for an additional $25 million to be added to the original $35 million already committed to provide housing facilities to cover the planned enrollment until 1973.

The additional $25 million is needed for:

- four dorms ready for construction bids

- four additional dorms and a dining commons that are presently in the design stage

- plus housing and dining facilities for 1,400 additional students on which design must begin immediately in order to meet the needs of these students by 1969.

In a letter to Governor Volpe, President Lederle wrote:

Your enthusiastic support of your State University is providing increased educational opportunities to thousands of our young people who otherwise would have no place to go. We all know that the future development of our Commonwealth and our Nation depends more than ever before on a highly educated people. I am indeed pleased to recommend this further expansion to you.

Presenting the University's request to the House Gov. Volpe said:

It is estimated that the authority needs a minimum of $25,000,000, in addition to the amount currently authorized, to meet the cost of construction of these added facilities. Not only is this construction desirable to meet the growing needs of the University; but also this method of providing the needed facilities is the most economical manner in which these needs can be met.

The proposal is now set to go before the House Ways and Means Committee for further action.

Tri-College Radio To Air Specials

The Pioneer Broadcasting System, composed of WMUA, The University of Massachusetts), WAMF (Amherst College) and WMHC (Mount Holyoke College), will present two Sunday shows weekly—Sounds of Literature—7:30 p.m. nights from Mt. Holyoke and News Probe at 11 p.m.

Sounds of Literature will feature a professor from Mt. Holyoke reading different Masterpieces of Western Literature.

News Probe is a 30 minute broadcast including 10 minutes of news headlines, a 10 minute analysis of UPI news, and a 10 minute discussion with a teacher from one of the colleges on a current topic.

Also broadcasted on the Pioneer Broadcasting System will be special shows such as concerts and lectures from the three participating schools. This Sunday, Dec. 5, will begin the new season.

SENATOR NEEDS PUBLICITY . . .

Also commenting on the issue Senator Larry Marcus ('69 at large) pointed out that the fact that these evaluations are considered confidential and secret is bad psychologically. He went on to say that these person views made by the counselors "can and do definitely hit at the pride of a person".

Tim Cunningham's bill to accept the final report of the Yahoo Committee was also tabled. This bill was created as an outgrowth of the other Yahoo bill brought up at the meeting.

Cunningham explained that the Investigatory Committee felt that there was no reason to hold Yahoo publication up during the investigation. "The problem can be solved while Yahoo is at work," he said.

SENATOR JERRY BENEZRA also urged that Yahoo funds be taken out of escrow so that the magazine can publish and, as he put it, "The eyes of the campus are looking at us on this issue."

In other business the constitution of the Young Republicans Club was accepted and, under special business an AdHoc Committee was established to study the Med School situation.

Senator Benezra, who agreed with Senators Downes (Hills North) and Gurwitz (Married Students), who formed the bill urged passage in order to coordinate this committee "to a precise degree".

Announcements included the resignation of Senators Jim Watson and Dave Blaisdell, both commuters and another of President Richard Dacey's ('66 at large) steps to revamp the senate.

Dacey announced that each senate meeting in the future will open with a 15 minute question-answer period prior to the business of the meeting. It is hoped that this will cut down on the amount of time spent on individual bills brought to the floor.

The only other action at the meeting was an increase in the appropriation of the Foreign Student Loan from $500 to $700 due to the increasing number of foreign students expected on campus.

YAF "Debate-In" Planned At Smith

Young American's for Freedom announced recently that 'Debate-In's' on the war in Vietnam have been scheduled for Dec. 7, on 22 campuses across the country with "very good prospects for at least another 25 campuses."

The 'Debate-In's' will feature debates between college members of Young Americans for Freedom, the nation's largest conservative youth organization, and representatives of Students for a Democratic Society, the left wing pacifist organization which is calling for an immediate end to the war in Vietnam.

MAJOR COLLEGES and universities where 'Debate-In's' will be held include Smith Col., City College of New York, Univ. of Michigan, Univ. of Illinois, Univ. of Wisconsin, Bradley Univ., Colgate Univ. and Michigan State University.

"We have very good prospects," said Tom Huston, YAF national chairman, "for at least 25 more 'Debate-In's' on campuses in such states as California, Texas, Pennsylvania, Oklahoma, Ohio, and Indiana."

"We are most pleased," Huston said, "that Young Americans for Freedom is the sponsor of a format—'Debate-In's'—which allows both sides to speak their minds and present their arguments."

"We feel" said Huston, "it is appropriate that these debates be held on Dec. 7, the 24th anniversary of Pearl Harbor Day, to remind all those participating and listening of the great sacrifices which Americans have made for freedom in the past."

THE 'DEBATE-IN'S' are part of a larger YAF project called, The International Youth Crusade for Freedom in Vietnam.

The Crusade will climax on Jan. 7, and 8, 1966, with rallies in major American, Asian, and European cities. The rallies are scheduled on Jan. 7 and 8 for Korea, Formosa, the Philippines, Thailand and India as well as several cities in Europe.

The major American rally will be held in Washington, D.C., on Jan. 8. At least six other rallies will be held in major U.S. cities.

Senate Recommends Evaluations Be Made Available

by KAREN ROSE
Senate Reporter

The resolution made by Senator Mike Garjian (southwest C) that the Student Senate recommend to the Administration that any personal evaluations of a student written by another student and held by the Administration (i.e. Dean of Men, Dean of Women, etc.) be made available to the evaluated student and appropriate appeal be allowed if necessary was the direct result of specific incident in which a student was jeopardized because of this report.

UPON HEARING OF this situation Senator Garjian along with former senator Dave Blaisdell started looking into the situation by making appointments with various administrators including deans Hopkins and Barnard.

These appointments drew more attention to the issue and students and counselors alike started to complain about the situation, and as a result, a poll was drawn up and distributed to the housemothers to give to their respective councils concerning the evaluation sheets.

HERE WERE SOME 247 polls sent out and 82 were returned, of them 69 were filled out.

The main complaint of the counselors was that they felt that new counselors had no background to participate in such a poll but the results of the study indicated that the feelings of the new counselors coincided with those of the more experienced council members.

THE QUESTIONS ON the poll included 1) Do you object in any way to having to write these evaluations? To this the overwhelming vote was in the negative. The answer to the second question, which was do you feel that personal opinions or prejudices could enter these evaluations, was yes.

The majority of those answering the poll felt that these evaluations do serve a useful purpose. The majority also felt that these dossiers should not be made available to the students, and further that they should be continued.

THE EVALUATION sheets under discussion were used in at least some of the residence halls last year. Included in the sheet is the following statement: We are interested in such things as Appearance, Health, Control, Family Relationship, Personality, Social Adjustment, Leadership, Attitude toward the Opposite sex, etc.

One evaluation sheet released by the Dean of Men's office contains such items as counselor judgment on study habits—which included student ability to read and comprehend, take notes, study for exams, and effective concentration. It further includes items such as social contacts within the specific counselor's unit, leadership within this group, group participation, personal appearance, care of room, and the question "would you want the student in your unit, if you were to be a counselor next year?"

Alongside each of the above mentioned items is found a number of choices to be checked by the counselor in his evaluation. Under the item personal appearance the following choices are listed: very neat, takes pride in his appearance, (2) neat, (3) sometimes neat, sometimes not, (4) usually not neat nor orderly, and (5) always a mess.

COMMENTING ON the study, Senator Garjian pointed out that many students are unaware that they are being watched in their private lives within the dorms.

He went on to bring attention to the fact that some counselors want these dossiers kept confidential and secret because they do not want students to see what they are doing about them.

Garjian said, "This implies to me that the primary concern of these counselors may be for themselves—if the evaluations are objective they should have no qualms about letting individuals see them." Thus far the results of Garjian's actions have revealed the possibility of a new evaluation sheet—probably of the check sheet style, and another direct result is the general knowledge to the students that such action is and has been carried on by the University.

The Student Senate has tabled this bill until more information is gathered so that constructive measures can be undertaken.

Maroon Keys to Guide Freshmen

by JIM FOUDEY
News Editor

In an attempt to reestablish the basic constitutional purposes of its organization, the Maroon Keys, a sophomore men's honorary society, will experiment with a new program of freshman orientation, beginning with this summer's swing shift students.

THEIR NEW approach to orientation assigns 10 - 15 swing-shift freshmen to each of the 25 Maroon Key members in a program which Key Pres. Bob Tobin likened to "big brother systems at other colleges."

Each Key is now writing to their assigned "little brothers and sisters" in the first stage of the program which Tobin considers "an attempt to dispel some of the fears a frosh has of a University our size."

Later stages of the orientation include:

- an information booth at registration

- a free registration dance
- and a freshman convocation run entirely by the Keys to acquaint freshmen with UM life and activities.

THE CONVOCATION, which will include speeches by Keys, Pres. Lederle and former swing-shifters, will be followed by programs covering both academic and extracurricular affairs.

"A lot of people think that it's a good idea," Tobin pointed out and cited the help he has been receiving from Dr. Alfred Southworth, Director of Guidance, Dr. Mark Noffsinger, Coordinator of Student Activities and Ken Suid.

Explaining the new procedure, Tobin said that it was based on a system followed presently at Amherst, some Ivy League colleges as well as many other American campuses and feels that it is a "worthwhile project . . . something we are all excited about."

TOBIN stressed that each campus honorary should have "a definite main purpose to tie it in with the University," but pointed out that other activities of the Keys such as bonfires, rallies and dances would not be abandoned.

"It is a strengthening of our original purpose," he said.

The summer program is a vanguard for a permanent orientation program—if it is successful!

Tobin feels that the biggest problem will be getting support from upperclassmen. "We can't have people in the dorms discouraging freshmen to attend the convocation and programs," he said.

Key Sec. Dick Bloom sees a further problem with student apathy to such a program. "We want the summer students to become a part of their class," he pointed out. "They are big wheels in the summer when there are relatively few people on campus, but when they come back they get lost in the crowd."

FEW COLLEGES IMPROVE GRADING SYSTEMS

by KATHYRN SEDERBERG

(Second of three articles.)

Despite widespread dissatisfaction with current grading practices, only a handful of small colleges has implemented evaluation systems which minimize or eliminate grades. A survey of 54 universities and liberal arts colleges in 1964 revealed that 43 use the conventional letter grades, five use numerical grades, three use special letter grades (such as H, S and U), two issue no grades except for college use and one

Fair Play For Good Work

by NANCY LEIBOVITZ

Imagine an outside worker glancing through the classified ads and spying the notice:

Wanted: persons for general kitchen work, part-time, irregular hours, $1.00 an hour. Only persons expecting hard work need apply.

More than likely he would chuckle, think how ridiculous can they be, and pass on to the next ad—the one offering the higher wages. After all, who could support himself on a dollar an hour?

Yet this is exactly what the student workers in our University dining commons do and they do it gladly. They are working at the commons because college is expensive and any extra funds help. However, prices have risen in the past year and the squeeze on the student wallet is getting tighter.

To combat this problem a group of responsible commons student employees have sought the support of the Student Senate. In a petition they ask that the administration raise their wages from $1.00 to $1.25 an hour. It seems like a reasonable request!

Many of these students do not have meal tickets themselves and must pay prices far higher than outside workers and even higher than meal ticket holders to eat at university facilities. Subtract $2.40, which is the cost of a day's food for a student employee at the commons, from the 3 or 4 hours a day that he works and it doesn't leave much to put in the bank!

These students do not ask for much. They only desire to obtain what any outside worker would demand—$1.25 an hour, the minimum wage. As young men and women who care enough to take time away from their studies every day in order to continue their education, they deserve to receive adequate compensation for their labors.

Editor's Note: Anyone desiring more information on the petition may contact the Collegian Editorial Office on the second floor of the Student Union or write to the Editor, Collegian, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, Mass.

Med School

The Light of Hope Glimmers

by JAMES HORVITZ

Recently a bill calling for the University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees to reconsider their decision to locate the medical school in Worcester was soundly defeated in the Massachusetts state legislature. The trustees have made their choice and have nothing more to say about the issue.

However, there still remains a bill in the Ways and Means committee regarding appropriation of funds for the site. If enough support is rendered to the cause, these funds might still be appropriated to the Amherst location.

It was found on the last vote that several state legislators actually voted blindly on the issue, and many more simply did not vote. When and if the Appropriations Bill comes to the floor, the vote could be for Amherst if enough of these legislators can be convinced of its merits.

During Christmas vacation the UMass Student Senate is going to wage a quiet campaign with such an end in mind. As many student senators as possible plan to talk to their state legislators. If such an arrangement is not feasible they will see any doctors, lawyers, businessmen, or anyone who might have any influence with the local legislators. If these legislators can see what Amherst has to offer over Worcester, and if those previously ignorant in the matter can learn something, then Amherst will still have a fighting chance for the funds.

The state legislature is ultimately more powerful in regard to the school site than the Board of Trustees. By approaching these legislators the UMass Student Senate is doing its sincere utmost, without provoking excessive publicity, to insure The University of having a med school in its own back yard.

The chances of being successful in this maneuver are only miniscule. The Worcester site has already been chosen and is virtually locked up. Repercussions can occur if the issue is carried too far. Yet, we, the students of this University, must speak out in behalf of the Amherst site. The Student Senate is doing this and doing it in the right way. Although it would be futile to be optimistic, we can still be hopeful.

Not a Drop to Drink

There is an historic tradition behind drinking taverns located near universities. It was in the beer drenched rathskellers of Berlin, the wine-flowing diners of Paris, and the liquor-smelling basements of Moscow that students, professors, and other intellectuals gathered together to plan and begin the great wave of liberalism which swept Europe in the nineteenth century. The ivy walls of Yale and Harvard have rung for generations with the clanging of beer glasses and the cheerful drinking songs of students. And at UMass, too, students have found a tradition. For years Drake's Village Inn has been the favorite spot for students to relax, share experiences, and discuss present day topics, while sipping their favorite beverage.

A lot of people may laugh at this comparison of The Drake with the legendary beer halls of Europe where young revolutionaries plotted the future of their nations, but the fact remains that The Drake, just like the taverns of Europe, has much tradition behind it. It has become a well-known landmark by which many alumni mark the beginning of their homecoming arrival and in which many students celebrate their graduation.

Of course, the residents of Amherst have an honest complaint in decrying the trouble caused by some patrons of The Drake. But a better solution would be to set up stricter penalties for those who create public disturbances, rather than do away with, in one, quick, thoughtless, stroke, an establishment which is a genuine institution of the University.

Letters To The Editor

The Collegian editorial staff welcomes your comments and questions. It is requested, however, that all letters be typed at 60 spaces per line, and that only one side of the paper be used. All letters must be signed with your real name and address— withheld upon request. All letters should be addressed: Letters to The Editor, Collegian, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, Mass. Your cooperation will be appreciated.

The Investigation

To the Editor:

In view of the delicacy of the situation concerning the photographing of participants at the Viet Nam Teach-Out (Oct. 17) by Director of Security Marchant, I would like to comment on the article which appeared in the Dec. 1 Collegian.

First, the article is, as far as it goes, accurate in all essential points. But, secondly, the article is incomplete, and it should be known that though the Faculty Senate Student Affairs Committee did consider a motion, made by me, that the President instruct the Security Officer that neither he nor his subordinates in official or unofficial capacity, may investigate the activities of student groups, I and other members of the committee believe that this motion has a number of undesirable features: first, that the clause "in official or unofficial capacity" would, if accepted, unduly infringe upon the private life of members of the Security force; second, that the sweeping character of the motion would prohibit investigative activities which we believe to be legitimate. Thus the second motion, which Miss Roland reports on in her article, is now defunct. The committee, however, is presently considering alternatives which we hope will effectively express our intentions with regard to proper University policy toward student political activity.

The Spiritual Agora

By GEORGIOS PAN PIPEROPOULOS

Smiley Apollo's disc hangs in the middle of the blue cupola of the Attic sky; gleaming, the sun rays bathe softly in the magic of the Aegian; and up on the hill of Acropolis, the Pantic marble sparkles with beautiful finesse.

Down around the olive tree, the young faces seem dreamy; the eyes, the spirit, are absorbed within one focus: The Master. Plato is speaking slowly; his words, ideas, concepts, fall softly in the fertile ground of the young intellects.

Within arm's length the other group is pacing rhythmically; no rushing is necessary. Aristotle speaks in pauses. Each phrase becomes a premise; from each set of premises a conclusion is drawn, carefully . . .

The mystique of learning, at its best!

But that's past, gone, never to return. Modern Greek universities, and European also, have lost this mystifying quality of intimacy in the act of learning and teaching.

To a regretful extent education has lost its intrinsic value of being something beautiful, an intellectual pursuit.

The spiritual agora lays now, forever concealed behind the shadows of the eclipse; the eclipse that Urbanism produced.

Greek and European institutions of learning are conceived under one premise: To Serve the Elite. The small percentage of those who can afford it, compared to that of the young minds who are ready for it, who could profit by it, is overwhelmingly depressing.

In the U.S., fellow student, you are fortunate. Your social philosophy rich with Democratic ideals, both by necessity and by the efforts of unique minds (see Dewey et. al.) has made education available to the public at large.

This is something in which America has excelled and as a Nation you deserve both the due credit and respect.

But whether modern American institutions of learning are examples of the "true" Spiritual Agora, is something debatable. I will not attempt to discuss it.

I will make one concluding remark, however, concerning the merchant (the professor) who displays his "goods" in American universities.

The American professor is a unique being. And the characteristic uniqueness of his happens to be a common denominator for all, the Giants and the Retailers in this "spiritual agora."

He is simple, friendly, most of the time understanding and concerned with his students as much as he is concerned with his intellectual endeavors.

His European counterpart is, unfortunately for the European student, preserved, withdrawn, self-centered and unapproachable.

A student might sometimes have to fill out an application form in order to have a conference with his professor!

This unique quality, that I as a European student, find invaluable in the personality of a professor in the U.S., seems to be disappearing lately, due mainly to preoccupation with research and publishing.

It would be a shame, if the "humanity" of the American professor gets lost in the shadows of the "eclipse" that Urbanization and "mass education" brought forth.

It is unique and wonderful. It must be preserved.

Dr. Post Office — Advisor

By Jerome S. Horvitz, Editorial Associate Chairman

'Counseling day.' What a farce! It is supposed to be a time for the student to choose his courses for the following semester, and to ask any questions concerning requirements or curriculum in general.

But in actuality it has turned out to mean nothing more than a long wait in line, maybe for hours, in order to fill out a course card that takes five minutes to complete. It is such a hypocritical process since many of the advisors do not even know the names of those they are to advise. Also, the directory of courses seems, at times, to be a more reliable source. At least it is always available. It is no wonder, then, why a whole day is set aside for one to pre-register. In some cases twenty-four hours is still not enough time.

However, the blame must not be directed toward the advisors for they are caught in a situation in which they are powerless. It is the system that has to be criticized. The problem with the present system is that it exists at all. As it appears now, a student could do better by mailing in his own course card without ever seeing an advisor. In fact this would be a very good corrective measure. Ninety per cent of the questions now asked by students during counseling day could easily be answered by first looking into the directory of courses. If, for any reason, a student was still unable to solve his problem, an advisor could then be seen. In this way he would be treated in a more particularistic manner since the number of students would be very small and the advisor would have more time to devote to each interested individual.

Thus, the day set aside for counseling should be abolished altogether. Why not let the United States mail do the pre-registration? Anyway, it would be more reliable.

A Stride Toward Excellence

By Ellen Levine, Managing Editor

If you keep track of the days when the Collegian appears in your dorm or on the Union lobby counter you will need a calendar next week. There will be four issues instead of three.

Next week has been set aside as Laboratory Week. In the Monday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday issue you will see the results of experimentation with new typography and layout ideas.

The key word next week will be "experiment". But, this is not a new or unfamiliar word with the Collegian. For in our attempt to continually provide an excellent paper, we are always exploring the realm of collegiate and professional journalism.

But the Collegian is not a commercial newspaper. While its purpose remains to provide the campus community with information about the University and its students, the Collegian is also an exercise in journalism. It is a paper by students for the campus community.

Setting aside a week during which innovation can be utilized is the result of our refusal to stagnate or to be satisfied with routine presentation.

The opportunity to experiment cannot be and is not ignored. For only by utilizing our ideas can we be assured that our publication is a quality product.

But quality cannot be measured solely on the basis of a quantity of material. Rather, the criteria for evaluating the Collegian must include how we present material.

Next week we will attempt to show you the possibilities of presentation. But, our attempt will be to no avail if we do not know the reaction of the reader. For the success of a paper must inevitably be evaluated on the basis of who reads it.

When you have read the four issues, let us know what your views are. Stop by the office, tell a staff member or write. Without you, the reader, our exploration and experimentation is in vain. With you, we can continue to achieve excellence.

Although next week will be the fruition of our innovations it does not mark the beginning of the end of our experimentation. For experimentation leads to excellence and excellence is a continual process.

— WATCH IT —

By Gena Corea, Editorial Staff

You better watch your step. And your mouth. And your mind. Your emotions. Your attitudes. Your impulses. Clothes. Breath. Books. Room.

And the next time there's a dorm tea, you better be there, no matter how many other activities you participate in or how many exams you have the next day. And you better show considerable interest and enthusiasm for the tea.

Your counselor is watching you.

Every year, each counselor writes an evaluation of the students on his or her corridor. Housemothers and counselors see these evaluations to determine what perspective constitution may be like. These are available to the Dean's Offices for any purposes they desire.

This situation may be unhealthy.

Many counselors may not know their dorm-mates well enough to judge them.

They make judgments on qualities such as the following. Study Habits: How well does the student concentrate? Is he serious about obtaining an education? Social Contacts: How well does he mix with others on the corridor? Conduct: Is he co-operative? Does he sometimes act impulsively? Group Participation: How often does he participate in group activities, Is he interested and enthusiastic? Personal Appearance: Is he neat or always a mess?

Counselors also judge your family relationships (of which they may have little or no knowledge), social adjustment and personality. They judge your attitude toward the opposite sex.

Counselors are students too. In a recent poll in which 25% of the counselors replied, the majority stated that conflicts and prejudices could enter into these evaluations. And since the administration conflicts and prejudices may use these dossiers for recommendations, they may be detrimental to the student.

A bill has come up in the Student Senate which could partially alleviate this problem. The bill proposes that these dossiers be made available to the student. He could then make an appeal if he feels that the evaluation is unfair.

This bill should be passed.

Campus Maintenance Department Ready For "Old Man Winter"

by WILLIAM TROUPE

Old Man Winter with his cold snowy breath will soon be here, but the University is ready for his arrival.

The maintenance department begins preparation for the winter in mid-October. Workmen make sure all eight truck plows are in top shape. The four sidewalk plows are serviced as are five blowers and two sweepers used in final clean-up operations. Orders are placed for 160 tons of salt and 45 tons of sand used to keep roads safe.

Once everything is ready, usually by mid-November, the crew resumes normal work while on alert for the first snowfall. Alert is effective 24 hours a day. It is not uncommon for a worker to be awakened in early morning to report for storm duty.

Here is an example of how the men fight a snow storm. Snow begins falling at 10 p.m. Campus police keep a watch on the accumulation and when conditions become hazardous for driving and walking they telephone the maintenance foreman who is on call tonight. He spreads word to his crew and within an hour they are ready to go.

The first job is the big hills on campus, such as Van Meter and the Presidents drive. Then the crew sands major roads and drives. If the snow begins to accumulate greatly, the men begin to plow the hills, roads and parking lots. As daylight approaches and snowfall stops, the men clean all the sidewalks with small tractor plows, blowers and sweepers. The roads are replowed and piles of snow accumulated from plowing are removed with front end loaders and dump trucks.

Finishing touches are done with dozens of hand shovels to remove snow from around hydrants and sewers, all of which were marked weeks ago for easy location.

Clean sidewalks and plowed roads and parking lots do not happen haphazardly. They result from carefully planned operations and much work by the men of the road and maintenance departments.

Old Man Winter will soon return with seven feet of snow which falls each year. The road and maintenance department will be ready.

4 Europ. Study Plans Open Until Dec. 10

Four undergraduate academic programs to be offered in Europe next spring will remain open for applications until Friday, Dec. 10, according to their sponsor, the Institute of European Studies, in Chicago.

Located in Freiburg, West Germany, and in Madrid, Paris and Vienna, the programs emphasize liberal arts and social science studies at the sophomore and junior levels. The institute also conducts full academic-year programs in all four locations, as well as in Nantes, France.

IN FREIBURG, students take the regular courses of the Univ. of Freiburg. Applicants must have junior standing, at least B averages, and 2 years of college German or equivalent ability.

Students in the Madrid program select courses from curricula organized under the direction of the university's faculty of political and economic sciences. All instruction is in Spanish. Requirements include junior or sophomore standing, a C-plus average at least, and two years of Spanish.

In Paris, the institute has formed a special spring program emphasizing accelerated development of skills in French, together with studies in other fields. Courses are taught in French by French university professors. Sophomores applying for the program must have three semesters of college French, and juniors five semesters. All must have averages of at least B.

THE SPRING PROGRAM at the University of Vienna offers English-taught courses in a wide variety of fields, intensive German language training, and opportunities for enrollment in regular German-taught courses of the university. One semester of German and an average of at least C-plus are required of sophomores and juniors admitted to this program.

The institute's full-year program in Nantes is the first generally offered for undergraduates majoring in engineering and mathematics, and also admits students majoring in French literature. No spring program is conducted there.

Comprehensive fees range from $1,605-$1,750 for spring programs, and from $2,405-$2,760 for full-year programs.

Students are housed in private European homes or, occasionally, in European student dormitories. Sailings are set for about Feb. 1, with return in mid-summer.

Further information can be obtained from the institute, at 35 E. Wacker Drive, Chicago.

Structure And Function Of Associate Alumni Explained

by CHARLES MITCHELL

"The Associate Alumni exists to further the interests of the University of Massachusetts."

This statement was made by Wesley Honey, assistant to Executive Director Evan Johnston of the Associate Alumni of the University, in a Collegian interview explaining the structure and function of that organization.

"Of the more than 20,000 UM alumni, some reside in every state in the union and 47 foreign countries," he said. "This number is made up of all graduates and students of a year or more duration at this school."

The Associate Alumni, with headquarters in Memorial Hall, opposite Bartlett Hall, helps the University in a variety of ways.

"We spent our money in areas where the University generally can't spend theirs," Honey said. "For instance, we support certain worthy programs from their inception until they are self-supporting."

Among these, he pointed out, were the Fine Arts Weekend, International Weekend and the Massachusetts Review, a literary magazine published on campus. The group also provides scholarships, library books, art acquisition funds, zoology microscopes, faculty growth grants and musical instruments for the University Symphony Orchestra.

The organization maintains communications, he noted, through a quarterly publication, The Alumnus, annual meetings at Homecoming, monthly newsletters to members who give more than $100 and alumni clubs on the local level. Day-to-day affairs are carried on by the campus office and overseen by the association's board of directors, which meets throughout the year.

Funds are basically from a young but loyal alumni who give at a rate two to three times higher than the national average for state universities ($5).

Honey said. The association this year added a professional fundraiser, Bill Lane, who hopes to have established a good program within three to five years.

Honey said that the University's image is "finally gaining" favorable public reaction in both the academic and sports fields. "Any university's image is usually 10 years behind its growth," he explained. This helps fundraising for the alumni and thus helps the school, he said.

New England Gymnastics Clinic Held at UMass

By AL RICE

The University hosted one of the biggest athletic events in its history last weekend when the Boyden Building and Curry Hicks Cage were the scenes of a mammoth gymnastics clinic for some 700 high school and college students from New England, eastern New York, and New Jersey.

The third annual event, sponsored by the Massachusetts High School Gymnastics Coaches Association in conjunction with the Secondary School Principals Association, featured a three part program covering all phases of gymnastic development. It was operated under the instruction of 11 national champions or former Olympians plus 100 student instructors from UMass, Springfield College, Syracuse, West Chester State, and Southern Connecticut State.

Among the well known gymnasts were Abe and Muriel Grossfeld; Don Tonry; Rusty Mitchell; Frank Schmitz, presently a two event NCAA champion; Kathy Corrigan of Weymouth and Springfield College; and Linda Methany, also on the 1964 U.S. Olympic team and now a Springfield freshman.

The large number of students and high school coaches attending the event, necessitated using Boyden's main gym, auxiliary gym, and wrestling room plus the Cage for workout sessions, supervised by the college student instructors. All the Boyden classrooms for the theory sessions were directed by the nationally known competitors.

Equipment for the workout and special problems sessions came from UMass and Springfield College in addition to over $10,000 worth of apparatus supplied by Nissen, the largest manufacturer of gymnastics equipment. Planning for the Friday, Saturday, Sunday affair was mainly handled by Erick Kjeldsen, UMass varsity gymnastics coach and one of five coaches from the University's men and women's Schools of Physical Education serving as instructors at the clinic.

Student instructor focuses his attention on the subject at hand.

Little Known World Wonders

Know where to find the world's largest pyramid? Don't go to Egypt; head for Mexico instead! At Cholula de Rivadavia, near Puebla, you'll find Cholula Pyramid, which qualifies as the biggest monument ever built.

Standing on the site of what once was the chief city of the ancient Toltec kingdom, the pyramid rises 175 feet from a base that covers almost 40 acres, compared to about 12 acres for the Great Pyramid of Cheops. The Mexican pyramid's total volume is 4,300,000 cubic yards, or 700,000 more than the Egyptian pharaoh's more modest monument.

THE WORLD'S LARGEST church is St. Peter's basilica in Rome. The church as we know it today was built between 1492 and 1626, to replace a basilica built in 326 A.D. by the Emperor Constantine over St. Peter's tomb.

The basilica covers 18,100 square yards, and its dome 457 feet 9 inches high makes the basilica also one of the tallest in the world. The famed dome designed by Michelangelo has an inner diameter of 137 feet 9 inches.

An even larger palace is no longer used as a dwelling place, but as a world celebrated museum. The Louvre in Paris was begun for the court of Louis XIV, and the giant palace has additions made during 700 years by 17 different French monarchs.

The Louvre, including the joining Tuileries Gardens, covers 48.9 acres.

NOT QUITE AS ANCIENT, but perhaps more fun, is the world's oldest surviving nightclub, Le Bal des Anglais, open for business since 1843 at 6 rue des Anglais in Paris.

The "city of light" also boasts the world's highest nightclub; located 613 feet above street level on the 52nd story of the new Antigone Building in Montparnasse.

Tristan de Cunha, the most remote island on earth, was discovered by the Portuguese admiral Tristao da Cunha in 1506. This South Atlantic island is 1,320 miles away from its nearest inhabited neighbor, the island of St. Helena.

The closest continent is Africa, 1,700 miles away. At the other extreme, perhaps, is popular Italy, which recently welcomed over 21 million visitors in a single year.

Fun-loving tourists will also probably want to visit the Tivoli Gardens in Copenhagen, Denmark. Tivoli is an amusement park, one of Europe's best-known, but it is much more than that. It has theaters, a concert hall, several bandstands, a pantomime show, ballet, cabarets, an open air stage, as well as numerous and varied restaurants and cafes.

Another well-known amusement park, the Prater in Vienna, has Europe's largest ferris wheel, while is 210 feet high. From the top, passengers have a sweeping view of Vienna from Schonbrunn Castle to Grintzing, and from the Danube to the Vienna woods.

Your head may spin with facts and figures about these superlative sights, thinking about them may turn your head, but seeing them will crowd your mind with lasting memories and pleasure.

The Pyramid of the Sun, one of the ruins of the Toltec civilization, is located at thirty miles northeast of Mexico City.

Sample Exotic Dishes — Eat At Foreign Fiesta!

by M. Aarif Ghayyur

The International Club will hold its big International Food Fiesta Sun., Dec. 5 in the Farley Club and, according to club president Alladin Hashim, "plans are almost ready for the big event."

The Fiesta, beginning at 6:15 p.m., is considered by Hashim as "one of the major events of this year's program."

The arrangements for the Fiesta have been made mainly in cooperation with club members, American friends and student bodies of five different countries on campus.

Hashim feels success will depend on the cooperation received and said he is confident that "the cooperation is forthcoming."

The Fiesta, in the Farley Club behind Machmer Hall, is open to anyone for one dollar and will feature a variety of foods and dishes from different countries.

The underlying purpose, according to Hashim, "is to give an opportunity to both Americans and foreigners to taste foods from different lands," and he feels that the price of a dollar is "quite cheap" for such an opportunity.

Prof. Gordon's Talk

Prof. Milton M. Gordon of Sociology Department will deliver a talk on "Assimilation in America" following the regular weekly coffee hour on Wed., Dec. 8, at 6:30 p.m. in the Governor's Lounge, SU.

Prof. Gordon, who is an accomplished and learned teacher, has two award-winning books to his credit, "Social Classes in American Sociology" and "Assimilation in America." All are cordially invited.

Christmas Party and Dance

The Mortar Board of UMass has organized a Christmas party and informal dance for the members of the International Club on Sat., Dec. 11, in the evening at Amherst.

The party will include a Christmas play.

Those interested should contact Carol Woodcock and Elaine Corse of Mortar Board who are also cabinet members of the International Club.

Johnson & Johnson

Hey! We're not going to the moon, but we are moving like a rocket. Our family of companies makes and markets over 1,000 consumer items. We have doubled our size in the past 10 years making everything from baby powder to sausage casings. And we expect to double our size again in the next 7 years. We need engineering, business, and liberal arts graduates for training programs in Engineering, Finance, Management Services, and Manufacturing. We don't want astronauts, but we do seek men who can rapidly assume real responsibility without being held by the hand for a few years. Talk about challenge! Talk about it with Johnson & Johnson.

CAMPUS INTERVIEWS — DECEMBER 14, 1965

Folk and Freedom Concert: "Friar's Four" To Sing

The Folk and Freedom Singers of St. Paul's College will provide an evening of popular folk music at the Newman Center on Saturday, December 4, at 9 p.m.

The occasion is the New England Regional Conference of Newman Students. The request performance will be one of eight given on a four-day whirlwind tour including the University of Connecticut, Tufts, Assumption College, New York University, and Fairfield.

The unique group, composed entirely of Paulist seminarians, hopes to stimulate interest in the priesthood through its tour. Its previous performances at George Washington University, Catholic U., Howard U., and American U., have met with overwhelming success.

Pat Hughes, a graduate of Boston College, organized the group. He is known to many who frequented "Charlie's" on Cape Cod where he got his start on the banjo. John Doyle learned the guitar during his years at Tufts.

Jim Donovan of Cranston and Bob Leach of Denver complete this "Friar's Four". Jim and Bob will be priests in two years; Pat in three; John in five.

The theme of freedom runs through the songs; freedom in the south, freedom in the Church, freedom on campus, freedom in the seminary.

Some of the numbers are original compositions. Some are old favorites. Everyone will be encouraged to participate.

The show promises to be entertaining and exciting as well as relaxing. All are invited and admission is free.

British Prof. To Speak At Amherst

Malcolm Bradbury, Professor of English at East Anglia University, East Anglia, England and currently a visiting fellow at Harvard University, will speak "On Sociology and Literature," Monday Dec. 8 at 4 p.m. in the Babbott Room at Amherst College. Sponsored by the Faculty Lecture Committee, Prof. Bradbury's lecture will be open to the public without charge.

Professor Bradbury has been associated in the past with Michigan State, Yale University and the University of Colorado.

Psychological Drama On Screen

KNIFE IN THE WATER

On Sunday, December 5 at 7 p.m., in the Student Union Ballroom, the foreign film Knife in the Water will be shown. This film is a psychological drama of two men and a woman isolated in a small boat for twenty-four hours.

It opens as a successful journalist in his late thirties and his attractive young wife are driving to spend a weekend on their boat. A young stranger throws himself in front of their car to "get a lift." The husband invites him to share their outing.

Once the threesome is aboard the boat the tension begins to mount. The husband flaunts his possessions, his wife, his physical prowess. The boy flaunts his youth, his body, his skill with a knife.

All three know the boy is attracted to the wife.

The men fight violently over the knife and the boy is thrown overboard. The sex and ego drives of these three continue the conflict to the end.

After the movie there will be a discussion in the Colonial Lounge led by Mrs. Tatianne Kosinski of the Russian Department. Her husband is a native of Poland and she is acquainted with many post war refugees.

In 1956 she was a companion to Leo Tolstoy's daughter on tour with Tolstoy's picture War and Peace. Mrs. Kosinski also tutored Helen Hayes in Russian diction for the motion picture Anastasia.

Trips, 'Sick' Models, Tiparillo's!

Should a gentleman offer a lady a Tiparillo?

"By all means," many Texas Tech coeds answer, says the Daily Toreador. Women are trespassing into the man's world even further by smoking cigars, one of the last items men had a "patent" to use.

It may have come about because of the cancer scare which drove many men — and now women — to replace cigarettes with cigars.

One Texas Tech coed said she smokes cigars because she enjoys them more than cigarettes. "They last longer, taste better, and you don't have to inhale to get full satisfaction. Cigars provide an outlet for nervousness and tensions that cigarettes never seemed to satisfy."

Another female smoker said cigars are "fun and different. People may stare at me like I'm crazy, but I don't really care."

Few coeds, however, have enough courage to light up a cigar in public. "I don't smoke them in public," one said, "because I'm afraid society isn't ready for it."

When asked what brands they prefer, most coeds had little knowledge of particular ones. They said, however, that they preferred plastic-tipped cigars. "I usually ask the salesman what he considers a good brand and go by that," one coed said. "I have always been satisfied."

Disadvantages? One coed said she found it "annoying to have to relight them often."

"Another thing that bothers me is that they create more smoke than cigarettes and often leave a big cloud around your head. This sometimes annoys friends."

"My major gripe," another said, "is that they leave a horrible taste in my mouth. I have to get up several times during the night to brush my teeth and still can't get rid of the taste. Also, people often think you're just trying to show off."

Is cigar smoking by coeds a passing phase? Tech coeds who have tried it said they intend to continue, despite the disadvantages.

"Fly along"

Say goodbye to the jam-packed phone booth and the lingerie on the fraternity clothesline. A recent survey of the bigger mid-western universities shows they're out. What's in? Why, the Flyalong.

Object of the game: As many students as possible pack up Friday night, fly to a selected destination, take in as many events in one weekend as possible, then get back on Sunday night without so much as a wrinkled suit or suitcase.

It doesn't dent the pocketbook much, either; mass booking and student-faculty rates give them a double advantage on costs.

New record-holders are 1,300 Notre Dame students who spent a rollicking weekend in New York recently. They watched their team beat Army 17-0 in Shea stadium, then toured the World's Fair nearby where a wildly cheering throng of New Yorkers cheered a huge ND pep rally.

The record-breaking trip involved moving 1,300 pieces of luggage both ways and 2,600 name checks each way, according to Richard D. Small, president of Studentaire Travel, Inc., group travel engineers who arranged and chaperoned the trip.

Students avoided the long waiting lines at crowded terminals by buses that took them directly to and from their major-airline planes at South Bend and Newark airports—48 bus transfers in all.

Medicine?

The University of Southern California's School of Medicine has come up with an idea this semester that really makes students take an interest in their class work.

The school has hired scantily-clad models who have been given 100 hours of instruction in how neurological patients behave.

The girls have learned to stimulate paralysis, loss of sensation, blindness and abnormal reflexes so well that one physician, called on to test one model's proficiency as an actress, blurted out after an examination, "Good heavens, girl! Why didn't you come to me sooner with this trouble?"

William Doppmann will present a solo recital this Sunday at 8 P.M. in Bartlett Auditorium, sponsored by the UMass music dept.

Famed Concert Pianist To Give UMass Recital

William Doppmann, widely-claimed concert pianist, will perform at the University of Massachusetts, Sun., Dec. 5, at 8 p.m. in Bartlett Aud., when he will present a solo recital of works by Bach, Chopin and Dallapiccola.

A native of Springfield and currently pianist-in-residence and associate professor of music at the Univ. of Iowa, Mr. Doppmann has been cited by leading critics as "a virtuoso," and "extraordinary."

Sponsored by the UM department of music, his appearance here adds another state to his already impressive list of performances in 15 states with over 30 civic, festival and radio orchestras.

DURING the summers of 1958 and 1960, he was a performing artist with Rudolf Serkin's famous Marlboro Festival and School of Music at Marlboro, Vt., after which he recorded Ravel's "Piano Trio" for Columbia Records.

The 31 year-old pianist began his music training at the age of five, and by the time he was 10 had appeared as a soloist with Eugene Goossens and the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra.

His later music training was with the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music, the National Music Camp in Interlochen, Mich., and with the Univ. of Michigan's School of Music.

In his sophomore year at Michigan, the pianist won two national competitions for soloists—the 1964 Naumburg Foundation and the 1964 Michael Memorial Awards.

Soon after winning the Michael award in his appearance with the Chicago Symphony in Ravenna, Chicago Daily Tribune columnist Claudia Cassidy called the young musician "brilliant," and said "a lovely phrase can flower under his fingers, opening and expanding in the sense of coming alive from its roots."

SUNDAY'S program will include Luigi Dallapiccola's "Quadrone Musicale di Annalibera," Frederic Chopin's "Sonata #2," and "Aria with Thirty Variations," by Johann Sebastian Bach.

Doppmann's appearance at UM is open to the public without charge.

Civil Rights Group To Vacation in the South

Five major civil rights organizations (SNCC, MEDP, SCLC, CORE, and NAACP) are enlisting college students to spend a "Freedom Christmas" in the South. Students selected for the project will be working on their Christmas vacations in on-going Negro voter registration projects in six Southern states (Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, Louisiana, North and South Carolina). "Freedom Christmas" volunteers will work primarily in counties which have federal registrars. Organizers of the project feel that in these areas a great deal can be accomplished in the short time allowed. Since primary elections will be held in some areas as early as May 3, 1966, a summer registration drive would come too late to affect the elections.

THE RECRUITING and initial screening of applicants is being handled by the U. S. National Student Association. Veterans of previous Southern projects and Southern students who are familiar with local areas are being especially sought. Between 300 and 600 college students are expected to participate in the project.

Volunteers will urge Negroes to register by door-to-door canvassing, will assist in organizing and publicizing local meetings on voter registration, and will help administer voter education projects. They will live with local families and will be required to provide their own expenses and transportation.

In all of the Southern states, a Senatorial seat, Congressional seats, and large portions of state, county, and municipal offices will be decided in 1966.

Your Help Is Wanted For Critique

This year, once again, Critique will need the help of students in Critiquing Courses. This semester Critique will be going into over one hundred courses and it will be impossible for the staff to complete this task by themselves. Fifteen minutes time is all you need to devote to help Critique effect better student-professor communications.

All you need to do, is to take the Critique sheets given to you to the specified course, which maybe one that you are enrolled in, let the students fill them in, and it's complete.

There is a booth set up in the S.U. lobby for students to sign up and obtain the Critique sheets.

Those students who cannot make it today are encouraged to go to the Critique Office Monday.

Xmas Party Planned By Mortar Board

Members of Mortar Board will hold a Christmas Party for foreign students and their friends on Saturday, Dec. 11 at 8:00 p.m. in Farley Lodge.

Traditional Christmas festivities will be highlighted at the party and the evening's program will include tree trimming, caroling, enactment of "Twas the Night before Christmas", and dancing.

All foreign students are cordially invited to attend.

The party is one of the programs in Mortar Board's main project for the year which centers about foreign students. Plans for next semester include a trip for foreign students to the United Nations and a room furnishings drive.

Alpha Phi Omega Announces Completion Of Its Pledge Project

Thirteen Alpha Phi Omega (APO) pledges, under the supervision of pledge master Denny Myshraill and brothers Ed Skea and Pete Mason, successfully completed their pledge project at Hillside School for Boys in Marlboro as part of the membership training Saturday.

This project was one way APO pledges qualify themselves in Service, Leadership, and Friendship, the Cardinal principles of the Fraternity.

Hillside school is mainly for boys from broken or financially inadequate homes and is supported in part by donations and in part by the student's parents. At present there are only five faculty members and much work and funds are needed to provide more adequate facilities.

The pledges arrived at mid-day and split into work groups. Some started work on making four ping-pong tables out of available lumber. Others painted a house and a garage.

A dormitory was started but could not be finished and plans are being made for Fitchburg State's pledge class to complete this as part of their membership procedure.

Thirteen Commuters Attend Wed. Meeting

by BARBARA PROKO
Staff Reporter

Thirteen of the 1,400 UM commuters attended a meeting of the Non-Resident Student Assoc. held yesterday at 11:15 a.m. in the SU Council Chambers.

Officers announced that they had submitted next year's budget, totalling $228 to the Student Senate for approval. Expenses were similar, they said, to those included in the NRSA's first Senate budget.

Pres. Sharon Stowell appointed the Service Committee to find out from the Senate why no recent action has been taken in installing an inter-dorm phone for the commuters in the Union.

A Christmas party is being planned for interested commuters and their guests, to be held Friday evening, Dec. 17 in the Masonic Hall in Amherst. Commuter social events are usually held on campus in Farley Lodge.

Coffee House U

One Day Life

By ALLAN MANN

The Collegiate Press Service
LOS ANGELES (CPS) — The Free University of California, the newest college in Los Angeles, opened its doors on Oct. 21.

It has but one teacher and one class.

The teacher is Lawrence Lipton, author of "The Holy Barbarians" and the "Erotic Revolution." The class is West Coast Avant-Garde Literature, the course Lipton was to have taught in the UCLA extension this fall.

But the course, the same one he taught in the fall of 1964, was not approved by the UCLA Academic Senate's committee on courses this year. Lipton has charged that the refusal was the result of "right-wing pressure," brought about by a telephone and letter-writing campaign against the course. UCLA Dean Paul Sheats of the extension division denied the charges, which are now being investigated by the chairman of the Senate.

MEANWHILE, LIPTON has formed a "free university." At the first general meeting he called upon students to "answer the university" by enrolling in his course. Some 50 of the 350 present did and paid a $25 enrollment fee.

The "university" class is being taught weekly at the Ash Grove, a Hollywood coffee house. According to Lipton, the course is an attempt at "re-integration of the arts in a workshop manner." He plans to combine the literary forms of poetry, prose, and theater with the musical art form.

Lipton, who proposes to use a four-piece jazz combo as an accompaniment to his poetry and films, presented a sampling of how he proposes to use jazz poetry, and motion pictures in order to "merge all of the arts into one." He played a phonomontage: a tape recording of various snatches of radio and television commercials, football games, and evangelical.

A TAPE OF POETRY set to music was also presented as was a film entitled "N.Y., N.Y." in which a series of distorted film images depict a day in New York City.

In the large, dimly lit, barn-like atmosphere of the Ash Grove, Lipton explained the reasons for what he calls the "teach-out."

Aside from the fact that UCLA had refused to let him teach the course, Lipton said, they had severely restricted him when he tried to teach it in 1964.

According to Lipton, UCLA had refused to let him have a jazz band during his class because it would disrupt surrounding classes, despite, he says, the fact that "the bells from the library interrupted my class lectures every half hour with their ringing and even loused up my tapes."

WHEN HE ASKED to be allowed to take his students to the house of the writers whom they were studying, "in the manner of medieval scholars," the extension division turned him down because there was not enough money. "The real reason," Lipton says, "was, I later learned, that they (the extension officials) thought I was organizing a sex orgy."

In outlining the activities of his class, Lipton said that the jazz band and trips to writers' homes will be included in the class as well as three "happenings" run entirely by the students.

"THE FREE UNIVERSITY of California will be run entirely by the students," Lipton said. "They will decide what courses will be taught and they will be responsible for all administrative matters."

Lipton expressed the hope that he would soon be able to add other courses to his program.

Geology Lecturer

The Four College Lecture Series in Geology will present a talk on Dec. 8 at 8:15 p.m. Morrill Auditorium by Eugene Shoemaker, Chief, Branch of Astrogeology, U.S. Geological Survey, Flagstaff, Arizona. His topic will be "Geologic Processes on the Moon". Preceding the lecture, a dinner for Dr. Shoemaker will be served in the Hampshire Room at 6:30 p.m. Reservations may be made with Mrs. Eversole at 413-545-2286 by Dec. 6.

General Electric is an easy place to work.

All you need is brains, imagination, drive and a fairly rugged constitution.

Oh, yes. Something else that will help you at G.E. is an understanding of the kind of world we live in, and the kind of world we will live in.

There's a lot happening: The population is continuing to explode. The strain on resources is becoming alarming. At a time when men are being lured by the mysteries of space, we're faced with the task of making life on earth more livable.

There's a lot happening at G.E., too, as our people work in a hundred different areas to help solve the problems of a growing world: Supplying more (and cheaper) electricity with nuclear reactors. Controlling smog in our cities and pollution in our streams. Providing better street lighting and faster transportation.

This is the most important work in the world today: Helping to shape the world of tomorrow. Do you want to help? Come to General Electric, where the young men are important men.

Culture Strikes The Valley

Vespers

The Amherst College Glee Club and the Freshman Glee Club and clergymen representing the Protestant and Catholic faiths will participate this Sunday in Amherst College's annual Christmas Vespers. The Vespers, scheduled at 4 p.m. in Johnson Chapel, will be repeated at 8 p.m.

Participants in the program will be the Rev. Lewis S. Mudge, Minister to the College, and Father J. Joseph Quigley, Religious Advisor to Catholic students at Amherst College, who will read from the scriptures; Charles Page, organist at the Old First Church of Springfield, Anne Boersma of Smith College, soprano soloist, and the two Amherst Glee Clubs under the direction of Bruce McInnes, instructor of music.

Music for the Vespers will include works of Bach, Jacob Handl, Praetorius, as well as traditional Christmas carols. The Vespers program is open to the general public.

Recital

Compositions by three members of the department of music at Smith College will be played in the Sage Hall recital this Sunday evening at 8 p.m. The program includes Fantasy in A minor for Violin and Piano composed by John Duke, Duo for Violin and Viola by Alvin Etler, and George Walker's Sonata for Violoncello and Piano.

Those appearing in the recital are Philipp Naegele, violinist; Ernst Wallfisch, violinist and violist; William Schultz, violoncellist; John Duke, pianist; Lory Wallfisch, harpsichordist; and George Walker, pianist. The recital is open to the public without charge.

The program will open with three Trisonatas for Two Violins and Bass by Handel; No. 3 in E flat major; Op. 2, No. 9 in E major; and Op. 5, No. 5 in G minor. Of these three, only the E major exists in a practical edition. For the other two Sonatas, the performers will use the copy of the complete Chrysander edition contained in the Music Library of Smith College, the bass being realized for harpsichord by Ernst Wallfisch.

John Duke's Fantasy was written in 1936 and dedicated to Gilbert Ross, a former teacher at Smith. Mr. Duke will play the piano part in this performance and Philipp Naegele will play the viola. The Duo, composed by Alvin Etler in 1945, will be performed by Philipp Naegele and Ernst Wallfisch. The recital will conclude with Mr. Walker's 1957 Sonata played by the composer, with William Schultz on the Violoncello.

Civil Service Exams Slated for Summer

A nationwide competitive examination for temporary summer employment in the Federal Government as an office assistant or a science assistant was announced today by the Civil Service Commission.

Applicants seeking summer employment in Grades GS-1 through 4 (at annual salary ranges of $3,507 to $4,641) in such occupations as clerk, stenographer, typist, office machine operator, student assistant, engineering aid, physical science aid, biological aid, and mathematics aid should ask for a copy of Announcement No. 380.

Candidates for the examination should obtain a Civil Service Form 5000-AB. This form is available at many post offices at U.S. Civil Service Commission offices, and at Boards of U.S. Civil Service Examiners. he completed form should be mailed to the Civil Service Commission, Washington, D.C., 20415, before January 3, 1966, to enable the candidate to take the 2½-hour written test which will be given in various cities on a Saturday in late January or early February of 1966.

The test, which is scheduled to be given only once, is designed to measure clerical skills, vision, abstract reasoning, and table and chart interpretation. Sample questions will be provided in advance.

Next Phase Negro Revolt?

Daniel P. Moynihan, former assistant secretary of labor and author of the widely discussed report, "The Negro Family: the Case for National Action," will be at Amherst College tomorrow to speak on "Equality and Liberty: The Next Phase of the Negro American Revolution."

The lecture, scheduled at 8 p.m. in Johnson Chapel, is open to the public without charge.

Mr. Moynihan, co-author of a study of New York's ethnic groups entitled "Beyond the Melting Pot" is now associated with the Institute of Advanced Studies at Wesleyan University.

Government Official to Speak On Ethics of Vietnam

Alvin Friedman, Deputy Assistant Secretary of Defense for International Security Affairs, and Prof. Henry Steele Commager of Amherst College will discuss "Vietnam and Its Ethical Implications" at 8 p.m. tonight in Amherst's Johnson Chapel. Mr. Friedman's area of responsibility in the Defense Department is U.S. security policy in Latin America and the Far East; Professor Commager has been a frequent and vocal critic of U.S. foreign policy in Vietnam.

A native of Brooklyn, New York, and a graduate of Cornell University and the Yale Law School, Mr. Friedman entered government service in 1963 as Special Assistant to the General Counsel of the Department of Defense. He had previously been associated with the Washington, D.C. law firm of Covington & Burling, as a specialist in anti-trust litigation.

He entered the field of International Security Affairs in March, 1964, and was named to his present position in August of that year.

He is a member of the bar in the State of Texas and the District of Columbia, and has been admitted to practice before the U.S. Supreme Court.

HENRY STEELE COMMAGER Winthrop H. Smith Professor of American History at Amherst, is currently on a one-semester sabbatical from the College. ## $5,000 Minimum

Teacher Pay Raise Expected

State House, Boston, (Dec. 1) —Public school teachers in Massachusetts who by law must receive at least $5,000 per school year will be granted a $500 increase in their base starting salary next year if the Legislature goes along with a new minimum-salary bill filed for the Massachusetts Teachers Association.

The association - sponsored bill was filed by Senators Beryl W. Cohen (D-Brookline) and John M. Quinlan (R-Dover), and it proposes to increase the present $5000 minimum salary for public school teachers in the Commonwealth to $5500 a year—effective September 1, 1966, the start of the next school year.

Under this proposal, any city or town which now pays its starting teachers the lowest possible minimum of $5000 would be required to pay each of its new teachers an additional $500 a year.

While proposing to increase the base starting salary of the new teacher, the association also has taken into consideration so-called veteran teachers, by providing that those who have at least 10 years experience receive not less than $8500 a year.

THE STATUTE CHANGE recommended by the Teachers Association provides that "the compensation of every teacher employed in any public day school in Massachusetts, except persons in training and those employed as temporary substitutes, shall be at a rate of not less than $5500 a school year."

The association further proposes that "the compensation of every teacher," except those employed as temporary substitutes, who has at least 10 years regular public school teaching or administrative experience shall be at a rate of not less than $8500 a school year."

Last year, the 1964 Legislature raised the minimum salary for public school teachers in the Commonwealth to $5000 a school year, effective September 1, 1965. Prior to that, the minimum teacher's salary was set at $4500 by the 1962 Legislature, to be effective January 1, 1963.

AT THE SAME TIME the minimum salary bill was being filed in the office of the Senate Clerk, another proposal was being filed for the 1966 legislative session with the House Clerk, by Rep. Joseph C. DiCarlo (D-Revere) for the Massachusetts Association of School Superintendents. The superintendents' bill is designed to prevent a reduction in pay for a teacher or school superintendent "without his consent except by a general salary revision affecting all employed by the school committee."

Higher Wages Seen For State Workers

Salary increases for state employees, at an estimated cost of $50 million, will be recommended to the 1966 session of the Legislature by the Massachusetts State Council, American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees.

Howard V. Doyle, president of the council, said the Legislature so far in this session has failed to enact a single salary schedule which would provide a 10 per cent increase for all non-professional employees, equalizing them with the professional schedule established last year.

The single salary schedule bill, which Doyle indicated "is still the primary legislation for this organization," is pending before the House Ways and Means committee. But it already has been refiled for the 1966 session by the other employee organization, the Massachusetts State Employees Association.

Among the schools reporting a modified type of grading system were Fla. Presbyterian, Sarah Lawrence, Reed and Bennington.

In 1964, Fla. Presbyterian was reporting five grades for freshmen, ranging from H (for honors) to U (unsatisfactory). This would be reduced to four grades for sophomores, and by 1967, the school hoped to issue three grades which would be reported only to the registrar and advisers after the student's sophomore year.

Reed Col. makes use of conventional grades, but the student does not see them until after graduation. The grades are reported to advisors when the student needs counseling.

BENNINGTON and Sarah Lawrence have eliminated grades to emphasize growth in terms of individual ability and student interest. Carefully written evaluations which give a thorough analysis of the student's progress are issued to the student at regular intervals. However, the advantages of this system are offset by the necessity of reporting grades to other institutions. For a student who is transferring or applying to graduate school, both these colleges supply the conventional ratings.

Another experimental school is Carleton Col., Northfield, Minn., which uses a modified grading system to encourage students to sample courses outside their major fields of interest. Under this system, a student may choose to be graded in the regular way or to receive simply a "pass" or "fail." Thus a student majoring in the social sciences, for instance, may take a "foreign" course, such as art or music, without fearing the effect on his overall record.

All of these systems emphasize the process of learning rather than striving for a letter reward. However, while overcoming the drawbacks of conventional grading, they create new problems of their own.

Hockey Season To Open Sat. Night Against Williams

Tomorrow night the University of Massachusetts hockey team opens the 1965-66 season versus M.I.T. in Boston.

Coach Steve Kosakowski expects an improvement over last year's 4-12 record with the addition of several recruits from last year's undefeated freshmen.

The most noticeable improvement is the playing site. The William Orr Rink, located at Amherst College, has been completely enclosed and now offers one of the finest arenas for playing and viewing hockey in the East.

With three solid lines, the offense is the strong point of this year's squad. Ed Quimby, Bill Skowyr, and John McShane make up the first line. Ed Polchlopek and soph Bob Cadigan flank Ed Graney on the second offensive combination. Rick Molander, Jim Bisbee and either Pete Celi, Dave Eaton or Warren Bacon round out the offensive alignment.

The defense will have to be rebuilt with the loss of last year's defensemen through graduation. Connolly, DeMars, Spelko, Stone, Sullivan, and Tedford are still contesting these positions.

Bob Eddy, up from the frosh, will be in the goal. Rick Feldhoff is the back-up man.

Coach Kosakowski, assisted by Manager Dave Hanson, will direct the team through a schedule which presents the usual Yankee Conference rivals, such as potential opposition as West Point, Bowdoin, and Colgate, and two tournaments.

The Yankee Conference Tournament and the Amherst College Invitational highlight the season. In the latter, Amherst and Massachusetts face Hamilton, Norwich, Williams, Colby, A.I.C. and Connecticut.

Tuesday, the team makes its home debut against Williams at 7:00 p.m.

Rifle, Pistol Teams Lose First Matches

RIFLE:

On Nov. 20, the UMass rifle team lost its first match of the season to UVM at Vermont 1265 to 1222.

Both teams fired under their pre-season averages. UVM showed good strength and will be a strong contender against UMaine, defending Yankee Conference Champions.

Individual scores against UVM:
UMASS	UVM
H. Davis	258
M. Case	246
J. Berge	242
H. Burbank	239
A. Meideiros	237
Team total	1222

PISTOL:

On Saturday, November 13, The University of Massachusetts Varsity Pistol Team lost its first match of the year to a strong Villanova Team led by two All-Americans.

The match, fired at Villanova, was essentially a replay of last year's victory by the Villanovans. Leading scorer of the day was All American J. J. Bushong with a 565, followed by A. Masclia with 561 and All American Ted Laven with 555. J. Durburrow rounded out the home team score with a 553, giving a team score of 2234.

On the University of Massachusetts side of the line, Junior Charley Seavey led the day with a 551, Team Captain and MVP of last year Eric Mussen contributed a 530, with Senior Roger Yee scoring a 515. Bruce Field, the "old man" of the team finished off with a 505, giving

GYMNASTS...

PITT WILL HAVE three important men back from last season to cause problems for UMass. All are multiple event men which will counteract the expected problems in depth. UMass will depend on specialists, especially early in the season while the many sophomores are developing.

UMass will return six men from the 1964-65 season including Dick Cardiff, a competitor of two years ago who sat out the past season with an injury. Cardiff should be the team leader on the horizontal bar. Al Cohen on the long horse and Jim Dusenbury on the rings are two others tops in a particular event, among the returnees.

Dave Lizotte and Al Carver are the leading multiple event men coming back. Both compete on the trampoline, the team's weakest event last season, and both have improved considerably in the past year in that event.

Carver also appears in the long horse vaulting event and Lizotte in the floor exercises.

Steve Brown, Jack Bradley, Richard Booth and Bob Leclair are four sophomores who are expected to add to the team's point total.

Like the football team the Pistol Team exhibited a great many symptoms of opening match jitters, going against a team which already had 3 or 4 local tournaments behind it. Another fact worth noticing is that Villanova had over 90 men try out for their team. The Redmen had a scant dozen, and now only 7.

The next match is against Navy, Dec. 4, on the Redmen's home range in the basement of Dickinson hall. Perhaps the third match of the season will be a successful one.

On the long horse and Jim Dusenbury on the rings are two others tops in a particular event, among the returnees.

'TIME' PICKS MORIN ALL-AMERICAN

UMass end Milt Morin has been selected to the 1965 Time magazine All-America Football Team. The Time selections, unlike most football polls, were made by pro scouts from the NFL and AFL.

Morin has undoubtedly impressed many pro scouts, as evidenced by the fact that he was the number one draft choice of the NFL champion Cleveland Browns. He was also the third round choice of the San Diego Chargers, defending Western division champs in the AFL.

In contrast to Twilley, the other end of Time's team, 5 ft. 10 in. and 180 pounds, Morin is 6 ft. 4 in. and 245 pounds, which is really pro-sized. His size seems to enhance his chances of success in the rough and tough world of pro football.

Incidentally, the quarterback of Time's team, Rick Norton of Kentucky, was chosen by the Browns in the second round. Apparently the Browns are looking beyond their present pass duo of Frank Ryan and Gary Collins.

BASKETBALL PROFILE

Jack Leaman

by TOM FITZGERALD

The floor of Curry Hicks Cage was alive with activity while on the sidelines a short, crewcut young man was barking instructions to a player who had failed to position himself correctly during a set play.

Seconds later he was shouting "All right!" as the play was executed with the proper smoothness and timing.

"Spirited" is the word for the coaching style of Freshmen Basketball mentor Jack Leaman. To mold a group of players from different backgrounds into a cohesive unit is a difficult task, even if the players are the pick of the crop. But Leaman apparently has the fire to fuse athletes together—his record over four years is a phenomenal 43-14.

This year's talented squad should write another page in Leaman's success story, which is indeed a fast-moving one. Only six years ago he was captain of the Boston University varsity and leading the Terriers into battle with West Virginia and Jerry West in the finals of the Eastern NCAA Regionals.

B.U. lost that one, but chalked up a 20-7 mark that season and defeated Connecticut and Navy in the tourney. Leaman, a graduate of Cambridge Latin High School, was a backcourt sparkplug and the acknowledged floor general of the Terriers.

During his three varsity seasons, B.U. hit its peak as a basketball powerhouse. Upon graduation he became the school's frosh coach while working for his master's degree in Physical Education.

In 1960 Leaman became head coach at Millis (Mass.) High School, and the following year he arrived on the UMass scene as coach of both freshman basketball and freshman soccer.

His first frosh squad compiled a 13-1 record. In 1962-63 the team finished 12-5, the '63-'64 team 8-5, and last year's squad 10-3. Leaman, his wife Rita, and daughter live in Amherst.

Jim Babyak (14, white) drives for the basket in last night's game against B.U. Babyak was the second high scorer for the Redmen with 15 points.

Hustling Redmen Basketball Team Downs Terriers, 65-49

by RICK CORWIN

The Redmen opened the basketball season Wednesday night by defeating Boston University, 65-49, before a disappointing crowd of 1825. Those who attended saw an exciting, but rather sloppy performance by both teams. Now with an opening win under them the varsity should settle down to play the steadier ball they are capable of.

The first half opened with the Redmen opening up an 8-0 lead with shots by Hill, Tindall and Babyak going in. B.U. didn't score until three minutes were gone in the period. But by controlling the boards, the Terriers fought back to come within one point, 15-14 at the ten minute mark.

With 8 minutes left in the half UMass began to press and fast break. Steward started the explosion with a fantastic pass to Hill for an easy layup. Then Clarence made a pretty tap in off a stray Tindall jump shot. Hill lead Babyak with a long pass and Jim followed up with a touch shot. The hustle on both offense and defense added up to a 37-21 halftime lead.

The second half began with a determined effort by B.U. and ice cold shooting by the home team. The Terriers scored 8 straight times in the beginning of the period. UMass called for a time out and returned to the game slowing down the action, as each team shot cold. Babyak for the Redmen and Mortimer for the visitors did most of the scoring in this period.

With ten minutes remaining Coach Orr removed Bill Tindall when he got his fourth personal foul. Tindall, playing with a sore ankle, was having trouble getting up to the boards. Gary Gasperack replaced him.

Now neither team ran very much as UMass built up their lead to 56-42. B.U., far behind, was forcing shots from way out and fell further behind.

With four minutes left the Redmen froze the ball. B.U. came out to get it and Clarence Hill went in for an unmolested layup. B.U. called time out and with the game under wraps Orr put in his bench.

This debut of the team shows that it consists of good shooters along with an excellent fast break and zone press. The biggest problem is under the boards, but the team is scrappy and fought hard to get the ball. Although the game was not basketball at its best, the biggest disappointment was the attendance.

Billy Tindall (No. 32) scored 12 points and had 5 rebounds last night in his first Varsity game. Jim Stewart (No. 44) looks on.

UMass	B.F.P.	BU	B.F.P.

Intramural Report

By Dave Jarnes

Three of the four dorm leagues initiated the basketball season along with some of the independent teams on Tuesday. Next week the fraternities will enter the spotlight in the race to dethrone LCA.

Much to no one's surprise, the Plymouth Patriots romped to an easy 73-35 win over the Grayson Trotters. Ray Stanelis, who starred for last year's campus champion, Vicky's 202's, paced the Pats with 30 points. Hollicker put on a one-man show for Grayson with 23 markers.

The powerful Butterfield Lemons asserted themselves as a contender with an exciting 54-48 triumph over the Brett Chestnuts. Higgenbotham (20) and Duilio (19) paced the Lemons while Jay Hanflig's 21 points weren't quite enough for the Chestnuts.

The southwest dorms made their debuts impressive as the Colt 45's, led by Ferry's 26 points, topped the Brett Black Bears 51-37 and the Commanches scored an easy 34-21 win over the Brett Slippery Elms.

Gorman had a complete sweep for the evening as the Maples defeated the Hills North Hickorys 56-35, the Pines bombed the Hills South Hicks 44-23, and the Oaks, who had four men in double figures, edged the Hills South Hi-Lo's 49-35.

The Defending champion Webster Panthers began the season with a 48-19 walloping of the Thatcher Hamlocks as Zabek, Rist, and Greenberg all hit double figures. The Mills Cherrys parlayed a balanced attack into an easy 43-21 decision over the Middlesex Redmen.

In other dorm games the Wheeler Trojans rolled over the Hills North Hoovers 56-31 as Jay Kenny scored 20 points, the Grayson Flaming A's topped the Thatcher Redwoods 39-30, and the Grayson Phallices edged the Webster Hawks 28-24.

TURNING TO THE independent games, the Innkeepers, a team comprised of UM football players, clobbered AEII 44-22, as Terry Swanson scored 16 points. In probably the best game of the night the Moody Blues squeaked by the Hot Rod Raiders 41-39. Divencenzo, Smith, and Stevens all hit double figures for the Blues.

IN BOWLING THE Baker Bruins ran their record to 16-0 with a sweep over the Colt 45's despite a record setting 233 by the Colts' Hemielecki. The Hills North Hickorys took seven out of eight points from the Middlesex Redmen.

If their initial appearance is any criterion, the James Commanches will be a team to be reckoned with. MacDonald's 590, Ohman's 569, and Reed's 542 paced a 6-2 win over the Butterfield Lemons, who were led by Rechter's 561.

In other bowling results the Patriots, Maroons, Trojans, and Flaming A's all swept 8 points from the Hicks, Maples, Slippery Elms and the Oaks.

Tough Schedule

UMass Gymnasts Host Pitt Tomorrow Night

by AL RICE

The University gymnastics team opens its second Eastern Intercollegiate Gymnastics League season tomorrow night with the most important meet this year.

In the middle of the toughest competition in the nation, UMass' only hope to escape the cellar this season is to open with a bang and beat Pittsburgh, whom they host at the Boyden Auxiliary Gym. Pitt was the team immediately above the Redmen in last year's standings.

Erik Kjeldsen's UMass team should be improved in quality over last year's squad, but the loss of several men through scholastic difficulties will cut into its depth, a factor that had been expected to be a strong point.

Because of the strength of Penn State, Springfield, Syracuse, Navy, and Army on the league schedule, a realistic approach to the season will focus on Pitt as the main hope for the Redmen's escape from the cellar.

JOHN CUNNINGHAM, EDITOR

High Scoring Freshmen Team Triumphs Over Westover, 109-89

by TOM FITZGERALD

UMass freshmen basketball teams in recent years have been exceptionally swift and talented outfits. This year's team under Coach Jack Leaman and Assistant Coach Charlie Kingston looks to continue the winning tradition, but with more emphasis on rebounding as shown in Wednesday night's 109-89 curtain-raiser against the Westover Flyers at the Cage.

The team's roster this year includes, Coach Leaman says, "four of the very best prospects in Massachusetts—Joe Disarcina (Somerville), Peter Gayeska (Somerville), John Shockro (Attleboro), and Ron Nowakowski (Methuen)." These four along with 6' 2" Mike Gemei comprised the starting line-up, which built up a 48-32 cushion at half-time.

The Redmen's well-balanced effort clearly outclassed the less organized offense of the Flyers. Gayeska, a 6' 9" titan who used his height to great advantage in rebounding and blocking a flock of shots, led UMass in scoring with 21. Nowakowski, Gemei, Disarcina, Alan Fisher (Brooklyn, N.Y.), and Lonnie Lehrer (Haworth, N.J.) all finished in double figures. Smith, a Westover smoothie, led all scorers with 33.

Eddie Griffith, the shortest player on the squad, a 5' 10" guard from Cherry Valley, showed a good eye from far out, while others seeing action were John Dreyer (Cranford, N.J.), George York (Lawrence), Jon Souweine (Merrick, N.Y.), Bob Hmielecki (Northampton), and John Murphy (Belmont). Vic Papadinis, who rounds out the roster, is sidelined with a broken arm.

Coach Leaman is outspoken on the team's potential, commenting that Nowakowski is "our bread-and-butter man, since he can play inside and outside." He also praises Disarcina's quick hands and shooting ability. The coach feels that "Shockro and Fisher, two big, strong guards, should help out under the boards" and that Gayeska has quite a future on the hardwood. Gemei, he says, has exceptional leg spring and was "best player in the same league that produced Billy Tindall." The team will play its second contest Saturday night at Leicester Junior College.

Frank Ingram is seen here throwing his man to take a first place in the Judo Club's first meet of the season. Frank, who competes in the 180 lb. division, beat some of New England's best in the meet held at Somerville. UMass' Richard Rheasme came in second in the 150 lb. division.

'Role of Satirist'

DVP To Present Feiffer

Noted humorist and cartoonist, Jules Feiffer, will address the Distinguished Visitors Program Wednesday at 8 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom on the subject, "The Role of the Satirist in American Society".

Often called "the most talented social commentator of cartooning in our generation," Mr. Feiffer has had a long background in this field.

In less than four years, Feiffer rose from the status of a struggling artist contributing free drawings to a weekly Greenwich Village newspaper to that of an internationally syndicated cartoonist whose contract includes the provision that not a single word of his material may be changed.

Prior to his rise, Feiffer first showed talent in this field as a child when at the age of five he won a contest for drawing Tom Mix arresting some outlaws. Following his graduation from high school he attended Pratt Institute in New York.

His first cartoon series entitled "Clifford" ran in six newspapers from 1949 to 1951. His first success was in 1958 when his cartoons were published in a book entitled, SICK, SICK, SICK, subtitled A Guide To Non-conformist Living.

Feiffer has been depicted as being "Alone and unafraid in a world made of . . . just about all of the intellectual shams and shibboleths to which our culture subscribes." He is a controversial figure who has successfully dealt with controversial subjects.

Feiffer's comic strips appear in 65 U.S. newspapers, and leading magazines, including a monthly cartoon in PLAYBOY. LIFE MAGAZINE described them as "biting, intellectual, and strongly flavored with Freud".

Extending his talents to writing, he has turned out seven books, including a novel, THE UNEXPURGED MEMOIRS OF BERNARD MERGENDEILER (Random House). A cartoon collection was released this fall along with the film.

It is the mark of Jules Feiffer's success that he has "made it" — as one of his Greenwich Village characters might put it—on his own terms, not by trying to sell something, but by trying to say something. More important, what he is saying is worth hearing.

University of Massachusetts senior Steve Shea was recently awarded the National Red Cross Certificate of Merit by the Chicopee Chapter for his "meritorious" act last summer when he saved a young boy's life. Shea, a parttime professional athlete from Bedford, put his UMass Red Cross training to good use at a basketball game in Chicopee last August when he revived an injured and unconscious boy by mouth to nose resuscitation. At the award ceremonies were, from left: UMass President John W. Lederle, who made the presentation; Shea; Stanford Celatka, Chicopee Chapter chairman; and John Carter, Chicopee

WMUA Experiments New Entertainment

by MIKE ROSS

With the theme of "More Blues" and an eager if not large crowd, the Joe O. Show introduced late night entertainment on a Sunday afternoon.

The Student Union Ballroom was the scene as Joe Oleksiewicz introduced the "experiment" which he hopes will be a regular WMUA program.

Skip Spiros and his band provided the background music as some of the best talent on campus offered their thoughts and song renditions.

Jane Lavin lived things up with "Birth of the Blues." Afterwards she did a beautiful version of "More."

Frank Klanfer and Dan Weir from the University Theater, both of whom acted in the Fantasticks, spoke about the problems of actors. Frank commented that with a better written play it is much easier for the actors to learn their lines. Dan adamantly denied that he was a ham. He quoted Red Skelton saying that a ham can be cured. Frank also did one of his "party" folksongs.

Dave Schneider opened with "If I Ruled The World," told a few jokes, and woke up the audience with "Hello Dolly" as the entire crowd joined in clapping to and singing with the popular song.

Joe and his announcer Pete Ward talked Trivia for a few more minutes but this time made it worth while as the audience won record albums for all the trivial answers they could produce.

Skip and his band proved to be true professionals as they cut in on Joe in the true Skitch Henderson tradition.

An interview with the Beach Boys provided an enlightened segment of the show. The Beach Boys in their dressing room . . . found the Massachusetts weather wet. The Beach Boys proved that they were as intelligent in private as they are in public — but they were funny.

Multi-talented Pete Ward sang excellently serious and satiristic folk songs while accompanying himself on a guitar and a harmonica. Pete is a "pro" all the way.

Dave Schneider, a natural showman, kept things moving with a lively rendition of "The Joker" from the Broadway play The Roar of the Greasepaint, the Smell of the Crowd.

Jane Lavin introduced a version of the folksong "Feed The Birds". Jane does have a lovely voice.

Roger Samuelson's piano rendition of "The Warsaw Concerto" showed the same finesse that Roger has demonstrated formally both as an accompanist and as a soloist.

Dr. Robert Feldman, Professor of Psychology at UMass, brought to light a serious side of the Joe O. Show. Feldman said that the university education is not as effective as most would like it to be. Personal bias and prejudice still influence educators, educating, and the student to too large a degree. Feldman stressed that discussion should revolve more around facts rather than around personal ideas. The key quality which might cause students to think his classes different may be that he tries to stay aware of the reactions of his students to what he is saying.

In Joe O. own words the entertainers on his show were "lovely."

Joe looks forward to more shows. Sunday's program will aired by WMUA late Wednesday night.

Volpe Message Revives Medical School Issue

The controversial selection of Worcester as the site of the University of Massachusetts Medical School by the institution's board of trustees will be reviewed by the Legislature, when it considers a special message from Governor Volpe to pave the way for the school's construction.

Governor Volpe, in a message which the House referred to its Ways and Means committee, recommends legislative authorization of the transfer of state-owned land now part of Worcester State Hospital from the State Department of Mental Health to the university. He also calls for an appropriation of $1,750,000 for the acquisition of additional land and for the preparation of the first stage of the plans to begin construction.

The Worcester State Hospital land is now used for farming purposes, and the Governor said "the trustees consider this site to be a most desirable location for a medical school." The Chief Executive said the plans of the trustees call for the first class to enter the new medical school in the fall of 1970. It is anticipated that as much as two-thirds of the overall cost of construction of the school may be received as a federal grant.

Plans call for classrooms, laboratories, and student housing, as well as construction of a 400-bed hospital for training purposes.

Among the talent appearing yesterday afternoon on the Joe-O Show was Jane Lavin. Her voice added much to an already great show.

NEWS REVIEW

THE WORLD

by SANDY FAIRMAN, Staff Reporter

A PROCESS OF "action-reaction" in the Vietnam war continued as Chinese aid to the North Vietnamese increased, following a massive U.S. build-up this year. Last week Communist China rejected participation in a United Nations disarmament conference, stepped up military activity along the Indian border, and accused Russia of collusion with the United States and of undermining the "world revolutionary movement."

In Vietnam the situation appears to be centering around two possible courses of action. These are the probability of a bigger war and the possibility of a direct conflict between the U.S. and China which may force Russian commitment to China. Secretary McNamara's return from South Vietnam was accompanied by a statement that the Vietnamese War "will be a long war." Administration plans are said to call for further increase in troop strength, to at least 200,000 in the near future.

REPERCUSSIONS TO RHODESIA'S rebellion and attempts by its 220,000 white citizens to gain command widened last week, as agitation increased among the country's four million Africans. Britain attempted to topple by indirect means the rebellious leadership of Ian Smith by economic warfare. A British Royal Air Force squadron arrived in Zambia after unexplained incidents of sabotage of the Kariba Dam.

In Britain, Prime Minister Harold Wilson was in a continuing dilemma. Conservative factions at home attacked the toughness of his economic sanctions against Rhodesia; while on Friday the O.A.U. Foreign Ministers voted to sever diplomatic relations with Britain on December 15, unless the British crushed the Rhodesian Rebellion by that date.

GENERAL JOSEPH MOBUTU assumed control of the government of the Congo without elections, while Parliament approved the new Premier Leonard Mulamba. The takeover of Mobutu followed the ouster of President Joseph Kasavubu. The Mobutu-led government will rule by decree, subject to veto power by the Parliament. Few Congolese expect vetoes against the newly-formed government.

THE NATION

AT 2:30 ON SATURDAY the United States launched a giant Titan 2 rocket from Cape Kennedy, which blasted a two man Gemini 7 space ship into orbit for a planned 14 day flight. The Gemini 7 space ship, manned by astronauts Lieut. Col. Frank Borman and Comdr. James Lovell, Jr., plans to make a dramatic rendezvous with Gemini 6 during the 206-orbit flight. A meeting nose-to-nose of the two Gemini space ships, then flight in formation for about six hours nearly 200 miles above the earth will occur. This meeting will provide valuable information for future space exploration and eventual landing on the moon. If the 206 orbits are completed, the two astronauts will have completed nearly 330 hours in space, which surpasses both United States and Russian records for individual flights.

LAST WEEK TWO American soldiers were released after two years imprisonment by the Viet Cong. They were Sgt. George Smith of Chester, Pa., and Spec. 5 Claude McClure of Chattanooga, Tenn. After being released, the two men were taken to Thailand, accompanied by Australian guides, since the U.S. does not maintain communications with Cambodia.

Both soldiers stated at a news conference that they were well-treated by the Viet Cong. They also denounced U.S. involvement in the Vietnamese war, and vowed to quit the army and campaign for peace. They denied having been "brainwashed" by their captors in Vietnam.

THREE MEN, one previously acquitted of the murder of Mrs. Viola Liuzzo, have been convicted by an all white jury in Alabama of violating the civil rights of Mrs. Liuzzo. The Federal jury convicted the three Ku Klux Klan members, Collie Leroy Wilkins, Eugene Thomas, and William Eaton, of violating an 1870 civil rights conspiracy law. The three men received maximum ten-year sentences. They were convicted of conspiracy to deprive Mrs. Liuzzo of her civil rights, the evidence of which was substantially the same as that presented in the state trial of Wilkins for murder of Mrs. Liuzzo.

THE CAMPUS

A DECISION to bring the question of location for the proposed UMass medical school before the State Supreme Court seven-judge board, has halted action for at least four months. Arguments opposed to the Worcester location will be presented by Attorney Raymond Cross of Northampton. He represents the Mass. Taxpayers for Quality Medical Education, which is headed by Dr. Paul Dudley White. The main issue is whether the trustees had power to set up a branch of the University without the consent of the legislature.

THE STUDENT SENATE elected John Greenquist as Vice President at the Wednesday meeting. He defeated Commuter Senator Jim Allen, by a vote of 30-13. A motion which recommended that Yahoo be given the proper funds and the word to publish again was approved by the Senate at the meeting. The motion read, "Resolved to accept the preliminary report of the Yahoo Investigation Committee to remove funds from escrow."

Another proposal was tabled which resolved to permit students to have access to personal evaluations by dorm counsellors. Debate by Senator at Large Larry Marcus, pointed out that the fact that these evaluations are confidential and secret is bad psychologically.

A PETITION signed by forty neighbors of the Village Inn which asked that the Drake's liquor license be discontinued was presented to the Amherst Board of Selectmen. Complaints of noise, unruliness, and other inconveniences were brought to the attention of the Selectmen. Selectmen will meet early next week to decide the fate of the Drake.

Professor's Book Examines Communist Chinese History

Historical precedents for Communism in China's imperial history are the subject of a new book by a University of Massachusetts associate professor of government.

"Chinese Political Traditions," written by Dr. Franklin W. Houn, and recently released by the Public Affairs Press in Washington, D.C., carefully examines the validity of a popular belief that the Communist system on the China mainland today is not alien to the Chinese, but a revival of local traditions under a new, Marxist mask.

Currently on leave from UMass while serving as a research associate at the Hoover Institute on War, Revolution, and Peace at Stanford (Calif.) University, Dr. Houn bases his book on an extensive study of Chinese literature, including "Thirteen Confucian Classics," and "The Twenty-Six Dynastic Histories."

Professor Houn attributes the rise of the Communist movement to "China's misfortunes in modern times," and suggests that "the continuing existence of the Communist system be attributed to its ability to solve certain critical problems of the country," China's international status."

Now an American citizen, Prof. Houn was born in China and received his A.B. degree from the National Cheng-chin University in China in 1946. He holds graduate degrees from the University of Wisconsin and the University of Denver.

UMass Frosh Killed In Auto Crash

A UMass freshman was among four teenage Southwick boys killed early Sunday when their car hit a tree headon.

Dale E. Howard, 17, of Hills South was the passenger in an American built compact that skidded 400 feet before slamming into a tree on a Southwick back road at 12:05 a.m.

Howard was a physical education major at UM and a varsity athlete in high school. Police estimated the vehicle was traveling faster than 65 miles per hour.

Senate To Consider Class Government Bill

A bill drawn up by Senator Jerry Benezra requesting that the Student Senate set up an Ad Hoc committee to investigate the structure of the class government will be one of the highlights of Wednesday's Senate meeting.

Also coming up at the meeting will be a bill by Senators Chambers and Boronski to check into the cost and feasibility of recognition insignias (i.e. pins, ie clasps) for members of the Senate.

Another bill of interest to the student body will be the motion by Senators Bombardier and Greenquist that classes be cancelled on Good Friday and Easter Saturday. As the University calendar stands now there are classes scheduled for both days.

Also under new business, a motion will be brought to the floor by Senator Arnie Kaufman that an investigation be conducted on University policy concerning unexcused absences.

The purpose of the committee to be set up under Senator Benezra's bill will be to "look into the problems of the classes and see if there are any ways to increase interaction between the classes and the Senate."

The committee is to be made up of the four class presidents, no more than four administrators, a member of each class executive council-elected by the council, and three senators.

Quite a few bills concerning finances will be brought to the Senate floor on Wednesday night, among them will be a motion for a $350 loan to Thatcher House and a $250 appropriation to the Belchertown State School.

The loan to Thatcher is for the purchase of a color television. The purpose of the appropriation to the Belchertown school is for the purchase of Christmas toys.

A petition will be brought to the attention of the Senate Wednesday night. The services committee has been looking into student wages and the petition is being circulated for the purpose of seeing that student workers at the North and South Dining Commons receive a wage increase for the current $1.00 per hour to $1.25.

Old business at Wednesday's meeting will include the two bills moving to set up an executive council chosen by and working with the Senate president.

These bills were both tabled at the last meeting.

Herberg To Speak At Newman Center

Will Herberg, noted social philosopher and theologian, will be the guest speaker at a Newman Club General Meeting to be held Wednesday, December 8, at 8:00 P.M. in the Newman Center social hall. Dr. Herberg will speak on "Religion and Public Life in America."

Herberg is Graduate Professor of Philosophy and Culture at Drew University. He is well known for his work in two fields — social philosophy and theology. He has taught, lectured, and conducted seminars at leading academic institutions, and has written widely on social, cultural, and religious questions.

His book, Judaism and Modern Man: An Interpretation of Jewish Religion was hailed by Reinhold Niebuhr as "a milestone in American religious thought." His more recent work, Protestant-Catholic-Jew: An Essay in American Religious Sociology has met with wide acclaim.

Herberg has edited The Writings of Martin Buber, Four Existential Theologians and Community, State, and Church: Three Essays by Karl Barth and has published three monographs.

He was educated at, and received his degrees (B.A., M.A., Ph.D.) from Columbia University. Honorary degrees: L.H.D., Park College, 1956; Litt. D., Franklin and Marshall College, 1960; LL.D., Ohio Wesleyan University, 1963.

Don't be too surprised if he gives you a complete run-down of our fast-growing research and development groups without mentioning an office copier. Xerox copiers are a reality. Their research and development took place many years ago.

Ask him what we mean when we say that the real business of Xerox is graphic communications. Draw him out on how we came to start a revolution in office copying, and transformed this success into an interdisciplinary assault on the global information explosion.

Let him explain LDX (Long Distance Xerography) — what it is today, and what it implies in the context of tomorrow's integrated computer/communication networks. # MASSACHUSETTS COLLEGIAN FORUM

Editor's Note: The threatened closing of the Drake immediately brings to mind the entire problem of college drinking. The following editorial is the first of a series concerned with this topic.

"It Burns Your Tummy"

BY JEROME S. HORVITZ, ASSOCIATE CHAIRMAN

Drinking! How terrible. Something must be done to stop it.

Why not close down fraternities; inspect dorms nightly; search every car coming on campus; close down taverns within a radius of a hundred miles? Why not do all of this?

For the simple reason that there is no way to stop drinking—on the campus or off it. This fact was proven during the thirties with the enactment of the twenty-first amendment.

The biggest mistake, then, that this university could ever do would be to crack down on drinking. The results of such action would undoubtedly have fearful negative effects. By making it a challenge to drink, a student would possess a greater incentive to go out and try to "beat the system". Another result would be that drinking would go "underground", and, thus, the law would be broken even more frequently. A further result would be that drinking would be shifted off campus, and, since the only way to reach these places would be by car, there would be the real danger of drunken drivers which today exists as a problem with students driving into New York from Connecticut. Therefore, let's face the fact that drinking will exist as long as there are flasks.

However, this is not to be used as an excuse to ignore the situation. The philosophy now used by the university is a successful one—keep one eye open all the time. In other words, the student must be kept "honest". Presently this is accomplished by weekly room inspections, by ostracizing a fraternity with social probation, by publicizing the arrest of a drunken student. It is unfortunate for the individual who is held up as a target, but, in the long run, wouldn't his sacrifice be better than the sacrifice of all those who partake in drinking?

Consequently, as long as there are college students, the word of Roger Miller will always sound true — "Chug-a-lug, chug-a-lug . . ."

News Correction

To the Editor:

The Collegian wishes to correct the article which appeared in last Friday's paper, entitled, "YAF 'Debate-In' Planned at Smith". In this article it was stated that the Students for a Democratic Society is "the left wing pacifist organization which is calling for an immediate end to the war in Vietnam."

This statement, it was pointed out, is incorrect on two points. First, SDS is not expressly a pacifist organization and does not claim to be one. However, some of its members are pacifists.

The second point is that SDS is not calling for an immediate cease fire in Vietnam, the SDS representative pointed out. SDS's "extreme revulsion with America's destructive and oppressive role in the Vietnam war" is based upon the facts that the 1954 Geneva accords and the U.N. charter have been violated by the U.S.; that the U.S. is undertaking unilateral aggressive actions in Vietnam; and the U.S. has refused to consciously seek a solution to the Vietnam war other than escalation. SDS is opposed to the war in Vietnam. It seeks a "negotiated settlement in Vietnam," which involves all concerned sides and at the earliest possible time.

Maroon Keys--A New Program

The recent extension of the Maroon Keys' activities to include not only the orientation of freshmen at the beginning of the semester but advice throughout the entire year will be a boost not only to the Keys themselves but to the whole campus. For too long freshmen have been left in a complete state of bewilderment without enough adequate preparation and advice on what to expect during their first year in the University. But now, beginning this February, each Key will be assigned 15-20 first year students, whom he will advise and help throughout the semester with any problems they may have. Convocations and panels before important events, such as fraternity round robins, etc., will also be part of the new program.

This reorganization of purpose should silence the critics of the Maroon Keys, but the irony is that there was never any reason for criticism. The trouble was that the activities of the Keys were never publicized. For example, very few people are aware that the Keys come up to the University for two weeks during June to initiate the freshmen summer orientation program, or that they raised almost $700 worth of scholarship money in their recent bicycle auction, or that they welcome and plan the stay for all visiting athletic teams, or that they conduct High School Honors Day, not to mention the intangible elements they contribute to the school by encouraging university traditions.

The Keys indeed deserve acclaim. By answering their critics with constructive action instead of defensive reply, they have shown that they are without doubt an honorary organization, composed of outstanding and intelligent young men.

Letters To The Editor

Morality and Foreign Policy

Democracy, freedom, and liberty have great meaning to most Americans. The right to choose governmental representatives, the ability to discuss freely controversial topics, and the necessity to petition the government to express grievances are to be lauded and venerated. But, the question must be asked, do these terms have any meaning to the people in the backward countries of Asia? What does it mean to a starving Indian peasant to be able to exercise the above mentioned privileges? What use is it talking about liberty and freedom to South Vietnam whose leader, General Ky, is an admirer of Hitler and whose first act in office was to suppress the few remaining independent newspapers? Is this the kind of man to whom appellations such as "democratic" and "free" can apply? In North Vietnam the seemingly popular leader Ho Chi Min is certainly no shining example of the liberation perspective most Americans like to believe they hold. This point can be extended to greater lengths by asking ourselves about the "free World" countries such as Spain, Greece, South Africa, or the Southern portion of the U.S. Likewise the "Peoples Democracies" of Albania, East Germany, and Poland are a far cry from what we would consider applicable to that title.

Is there an answer to the impasse which develops out of the failure to define and understand the relevancy of the slogans used to justify the continuing warfare? I believe the answer lies in the hope that the American people will some day realize that they do not monopolize all that is "good." Our conceptions of liberty, democracy, and freedom do not necessarily have the universal appeal that we might like to think they have. The ability to see your family fed is much more meaningful for many people than to engage in a dialogue over the abstract concepts already mentioned. Countries like India, China, Vietnam, Cambodia, etc. were literally raped by Western Imperialism which sucked much of their potential strength from them. Today, finding themselves left behind in a highly industrialized world, many of the people of these countries are prepared to continue the form of government they have always known, viz. what Americans would call a dictatorship, if it in fact offers them a rapid road to the 20th century. Progress into the 20th Century is what the battle is being fought over, not liberty or freedom, or democracy. It is apparent that this is what the Communist dictators offer the people of the Far East while the American variety offers little more than a continuation of the old imperialist policy of robbing the country of its natural resources and leaving little or nothing for the inhabitants.

UMASS ENGINEERS:

MEN ON THE MOVE

G-E TECHNICAL MARKETING PROGRAM

PREPARING FOR LEADERSHIP IN MARKETING, APPLICATION, FIELD AND SALES ENGINEERING

One of the most challenging and rewarding careers for engineers at General Electric is field, sales, and systems application engineering. We call it Technical Marketing, and we think you should investigate it before you make a career decision.

Why investigate Technical Marketing at G.E.? Loads of reasons. Take a look. There is a wide range of career opportunities (G.E. operates in more than 100 different business areas), a dynamic climate in which to work, and exceptional growth opportunities, including early management responsibility. In fact, our theme for Technical Marketing is Men on the Move.

Take a closer look. G.E. Technical Marketing has spots waiting for the right men in Boston, Hartford, Pittsfield, and in Houston and L.A., if you've got the urge to see new places.

G.E. wants you to select a specialty from one of 13 clearly defined Career Areas. You can apply and sell large turbine generators, or industrial electronic equipment, or computers, or electric utility systems -- all for a leader in each field.

You can handle the nation's largest customers, and many positions in Technical Marketing give you the chance to travel throughout the country getting to know your customers' specific needs and problems. Whatever you do, you'll be using your skills and personality, in addition to your engineering degree. A couple of things you have to do first.

First, come in and talk to the G.E. Technical Marketing representative when he's at UMass. How about it? He'll be here on Thursday, December 9, and Friday, December 10. So sign up for a Technical Marketing interview and talk to the man who can help your career get a flying start.

Sincerely,

ished just behind with an 8.05 Jack Bradbury of Mass was third. The lead at this point was 10.65 for Mass, and a win by Pitt on the rings did not hurt Mass. Dusenbury, one of the many specialists on the Redmen team, received an 8.1 to winner McKinnis' 8.7. Pete Grosso was next high UMass competitor with a 7.6.

The depth of the Mass team was a far cry from last season when they had only eight men. Erik Kjeldsen's team had 17 different entrants, 12 of which appeared in only one event. Since a large number of the specialists are sophomores who can devote their practice to just one event, it appears that this could be a rewarding season. UMass will oppose national champion Penn State, Springfield and Army in future meets this season.

Married Students Face Problem Of No Housing

by KAREN ROSE
Feature Staff
10 MARRIED COUPLES LIV-ING IN ONE APARTMENT

The County Circle dorms and the Lincoln Apartments, built at various times during the fifties to replace the Army-baracks-type Federal Circle and create adequate housing for married students, have long been the $50-a-month answer to the $125-$150-a-month housing available outside the campus.

But now the more numerous County Circle apartments are slated to be leveled in the U-Mass expansion program. By the end of the second semester, there will be a highway running through what was once a couple's bedroom.

With the destruction of the majority of the County Circle dormitories, married students on campus are going to find it harder and harder to find four walls and a ceiling in which to live.

When the Lincoln Apartments, having approximately 110 units, becomes the only designated residence for the over 1300 married students at the University, they will be confronted with a possible problem of housing about ten families in each unit, or only 10% of the married students on campus.

MARRIED STUDENTS GET LAST CHOICE

The fact that the Lincoln apartments are open to single staff and faculty, married staff, foreign students, as well as married graduate and undergraduate students further complicates the housing situation.

The priority for housing is given to married staff members, single faculty, single staff, married grad students with children, and then foreign students and married undergrad students coming last on the list.

At present the University has no plans for the construction of more married students housing facilities on campus. The University feels that such housing should be handled by private enterprises.

The married students are opposed to this idea because housing built by private firms included units with air conditioning, wall to wall carpeting and other amenities which the married student does not want and cannot afford.

COMMITTEE STUDIES HOUSING PROBLEM

Recently a committee was formed in the Student Senate to investigate the situation in regard to married housing. The committee members include representatives from the Dames Club, the Graduate Student Senate, the Collegian, and the Student Senate.

The committee is headed by the married students senator Lew Gurwitz who feels that such a committee can and will get something done to alleviate the housing situation.

Gurwitz mentioned that the committee hopes to get some help from the forthcoming report on the housing situation which is being compiled by the Housing Office.

OVER 5,000 MARRIED STUDENTS BY 1970

Looking ahead at the married students housing situation at the committee meeting last Friday Gurwitz stressed that something must be done to get more housing for married students because Dean Moore of the Graduate School has said that by 1970, approximately 10,000 grad students will be attending the University and out of these

The County Circle dorms, now housing the bulk of the married students on campus, are torn down to provide for a new four-lane highway circling the periphery of the campus.

REDMEN NIP VERMONT IN THRILLER, 61-60

by GLENN BRIERE

Holding on desperately against a surging Vermont basketball team, the Redmen won their second game, 61-60, in a super-thriller at Burlington, Vt., Saturday night. A solid UMass lead was slowly demolished by the Catamounts, but the rally fell short before a wildly partisan Vermont crowd.

Since neither team was particularly prolific offensively, it was a game of defense and rebounds. The Redmen out-rebounded the taller and heavier Cats 54-43, and used their speed to good advantage. But they were also guilty of many mistakes, some of which almost proved fatal. In addition, key rebounder Frank Stewart played the entire second half with three personal fouls, and Clarence Hill limped off the court under assistance at half-time.

Hill was all right in the second half, and so were the Redmen, it seemed. The Cats had led, 42-38, with 14:12 left in the game. Massachusetts then proceeded to string together sixteen straight points by tight defensive work and great rebounding. The score was 54-42 in favor of UMass with 9:35 left. But Vermont chipped away at the lead until with 4:30 left, the Redmen found themselves on top by just two points, 55-53.

A basket by Clarence Hill and a free throw by Vermont's Mark Hanna made it 57-54. With 3:20 left, Layne Higgs banked in a shot and UVM crept to within a point of UMass, 57-56. Frank Stewart and Jim Babyak tallied to give the visitors a more comfortable 61-56 margin with 2:40 left. But Vermont was not through yet.

Two baskets by big Milt Goggans again cut the Redmen's lead to a point.

With a minute left UMass slowed down play, and Vermont, using a frantic zone press, fouled Mike Meola. He missed on a one-and-one situation and the Catamounts snagged the rebound with 32 seconds left. A jump was called between Hanna and Meola with 14 seconds to go. The Cats got the tap and called time out with 11 seconds showing on the clock. They put the ball in play but missed two short jumpers and a 15-footer from the corner. In a mad scramble for the valuable rebound, the Redmen came up with it and the buzzer sounded. The scoreboard above the dejected Vermont fans read UM 61 UVM 60.

In the first half, the Redmen ran off the first eight points against a loose zone defense. series of thrown away passes. But Vermont came back after a The visitors' fast break was working smoothly, but at times they were too fast for even themselves. Their shooting was also unusually cold. Despite this, they held a 31-28 lead at halftime. But when Clarence Hill limped off with an ankle injury, speculation arose that he might not play the second half. He did, however, and he was outstanding in the process. He led all scorers with 25 points. Jim Babyak tallied 19, and Milt Goggans led the losers with 20 points.

Not enough can be said about the Redmen rebounding. Bill Tindall, Jim Babyak and Frank Stewart all did an admirable job off the boards. They were especially outstanding in the second half. Coach Johnny Orr also employed a press which worked quite well. Generally, it must be said that the team was not at its best Saturday night. But they showed surprising potential sometimes, especially in the rebounding department. They will have to be at their best Thursday night, when they visit a tough Rhode Island team in their second Yankee Conference game.

The team was entertained after the game by Warren Glin-gras '48, a UMass alumnus who lives near Burlington. They enjoyed, among other things, a tape of the radio broadcast of the game.

Clarence Hill sustained a slight twist of the ankle, but he should be able to play in the Rhode Island game.

though they were extended to the limit before defeating the Hoovers 39 - 36. The Wheeler Trojans used their height to good advantage in a 48-33 win over the Gorman Elms, while the Hickorys enjoyed their first victory (65-62) at the expense of the Hi-lo's.

A great spectator sport, hockey features rough bodily contact and continuous fast action.

Gymnasts Winners In Pitt Opener

by AL RICE

The varsity gymnastics team opened its season on a jubilant note Saturday night by accomplishing something they couldn't do all last season, a victory.

The team recorded its first Eastern Gymnastics League win since joining last year by edging Pittsburgh 153.75 to 145.45.

UMass outscored Pitt in all events but the floor exercises and the rings, the first and last events. They took first places on the trampoline and parallel bars, both by senior co-captain Dave Lizotte, by Fred Babakian on the side horse and Al Carver on the high bar.

Pitt started off by scoring well in the floor exercises behind the one-two finish of Dave McKinnis and Dave Shidemantle, but Mass came back with a one-two finish in the side horse contest. Fred Babakian, one of many UMass sophomores, won an 8.3, and his teammate Bob LeClair picked up the only other eight for a second place finish. Lizotte finished first on the trampoline, and UMass won the event by just over a point despite Pitt's second and third. With the rule change this season counting the actual judges' scores rather than points for places, the close bunching of the Mass scores added up to their winning several events despite strong individual performances by Pitt.

The 7.25 with which Lizotte won the trampoline and the scores of Toby Kasavana and Al Carver gave Mass, a 30 point lead after three events, and they built on it the rest of the way. On the horizontal bar, Mass won by over six points. Carver's 7.5 as last competitor easily beat Joe Leonard of the Panthers, and Mass' sophomore all-around man Steve Brown scored a 5.9 for third.

The high bar cost Pitt points because Bob Davies fell twice and failed to finish. His 0.9 score counted for Pitt in the event.

Pittsburgh was a surprise winner over Massachusetts and Al Cohen in the long horse vaulting. Carver took the lead in the event with a 9.0 on his first vault, a cartwheel, but Cohen followed with a 9.2 on his second vault, a hecht from the neck. Shidemantle was the last Pitt competitor, and his first vault tied Cohen at 9.2 His second score of 9.25 won the event by a whisker.

Lizotte scored an 8.1 as fourth man up on the parallel bars, and it held up through four more contestants for his second victory. Jim Sacco finished.

Intramural Report

by DAVE JARNES

After less than a full week's activity, several upsets and surprisingly strong teams have highlighted the young basketball season.

Although the Grayson Aces' winning over the Plymouth Patriots was just a mild upset, the fact that they did it with such ease (57-43) suddenly projects the Aces into strong title contention. Jack Thomas, who led the North league in scoring last season, picked right up where he left off last year with 23 big points. League leading scorer Ray Stanelis was high man for the Pats with 22 points.

Meanwhile the Grayson Flaming A's remained in first place ahead of the Aces with a 43-33 decision over the Trotters for their second win. The Webster Hawks bounced back from an opening game loss with a 62-19 trouncing of the Thatcher Hemlocks. The Thatcher Redwoods were equally unlucky as the Hemlocks as they were bombed by the Grayson Phallics 45-22.

The biggest surprise of the South league are the flying starts by the new southwest dorm entries, the Colt 45's and the Comanches. Both teams stand 2-0 as the Colts nipped the Cherrys 30-28 and the Comanches toppled the Chestnuts 41-26.

The power of the South league, however, is probably the Mills Birch who scored an easy triumph (49-33) over a strong Butterfield Lemon team. Rounding out the South league, the Brett Black Bears beat the Slippery Elms 41-30 and the Limes edged the Redmen 35-32.

The Gorman Maples used a balanced attack in taking over first place in the West league with a 2-0 record by bombing the Hicks 62-32. The Gorman Oaks kept pace with the Maples, al-

VOL. XCIV, NO. 35

UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS, WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 8, 1965

Members of the cast of the play, "One Way Pendulum," prepare for their opening night Thursday, December 9.

'Absurd' play opens Thursday

The University of Massachusetts Theatre will present its first absurdist drama—One Way Pendulum by N. F. Simpson, Dec. 9, 10 and 11.

Absurdism is not as far removed from our understanding as some people would have us think. According to director Bordner, "The playwrights of the absurd are asking us as audience to re-evaluate our existence in terms of the illogical, disoriented world of the 20th Century. They are presenting the same problems of the human condition that playwrights have always presented."

The difference then must be that they destroy conventional structure, dialogue, and symbols, and then re-create these theatrical elements in a contemporary and unconventional manner. Because the conventions are broken, the play is very often dismissed as impossible to understand.

However, Bordner states that, One Way Pendulum can be understood on a purely comic level. Its crazy, but it is a level of communication."

In explaining the title, Mr. Bordner pointed out that gravity acts as a check on a pendulum as it swings, just as society acts as a check on the individual moving within it. In this case the pendulum defies the law of gravity, being one way, and the characters defy social and human laws, being abnormal.

One Way Pendulum will be presented in Bowker Auditorium. There is no admission charge, but reserved seats must be picked up at the student union box office.

Unpaid Bills Due

Senate phone war ends soon

By RICHARD DANCA
Day Editor

Student Senate Treasurer Gary Bombardier has renewed his battle to reclaim unpaid telephone bills on long-distance calls from dorm phones and vowed to end the war next Wednesday when the names of those students who do not pay will be turned over to the appropriate judiciary.

The students, most of them men, according to Bombardier have been traced through the Purchasing Office and will have until 5 p.m. Dec. 15 to pay their share of the approximately $200 bill to Mr. Robert Fowler, Purchasing Office, Machmer Hall, W15.

Students who come forward voluntarily, says the Senate Treasurer, "will have no action taken against them."

Bombardier also said "the patience of the Student Senate has run out" and said that two other steps may be taken:

- Some of the offending dorms, Grayson and one other Bombardier refused to name, may lose their inter-dorm phones, and . . .

- All dorm phones may be made "red-dot" phones which are only campus phones and cannot be used to call Amherst area numbers as the present yellow-dot phones can.

Either or both these actions can be taken at the discretion of the senate treasurer, says Bombardier, unless a specific bill is passed preventing him.

Some of the unpaid-for calls have been made to such places as Madison, Wis., Tufts Col., Newton-Wellesley Hosp., and the Springfield Weather Station.

Bombardier says he thinks he's being fair, since "they've had over three weeks to pay" and since the recent Collegian article prompted payment of much of the money.

Fowler said "I've done about as much as I can", and he will turn his list over to Bombardier after Wednesday.

Students who see Fowler about their unpaid telephone bills will be billed through the University Treasurer.

Drake loses license

By RICHARD DANCA
Day Editor

The Village Inn lost its liquor license for 1966 yesterday as a successful petition fight caused the vote to be considered separately from the other 18 licenses approved by Amherst Selectmen.

The renewals were made at the selectmen's regular meeting last week.

The Drake's present liquor license expires Dec. 31 and could not come before the Amherst Selectmen before Dec. 1966. An appeal of the refusal would have to be made through the Alcoholic Beverages Commission in Boston.

Bradford Parker, manager of the Inn, refused to comment on the license denial, on advice from his attorney and would not say "at this time" whether or not he planned to appeal the ruling.

He said he would release full information to the press as soon as he and his lawyer had decided their course of action.

Parker refused to name his attorney.

Likewise, Norman MacLeod, chairman of the selectmen, would not say whether or not he expects an appeal.

MacLeod said only that the selectmen would not vote on the issue again until next December when all Amherst liquor licenses, come up for renewal for 1967.

One of the 40 Amherst residents who signed the petition leading to the refusal, Dr. Sheldon Clapp, indicated he was satisfied with the ruling, but said he knew nothing about what might happen if an appeal was filed with the ABC.

He said it was too early to say whether any of the petitioners would follow the fight to Boston since an appeal has not even been made.

Parker said the recent Collegian editorial in favor of license renewal for the Drake was "just great".

"If only we could get other people to look at this in an adult manner", the Drake manager said, "there would be no problems."

The editorial compared the Drake's Rathskellar to "the legendary beer halls of Europe."

Jules Feiffer to appear at Student Union tonight

Appearing at the Student Union tonight at 8 p.m. is the noted cartoonist and satirist Jules Feiffer. The program sponsored by the Distinguished Visitors Program includes a film made by Mr. Feiffer and a lecture.

It is said that Mr. Feiffer had made it on his own terms. He has questioned what he views as the hypocritical (a favorite target is atomic testing) and has defended what he regards as the human (a favorite subject is the bafflement of love in Greenwich Village.)

His strong points are said to be tenderness and pity which he has incorporated into his famous characters Passionella and Munro.

Feiffer's weekly cartoon is syndicated to some forty American newspapers, including the New York Post, as well as to the Paris edition of the New York Herald Tribune, the London Observer, and papers in Rome and Stockholm. He also draws a cartoon each month for the Playboy Magazine and does occasional pieces for Holiday.

In a one-act play by Feiffer entitled, "Crawling Arnold," which premiered at the Festival of Two Worlds in Italy in 1961, Feiffer dealt with the subject that he handles best,—air-raid shelters, sibling rivalry, social workers, and Negro nationalists.

"The How and Why of Satire" is the subject of Mr. Feiffer's film and it is also the secret of his humor.

SUG election Thursday due to three resignations

Elections will be held Thurs., Dec. 9 from 8:30 to 5:30 for a SUG Board representative from the class of '68 and for one fraternity and one sorority senator.

Nomination papers for these positions have been available since Mon., Nov. 28 and they will be due at the R.S.O. office 5 p.m. Mon., Dec. 6.

The positions are open due to recent resignations in the senate and, in the case of SUG Board, due to the new structure of the board.

It is imperative that sophomore re-election for SUG Board be held—at present the group is working without an elected representative from the class of '68 because there were technical complications involved which made the first two elections for this post invalid. Thus, the election is to be only to be a rerun of the ballot.

Nomination papers for two positops as commuter senators will also be available at the R.S.O. office Mon. Dec. 6 and are due back on Fri., Dec. 10 at 5 p.m. Per usul nominees are required to sign the sheet provided stipulating that they have read and will abide by them. Elections will be held for commuters Dec. 16.

Newman Club names advisors

Dr. Anthony M. Gawinowski of the University's Chemistry Department has been named advisor to the University of Massachusetts Chapter of the National Newman Student Foundation. Since his graduation from Villanova College in 1948, Dr. Gawinowski has been active in and for Newman Clubs at several state universities.

His initial encounter with the Newman Club was at the University of Missouri where he studied several years and received his Masters and Doctoral degrees.

His interest in Newman continued as he pursued post doctoral studies at the University of Texas at Austin.

Prior to joining the faculty here in September of 1963, Dr. Gawinowski taught Chemistry of Kansas State University, where he served as lay advisor to their student Newman Club.

Working in conjunction with Monsignor David Power and Father Joseph Quigley of the Newman Center, and the officers and members of the Newman Club, Dr. Gawinowski hopes to witness an even greater growth of interest and participation in Newman Club activities through new programs and social events designed to bring undergraduate, and graduate students and faculty members into closer contact through the Newman Club.

The Catholic students of the University of Massachusetts can look forward to seeing their Newman Club expand in activity and interest under the experienced guidance and advice of their new advisor.

Dean Hopkins warns students of illegal 'care packages' on campus

When final exams roll around, parents of UMass students can expect to receive in the mail an ad from the "Student Rescue Committee" which claims to be helping University students during the nerve-racking and lonely final exam period. The committee offers to deliver to the student, for a charge of $3.50, a kit containing an assortment of crackers, cookies and fruit and, for an extra 50 cents, an "Italian Knowledge Hammer."

Dean of Men Robert Hopkins warns parents of students not to purchase these kits. Hopkins says,

The University does not approve of the selling or distribution of these kits on the UMass campus. But, since the sellers of the kits make no great effort to inform parents of the disapproval of the University, many assume that the University does approve. Some parents have even assumed that the University is doing the selling and distribution.

Assistant dean of students, Robert Brooks, who keeps a file related to the activity of this organization at UMass, stated:

"When, as sometimes happened, the kit was not delivered, irate parents have complained to me assuming that the University can be held responsible for the acts of a group that seemingly is acting under its authorization. The University does not, as many parents assume, allow any organizations access to the files. These organizations get their information from the Student Directory which anyone can obtain."

The official policy enunciated by Dean Hopkins is to withhold approval to any organization that is not providing a "beneficial" service to the student.

"We feel," said Hopkins, "that this service is not of benefit to anybody but the particular men running the so-called 'service.'"

What particularly incensed University officials this year has been the inclusion in the kit of the "Italian Knowledge Hammer." Directions for the use of the yellow and blue plastic hammer tell the student to "Place the hammer no more nor any less than 6 inches away from the center of your brain (if none—money refunded), bring towards target (your skull) with the force of a weak boxer. Each hit 2 1/2 oz. of tapable knowledge."

Chanukah festival features Israeli-born folksinger

Abraham Grobard, International Folk-singer and Accordionist will highlight Chanukah Festival Dec. 12.

The dreidels are spinning, the Menorahs are lighting and Chanukah, the Festival of Lights, is here again. Chanukah will be celebrated at the University on Sunday, Dec. 12 at 7:00 p.m. in lines 4 and 5 of the North Dining Commons. Of course, as has been tradition, there will be delicious latkes, served to all who attend.

This year's party will also be highlighted by the performance of "Avram, International Folk-singer and Accordionist." "Avram," Abraham Grobard, is Israeli-born in his native country. He played and sang with his own band while serving as a paratrooper in the Air Force

Later he performed with the "Hagalgal" group of the Israeli Transportation Union, in a musical review and as an entertainer on the ships of the Zim Lines.

Since he has been in the United States, he has performed throughout the country, at many universities, night clubs, coffee houses, and for many social organizations.

"Avram's" extensive repertoire included mood and comedy songs in twelve languages. His original personal interpretations of Israeli, Russian, Yiddish, and English songs are always unforgettable.

For an evening of fun, culture, entertainment and delicious foods, all are invited to attend the B'nai B'rith Hillel Foundation's Chanukah Party.

THE BLUEBIRD OF HAPPINESS HAS FLOWN THE COOP

Can education bring happiness?

This is a question that in recent years has caused much lively debate and several hundred stabbings among American college professors. Some contend that if a student's intellect is sufficiently aroused, happiness will automatically follow. Others say that to concentrate on the intellect and ignore the rest of the personality can only lead to misery. I myself favor the second view, and I offer in evidence the well-known case of Knut Fusco.

Knut, a forestry major, never got anything less than a straight "A," was awarded his B.T. (Bachelor of Trees) in only two years, his M.S.B. (Master of Sap and Bark) in only three, and his D.B.C. (Doctor of Blight and Cutworms) in only four.

Academic glory was his. His intellect was the envy of every intellect fan on campus. But was he happy? The answer, alas, was no. Knut—he knew not why—was miserable; so miserable, in fact, that one day while walking across campus, he was suddenly so overcome with melancholy that he flung himself, weeping, upon the statue of the Founder.

By and by, a liberal arts coed named Nikki Sigafoos came by with her Barbey doll. She noted Knut's condition. "How come you're so unhappy, hey?" said Nikki.

"Suppose you tell me, you dumb old liberal arts major," replied Knut peevishly.

"All right, I will," said Nikki. "You are unhappy for two reasons. First, because you have been so busy stuffing your intellect that you have gone and starved your psyche. I've got nothing against learning, mind you, but a person oughtn't to neglect the pleasant, gentle amenities of life—the fun things. Have you, for instance, ever been to a dance?"

Knut shook his head.

"Have you ever . . . and then to a justice of the peace," watched a sunset? Written a poem? Shaved with a Personna Stainless Steel Blade?"

Knut shook his head.

"Well, we'll fix that right now," said Nikki, and gave him a razor, a Personna Stainless Steel Blade, and a can of Burma Shave.

Knut lathered with the Burma Shave and shaved with the Personna and for the first time in many long years he smiled. He smiled and then he laughed—peal after peal of reverberating joy. "Wow-dow!" he cried. "What a shave! Does Personna come in injector style, too?"

"It does," said Nikki.

"Gloriosky!" cried Knut. "And does Burma Shave come in menthol, too?"

"It does," said Nikki.

"Huzzah!" cried Knut. "Now that I have found Personna and Burma Shave I will never have another unhappy day."

"Hold!" said Nikki. "Personna and Burma Shave alone will not solve your problem—only half of it. Remember I said there were two things making you unhappy?"

"Oh, yeah," said Knut. "What's the other one?"

"How long have you had that bear trap on your foot?" said Nikki.

"I stepped on it during a field trip in my freshman year," said Knut. "I keep meaning to have it taken off."

"Allow me," said Nikki and removed it.

"Land's sakes, what a relief!" said Knut, now totally happy, and took Nikki's hand and led her to a Personna vendor and then to a justice of the peace.

Today Knut is a perfectly fulfilled man, both intellectually and personality-wise. He lives in a charming split-level house with Nikki and their 17 children and he rises steadily in the forestry game. Only last month, in fact, he became Consultant on Sawdust to the American Butchers Guild, he was named an Honorary Sequoia by the park commissioner of Las Vegas, and he published a best-selling book called I Was a Slippery Elm for the FBI.

The makers of Personna® Stainless Steel Blades and Burma Shave® are pleased that Knut is finally out of the woods—and so will you be if your goal is luxury shaving. Just try Personna and Burma Shave.

Married Students Forgotten

The problem of finding housing should not be left to the married student alone. As more people go on to undergraduate and graduate studies, the percentage of young married couples rises. This is a reality that cannot be overlooked.

UMass is usually forward-thinking and keen-sighted in its building programs. Evidence to this can be seen in the four rising towers of the southwest complex which will house 5,000 more undergraduate students.

If the administration prefers to leave married housing to private firms, it should, at least, attempt to insure the students of facilities within their financial range. There should also be a supplement to private housing with university-built housing.

Time is running out and it will take a combined effort to ready enough housing for the 5,000 marrieds expected on the campus by 1970!

LITTLE MAN ON CAMPUS

"IT HAS BEEN CALLED TO MY ATTENTION, MR. PHILLIPSON, THAT YOU HAVE BEEN VERY OUTSPOKEN IN YOUR CRITICISM OF OUR SCHOOL POLICY ON CAMPUS ATTIRE."

More Than a Place to Get Drunk

The Amherst Board of Selectmen has made a serious mistake in refusing to renew the Drake's liquor license, a decision which may mean the closing of that establishment. The mistake is the result of a misunderstanding between the residents of the town and the students of the University. The people of Amherst just do not realize that to students the Drake is more than just another tavern, more than just a place to get drunk. It is a place to go to meet people, talk with them, and while away the evening over a glass or two of beer.

Unfortunately, as everywhere, there are those few irresponsible students who cannot control their own behavior. But this minority should not be allowed to ruin a good situation for the majority.

Perhaps a meeting could be arranged between the Board of Selectmen and student representatives from the University. How about it?

Why I Became a Y. I.

BY SAM SPARC

Let's hear it for the Young Independents! Here is one group, my friends, composed of diverse, independent thinking, independent acting young collegiates, performing according to their consciences and regardless of what may be the tempo of the times. Let's hear it for the Young Independents.

YOU KNOW, with some of these campus action groups, you can almost pick their members out of a crowd by their certain manner of appearance. But the Y. I.'s do not have this stereotype image, you can bet your button hat (equal button, that is). The Indies are all independent, for example, in their selection of boots; some wear black boots, others don suede boots, still others prefer the flash of black suede boots. Also, they each have different styles of leather jackets. No one has the same haircut (although in all fairness to the Scalp Shop I should omit the word cut), or the same sideburns. Each Y. I. wears a different black and white button: some have crosses, some have "sniccy" sayings, still others illustrate mangled hands. Let's hear it for the diverse looking, young independent Young Independents.

NOTE THAT THE FRAT BOYS (excuse moi, Fraternity men) all sit cliquely huddled at three or four high-rent district tables surrounding the famed Hatch Seeburg. Do the Y. I.'s sit at three or four tables all the day long in an effort to identify? You can bet your beard and burns they don't. They spread out over nine tables along the windows and identify really with no one. Alright now—let's hear it.

Of course, it is not the physical appearance of a group that is significant; what the organization accomplishes is what is most important. The Y. I.'s are not like some of these irresponsibly wild protest groups (you've seen their pictures in the papers) who hopelessly identify with old and uninteresting causes, such as Communist infiltration, police brutality, the American Indian, or alcoholism. This brave UMass group fights for the "in causes" of the day which, because of their pertinence, can gain the ultimate in impressive and effective publicity: the Negro revolt, for example. This problem is beginning to fade into the background, however, because it is not as timely as the Y. I. patriotic approach to the Viet Nam crisis. Thank God (?) groups like the Young Independents, reared in democratic America, are guaranteed their freedom of speech so they can air their views about how imperialistic is that war-monger Lyndon for his desire to protect freedom of speech from dying out in remote Southeast Asia. The solution to the problem is clear: get out. Why can't the world leaders see this simple path and act accordingly. Come on now, let's hear it for this thinking, wide-awake, in-cause campus organization.

TO RAISE MONEY for their worthy causes, the Young Independents are now selling Joan Baez Protest Song Books, better known as "Songs That Are 'In' This Year." Let's hear it for Happy Joan. Also on sale are several different varieties of buttons, previously mentioned. They symbolize peaceful protest over the injustices of the day. Pick a button, any button; it doesn't really matter what particular cause it represents. The point is that it harmlessly but individually hints at dissatisfaction and discontent, in addition to adding contrast to the monochromatic suede undershirt to which it is pinned.

I HAVE TRIED to show here —oh I have tried—that the Young Independents are a group of independent looking, independent thinking, and independent acting people. Coming from all the divisions of the socio-economic bracket, these collegiates working for good American "in causes" out of pure conviction—yet not seeking attention or identification—are a source of pride to the University community. Recent photographs of the Y. I.'s in action have reflected such wide notability upon them that the State Legislature was considering conferring an unusual decree on their behalf.

All together UMass students. Let's show our appreciation now for the work this group does in representing independent thought on campus. Let's really hear it for the Young Independents.

Strange, but I don't hear anything.

Letters To The Editor

Gentlemen. As the year draws to a close, the time is propitious for all able sophomore men to review their military obligation. As a college-educated man you can best serve your country and your own personal interest by earning a commission and fulfilling your obligation as an officer in the US Army.

As many of you know, there now exists a two-year ROTC Program which is designed specifically for those students who were not able to take ROTC in their first two years at the University. It works like this: A six week camp this summer at Fort Knox, Kentucky during the months of June and July; normal advance ROTC which includes 2 credit hours of Military Science each semester during Junior and Senior year plus pay of $40.00 per month; a military 1D draft deferment during Junior and Senior year; a commission as a Second Lieutenant US Army Reserve on graduation with an obligation to serve 2 years on active duty; military obligations may be deferred for graduate school purposes.

Last year, the first year of this new program, saw 10 University of Massachusetts students travel down to Fort Knox, Kentucky. They are: Dan Campbell, Theta Chi; Jim Elliott, Wheeler; Steve Gabriel, Hills-North; John Gallagher, Plymouth House; Steve Gauger, Hills-South; Norm Olson, Baker; Bob Santucci, Butterfield Terrace; Art Steinberg, Wheeler; Dave Strzepek, Southwest "C"; and Berne Woods, Kappa Sigma.

For information on this program see Captain Parker, Room 105, Dickinson Hall or if you prefer the student viewpoint, check with one of the students named above. They've been through it. They know the score.

UMASS ENGINEERS:

MEN ON THE MOVE

G-E TECHNICAL MARKETING PROGRAM

PREPARING FOR LEADERSHIP IN MARKETING, APPLICATION, FIELD AND SALES ENGINEERING

One of the most challenging and rewarding careers for engineers at General Electric is field, sales, and systems application engineering. We call it Technical Marketing, and we think you should investigate it before you make a career decision.

Why investigate Technical Marketing at G.E.? Loads of reasons. Take a look. There is a wide range of career opportunities (G.E. operates in more than 100 different business areas), a dynamic climate in which to work, and exceptional growth opportunities, including early management responsibility. In fact, our theme for Technical Marketing is Men on the Move.

Take a closer look. G.E. Technical Marketing has spots waiting for the right men in Boston, Hartford, Pittsfield, and in Houston and L.A., if you've got the urge to see new places.

G.E. wants you to select a specialty from one of 13 clearly defined Career Areas. You can apply and sell large turbine generators, or industrial electronic equipment, or computers, or electric utility systems -- all for a leader in each field.

You can handle the nation's largest customers, and many positions in Technical Marketing give you the chance to travel throughout the country getting to know your customers' specific needs and problems. Whatever you do, you'll be using your skills and personality, in addition to your engineering degree. A couple of things you have to do first.

First, come in and talk to the G.E. Technical Marketing representative when he's at UMass. How about it? He'll be here on Thursday, December 9, and Friday, December 10. So sign up for a Technical Marketing interview and talk to the man who can help your career get a flying start.

Sincerely,

Hearty Christmas spirit invades UMass campus

By TOM DONOVAN,
Feature Editor

The only thing lacking on this campus is "Jingle Bells."

Christmas, that harbinger of good cheer, badly-needed presents, and not-so-badly-needed term papers, has again blanketed the UMass campus to the tune of carol sings, hordes of Christmas cards, and the traditional lighted trees.

In one of the season's highlights, the class of '69 presented a combination Carol Sing and Party last Sunday in the S. U. Ballroom.

The SU University Store, girded since Thanksgiving for the campus Christmas rush, has been described by one awestruck co-ed as "just one big Christmas card!"

According to Assistant Manager Bill Lasher, the store is decorated during the Thanksgiving vacation and the Christmas cards, as many as 15,000 in some categories, are displayed early in December.

AMONG THE ARTICLES PURCHASED by the 2,000-3,000 students each day are stuffed animals, jewelry and pewter mugs. Lasher pointed out that the biggest seller each season is colored paper for homemade cards and decorations.

Lighted Christmas trees seem to symbolize the season's spirit for the majority on campus. Outstanding among the many individual trees in dormitory rooms and throughout the campus are two trees which are annually a part of the state university's contribution to the holiday mood.

ONE UNIVERSITY OFFICIAL, talking about UMass (oft accused of being a computer-based diploma machine) and its response to the approaching Yuletide vacation, said, "Even an IBM machine has to have a little heart at this time of year."

Each year the university purchases a fir tree, places it in the Student Union, and sets aside one night for an old-fashioned decorating party.

Student groups and organizations as well as individual students work together to make each year's tree better than the last.

EVEN METAWAMPEE, that guiding spirit who never cracks a smile unless the legendary chaste co-ed walks by, softens up a little during Christmas and agrees to take guard duty over the massive Norway spruce standing behind him.

The tree, estimated at over 75 feet high, is annually festooned with scores of colored lights by the time students come back from the Thanksgiving vacation. Alive with color and older than most of the senior faculty members would care to admit, it is crowned with a white star—symbolizing the religious spirit of Christmas.

AS A FITTING tribute to the ecumenical spirit on campus, last weekend while on duty Metawampee looked the other way just long enough for several Jewish students to display their sentiments and ingenuity in the shrubbery beneath the tree.

A hand-painted sign, lighted by the five-pointed star atop the glowing tree, sends out its tongue-in-cheek message—"Chanukah Bush".

Internat'l Club keeps busy

By M. AARIF GRAYYUR

The assimilation of different cultures, races, and languages in America will be analyzed by Professor Milton M. Gordon this evening at 6:15 p.m. at the weekly International Club meeting in the Governor's Lounge, S.U.

Prof. Gordon of the UMass Sociology Dept. is one of the outstanding teachers and scholars on the campus. He has written two award-winning books relating to the same topic on which he will speak. The books are, Assimilation in America, and Social Classes in America. All are cordially invited to attend.

because now you can complete Air Force ROTC in just half the time!

Are you interested in starting a military career while in college—but afraid it will cut too deeply into your schedule?

Well, here's good news for you. Air Force ROTC now offers a 2-year program. You can start it any time you have 2 years of higher education remaining—whether on the undergraduate or graduate level.

Here's another good thing about this program: you get a chance to "sample" Air Force life before you sign up. During a special summer orientation session, you get to make up your mind about the Air Force, and the Air Force gets to make up its mind about you. Only when both are satisfied are you finally enrolled in the program.

You'll learn a lot in Air Force ROTC. The curriculum has been completely revamped. The accent is on aerospace research and development. But of course the classes are only the beginning. The important thing is that you'll be taking the first big step toward a profession of great responsibility, as a leader on America's Aerospace Team.

Find out more about the new Air Force ROTC program. See the Professor of Aerospace Studies today!

Springfield hosts Dr. Politella Dec. 11

"In the Beginning Is the Word" is the subject of a talk to be given at the third annual school newspaper conference at Cathedral High, Springfield, by Dr. Dario Politella, Dec. 11.

Dr. Politella is associate professor of English and journalistic studies at the University of Massachusetts.

In describing the need for "sprightly" writing, Dr. Politella will tell high school newspaper writers that their principal mission is to get readers to read their stories.

Speakers at the conference will be area newsmen and Paul S. Swenson, director of The Newspaper Fund of the Wall Street Journal.

Dr. Politella has been active in student press circles since he edited the Lawrence (Mass.) High School Lawrencian in 1939. He has been a college editor and faculty adviser at U-Mass, Syracuse University, Kent State University in Ohio, and Ball State University, Muncie, Ind.

Formerly executive secretary of scholastic press groups in Ohio and New York State, he has been editor of The Sixth Estate, a magazine for high school journalists. He is currently editor of The Collegiate Journalist, a biannual magazine circulated nationally from Amherst.

Directing the Cathedral conference is Sister Edward Agnes, SSJ.

Zeta Nu scores big upset over LCA in IM basketball game

By DAVE JARNES

The very first night of fraternity basketball produced a monumental upset when ZN defeated defending fraternity champ LCA. ZN, sparked by Brian Lajole's 14 points, held a jittery Lambda Chi team to an unbelievable 3 points in the first half. In the second half star scorers Steve Shea and Jeff Larson sparked a LCA comeback which fell 4 points too short.

KS established themselves as a power by scoring a surprisingly easy 55-40 triumph over a good AEPi team. Jim Neary, Bob Gogick, and Bob Detore all hit double figures for KS while Alan White's 17 points led AEP.

Al Saggese scored 16 points for SPE but he got little help from his teammates as QTV won big 38-23. TKE displayed a well-balanced attack in a 44-35 triumph over ASP. Rick Erickson more than matched the entire SAM team with 21 points as TEP was victorious over SAM 44-15. In the only other fraternity game PMD coasted to a 39-23 win over ATG.

Bob Pearlman's scoring and Burt Cady's rebounding combined with an aggressive defense to give the Webster Rams a 35-27 win over the Baker Buffaloes. Defending dorm champs Chadbourne Maroons got double figure scoring performances from Barrett, Leary, and Martinez in

Freshmen hoopsters beaten

An off night in the shooting department by UMass' freshmen hoopsters and a strong rebounding show by Leicester Junior College were the ingredients as the Frosh bowed to the Minutemen, 91-82, Saturday night at Leicester.

The defeat, the first in two starts for the Redmen, took some of the shine off a superb performance by Mike Gemei. The 6'2" forward from Ossining, N. Y., piled up 35 hard-fought points on 16 field goals and three foul shots.

Gemei scored the game's first two baskets, but then Leicester reeled off 10 straight points to take command. The Minutemen attained a lead of 44-29 with a few minutes left in the half.

The teams traded baskets, but UM scored six points to end the half at a 46-37 deficit. Several times in the second half, the Redmen pulled close, once to within a basket, but couldn't deliver the haymaker.

Joe DiSarcina played his usual heads-up defensive game ("No faster hands in New England," says Coach Jack Leaman) and contributed 14 points to the losing cause.

Tony Koski, the 6'8" Leicester center, used his 220 pounds effectively in dominating the board action. Ken Burns, Bob Lindgren and Ron Baronowski, who starred with the '63-'64 state champion St. Mary's of Worcester team, also shone for the junior college.

opening their season with a 53-36 decision over the Baker Broncos.

Ohlson's 19 points and thirteen rebounds overwhelmed the Greenough Grants in the Bruins' 44-33 win. Rounding out the dorm action the Baker Barracudas bombed the Greenough Garfields, 41-20.

In the Independent league, the Untouchables displayed impressive depth and awesome power in clobbering the Hoopers 73-33. 6'9" Franz Von Brodsky scored 19 points for the winners. Gus Peabody's 18 points were instrumental in leading the strong Courtesy Taxi's to a 57-38 win over the Bombers.

Five Redmen make the Yan-Con all-star team

Massachusetts and Vermont, who shared the Yankee Conference Soccer Title with Connecticut, dominated the 1965 All Conference team, and Harold Grieg (Vermont) was named Coach of the Year following a vote of the six league coaches.

Connecticut halfback Al Lyon, New Hampshire right wing Glenn Aborn, and Maine centerforward Hamid Ahmed completed the first team selections.

The list of honorable mentions include goalie, Mike Dill (Conn.);

Paul Ruel's 23 points enabled the Gunners to romp over the Capitalists 60-32. In other games the College St. A.C. edged the Crusaders 50-41, the Shlubs nipped the Leftovers 32-27, and the Hot Rods walked over the Midgets 70-37 as Morgan tallied 24 points for the winners.

TURNING TO BOWLING: John Busineau's 532 cost TEP their first loss of the year but Leademan's consistent 549 gave TEP 6 of 8 points from ZN. PSD moved into a tie for first with TEP by sweeping QTV. Both teams stand at 22-2.

fullbacks—Ralph Nelson (Conn.), Paul Loeffler (Conn.), and Calvin Fisk (UNH); halfbacks—Allen Cowles (Conn.), Shadrack Ndam (URI), Bill Willey (Vt.) and George Tucker (UNH); right wings—Bruno Giadina (Conn.) and Abateni Ayanaba (Mass.); inside right forwards—Nat Santoro (Conn.), Martin Smith (Mass.), Jamis Samater (UNH), and Allan McTeague; centerforwards—Jack Wright (Conn.), John Fay (Conn.) and Pete Baldwin (Vt.); inside left forwards—Tony Dudas (Conn.) and left wings Gerald Cellilli (Mass.).

SOCCER AWARD WINNER — Redmen soccer coach Larry Briggs congratulates senior Bill Burgess, winner of the Maurice Suher Most Valuable Player Award. Burgess led the Redmen with 10 goals, and sparked the team to a 7-3 record and a tie for the Yankee Conference championship. The award was made at the team's annual banquet.

Conditioning Program For ski team completed

The University of Massachusetts Ski Team candidates have just completed their conditioning program in preparation for the coming racing season. Aside from running five miles a day to condition their legs for the demands made by competition skiing, all candidates have participated in two days of brush clearing in work at Thunder Mountain Ski Area located in Charlemont, Mass.

William MacConnell, who is varsity ski coach as well as a professor in forestry, feels that strong conditioning is the key to a successful racing season. The trail clearing operation is considered to be part of the conditioning program in that Professor MacConnell feels that a candidate's desire to pitch in and work hard will be a good indication of his desire to ski hard for the University.

In return for the work done at Thunder Mountain, the ski team will receive thirteen season passes at the ski area. This will allow the team to carry four additional members besides the eight varsity members, and to buy some needed equipment. The four additional members will be able to gain a years experience and hopefully will form the nucleus of future teams. Because of the high cost of skiing, and budget limitations, such as program could not be achieved in any other manner.

Aside from the fact that the work saves the ski team over four hundred dollars for season passes, it is also beneficial to the University because it helps to further a research program being carried on at the ski area by Professor MacConnell and one of his graduate students. This research is investigating various means of using forests to controlling wind erosion of snow.

Within the next two weeks all candidates will journey to Mt. Snow where the team cut will be held. After the team is picked, two training camps will be held in preparation for the coming season, one during Christmas vacation and the other after final exams.

The racing season begins the last weekend in January.

Records fall as mermmen Swamp Tufts 66 - 29

Two University records were set Saturday at the Boyden pool, as the UMass Swim team soundly over-powered Tufts University by winning ten of the eleven first places, and scoring 66 points in its opening meet.

The surge began when the Mermen took the first event, the 400 yd. Medley Relay. The team of Nowak, Severn, Levy, and Wilson, who went against the best of Tufts, beat them and broke the school's record doing it. This break-through set the tone for the rest of the afternoon.

Dick Daniels, co-captain, won the next event, the 200 yd. Freestyle, with a respectable 1:58.2.

Chip Weyer followed by beating the notable Jim Flugg of Tufts, in the 50 yd. Freestyle, and then Junior Dick Lennon swam his specialty, the 200 yd. Ind. Medley in record-breaking time, 2:16.8.

The diving team, ably coached by Graduate Student, Joe Yeskewicz, demonstrated their ability as Dick D'Andrea and Tony Roubond copped first and second places, respectively.

The 200 yd. Butterfly was the only Merman defeat. Steve Levy '67, vainly held on throughout the exhausting event, only to be out-classed in the final length by powerful Bill Sachnoff.

Chip Weyer washed Jim Flugg in his wake and took the 100 yd. Freestyle event. Frank Wilson swam a strong third behind Flugg. And Ken Nowak '68, lived up to previous expectations as he easily accumulated yardage to beat his closest competitor.

Dick Daniels came back again and won his favorite, the 500 yd. Freestyle. Dick finished 50 yds. ahead of his competitors, and relaxed idly as they floundered in. Dick Lennon won the 200 yd. Breaststroke in good fashion, and was followed by Diver Dick D'Andrea.

The meet concluded happily with UM dominating the 400 yd. Freestyle Relay. The team was composed of Nowak, Weyer, Daniels and Wilson.

The Swim Team journeys to Amherst on Wednesday evening, to compete against the cross-town powerhouse in an exciting meet.

$5.4 Million

Buczko hits UMB lease

Reprinted from Springfield Union

Boston—State Auditor Thaddeus Buczko criticized Tuesday the lease that will cost the state $5.4 million for the five-year use of a building for the Boston branch of the University of Massachusetts.

In an audit report, Buczko noted that if the lease is allowed to end in 1970, it will cost the state $1.7 million to restore the building for general office use. He said that the building can be purchased right now for $1.5 million.

In referring to the "costly terms" of the lease, Buczko said that "in fairness to the University it must be pointed out that the trustees were proceeding under a generally accepted mandate from the General Court that this branch was to be opened and in operation by September, 1965."

Buczko said the state will pay $1.9 million in rent, taxes and insurance over the five-year period. And alterations costs, exterior maintenance and restoration will push the total to $5.4 million.

Buczko said that to date there has been no request for funds to buy the building and that the University has an option to purchase the building for $1.5 million any time before April 30, 1968.

The auditor noted that the University is leasing the building from Eastern Gas & Fuel Associates who lease it from John Hancock Insurance Co. for $115,000 a year. He said Eastern Gas is charging the state $55,000 a year more than that for rent.

Leasing of the University of Massachusetts-Boston building was the only expedient way of providing education for more than 1,000 freshmen by the fall of 1965, according to a UMass spokesman.

This was accomplished by sealed bids with the full knowledge and support of the Governor and the Legislature, as authorized by them under Chap 388 of the Acts of 1965.

The University is pleased to learn, the spokesman said, that the state auditor agrees that the building should be purchased by the Commonwealth and pointed out UMass already has filed a bill requesting the Legislature to provide funds for this purpose.

'Freedom Christmas' Launched

By SANDRA FAIMAN, Staff Reporter

A major voter registration drive, 'Freedom Christmas', is underway in the states covered by the Voting Rights Act of 1965. Five major Civil Rights groups—SNCC, MFDP, CORE, SCLC and NAACP—have requested the aid of student volunteers during Christmas vacation and semester break.

'Freedom Christmas' volunteers will work primarily in countries which have federal registrars. The drive will comprise an orientation session for volunteers conducted by the civil rights group with which the volunteer is working.

The Congress of Racial Equality (CORE) will have projects in 26 counties in Louisiana, Florida, Mississippi, and possibly North Carolina. Volunteers will do rural and urban voter registration.

The Mississippi Freedom Democratic Party (MFDP) will be working in each of the fifteen Mississippi counties which has federal registrars. This project will begin about Dec. 19.

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) will be working in seventeen counties in South Carolina, Georgia, Virginia, North Carolina, and Florida. Emphasis will be for workers who can work after Christ-

SUG Board Adopts New Poster Policy

by DICK DANCA, Day Editor

Individual club bulletin boards have been eliminated from the Student Union as a result of a recent SUG board study and the center booths will be removed from the Hatch in the first step to improve service and seating there.

The only organization retaining its bulletin board is the commuters. All others needing permanent display space have been moved upstairs to a large bulletin "book" near the elevator, to the left of RSO.

Taking out the center "cloverleaf" booths during Christmas recess will add 50 more seats to the Hatch, according to Mary Hudzikiewicz, University program advisor.

The ad board will remain near the Hatch, but the ride board is to be enlarged and moved up by the bulletin hook.

A bookcase will be put near here, on the balcony, and clubs will be allowed to chain sign-up notebooks to this.

A new poster policy was also adopted by SUB board which would limit promotional posters to one poster per event.

Posters will be displayed for two weeks by the Calendar Office in the order they are received, first on the ground floor and the rest in the Lobby.

The revolving bulletin board will still be available only 48 hours prior to the event.

Posters must conform to the three sizes prescribed by SUG, and no hand-lettered posters will be allowed.

More study is needed on the Hatch enlargement proposals, and student surveys will be made before action is taken "so that they'll have the final say" says Mrs. Hudzikiewicz.

At last week's meeting, Joel Hartstone '67, was elected vice-chairman of the SUG board.

Program Council will sponsor a jukebox dance after Saturday's game, admission will be free with UMass ID's.

Trim-a-limb, Monday, was called "very successful" by Sheila McRevey, SU program advisor. Students working with the program council trimmed five trees in an hour and a half.

Folk-singer Ruth Steinberg '68, will be featured in a music hour Sunday at 3.

'One-Way Pendulum' Opens Today

In the University of Massachusetts Theatre play opening tomorrow night, one character teaches weighing machines to sing in chorus, another uses parking meters as savings banks and a third is a professional eater of leftovers.

One Way Pendulum, N. F. Simpson's play to be given Thur., Fri. and Sat., Dec. 9, 10 and 11 at 8:15 p.m. in Bowker Aud., a 'theatre of the absurd' drama with a whole collection of zany people and improbable happenings, according to Kenneth E. Bordner, director.

The play is the first master of fine arts production sponsored by the UMass Theatre and is part of Bordner's master of fine arts degree thesis.

The theatre of the absurd sees much that is anti-human and absurd in contemporary life, Bordner said, and satirizes it with plays full of deliberately irrational situations and wildly exaggerated characters.

One Way Pendulum, for example, deals with characters who have made an exaggerated swing in one direction—a way out swing that defies social and human laws like a one way pendulum defies the law of gravity, Bordner said.

They are confused eccentrics, unable to communicate and destructive, Bordner explained, but at the same time they are very funny. The play can be viewed as a very funny comedy, he added, whether or not the audience accepts its more serious comments on the failure of society to keep its more destructive eccentrics in check.

The play was first performed in Britain and came to the U.S. via a 40-performance off-Broadway run in 1961.

Bordner is a Massillon, Ohio native and Princeton Univ. graduate who received a master's degree in English at UM last year, writing his thesis on absurdist playwright Harold Pinter. He is a graduate fellow this year.

The play is completely produced by students. Gwendolyn Hamill, Brookline undergraduate, is assistant director. James Stockman is in charge of technical design, William Segal is lighting designer and Mary Grace Pennisi costume designer. All are graduate or special students.

The play's action revolves around the Groomkirby family. The cast includes Rick Kaplan of Sharon as Kirby Groomkirby, Kathleen Atkinson of Wellesley as Mabel Groomkirby, Robin Atkin of Baldwin, N.Y., as Sylvia Groomkirby, Betty Corea of Hingham as Aunt Mildred and Pat Freni of Tewksbury at Arthur Groomkirby.

Robert Barnes, the narrator, is played by Leslie Titcomb of Franklin, N.H. and other cast members are Nancy Abrams of Worcester, Daniel Weir of Amherst, Michael Hench of Northampton, Peter Stelzer of Longmeadow, Lawrence Wilker of Newton and Burgess Needle of Newton.

The play is open to the public without charge and seats may be reserved.

KENNETH E. BORDNER

Bordner instructs cast in intricacies of the production. "One Way Pendulum" will run Thursday, Friday, and Saturday nights.

Randall Interviewed On Careers In Recreation

by PAMELA METAXAS
Staff Reporter

Officially the catalog describes the professional recreator as "a diagnostician of the leisure needs of people and a developer and provider of opportunities to meet these needs." He may work at either the executive, administrative or the supervisory level.

Dr. William E. Randall, head of the Recreation department, recently described these three levels and other aspects of a recreation career in a Collegian interview.

The executive level can be parallel with a superintendent of schools, he said. He added the individual at this level is "responsible for long-range planning, budgeting and executing the policies of a recreation board."

The administrative level supports the executive level and is closely connected with it. On the other hand, the supervisory level is the "minimum starting level," said Dr. Randall. The person at this level is responsible for a part of staff, program, and facilities of the entire recreation program.

He pointed out that career opportunities exist in many areas. One of these is "voluntary agencies" which include Boy Scouts, Girl Scouts, Boys Clubs, Girl Clubs, YMCA, YWCA, Red Cross, Campfire Girls, Catholic Youth Organizations, and Jewish Community Centers. Another area is working with the physically handicapped and the aging. The chief purpose of the recreator in this case would be in "developing and maintaining morale" said Dr. Randall. Still another area is Armed Forces Recreation in which the possibilities include Youth Center and Service Club directors both here and abroad.

Dr. Randall emphasized that presently a '65 recreation graduate from the university is serving in a service club in Korea. He also said that in the field of organized camping the opportunities are "fairly minimal since camping is so seasonal in nature."

However, for the individual interested in the outdoors an ever-growing area does exist—environmental interpretation. This consists of communicating to the public the salient features of certain environmental settings, he said. An individual in this area might be a park naturalist or a park historian.

Currently there are about 72 colleges and universities throughout the country that are offering majors in recreation. For each recreation graduate there are 15 possible recreational positions available. Starting salaries for the recreation graduate begin at 5,000 and may range to $6,500 and over.

Dr. Randall concluded that in the realm of recreation the career opportunities and chances for advancement are limitless.

The recreation department will sponsor a "career in recreation" night on Tuesday, January 4 at the S.U. from 7:30 to 8:30. All interested students are urged to attend and find out more about recreation and the possibilities it offers as a career.

Press Club Elects Officers

Members of the newly formed Press Club met in the Middlesex Room of the Student Union yesterday afternoon and elected Virginia R. Sheinhouse, president.

Dr. Dario Politella, professor of journalism, was elected advisor to the group. Peter Hendrickson and Robert M. Murphy were elected vice-president and secretary, respectively.

Dr. Politella suggested that the Press Club petition the Alpha Phi Gamma fraternity, a student publications recognition fraternity that honors students who have worked significantly in every of several forms of campus journalism, for a chapter at UMass.

The group will meet Jan. 4 and 6 in the Middlesex Room from 4 to 4:30 p.m. Miss Sheinhouse extended an invitation to anyone interested in journalistic writing to attend.

Election of officers will be held at the Jan. 6 meeting.

FALL 1965 UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS FINAL EXAMINATION SCHEDULE JAN. 12 - JAN. 20, 1966

CONFLICTS - DEADLINE FOR REPORTING CONFLICTS IS NOON, SATURDAY, DEC. 18. Students with conflicts (simultaneous exams or three exams in one calendar day) are to report to the SCHEDULE OFFICE, SOUTH COLLEGE, as soon as possible, in any event before the DEADLINE (above). Conflicts reported after DEADLINE will not be adjusted by the SCHEDULE OFFICE.

Junior-Senior course exams are scheduling according to time of meeting of the class. ILLUSTRATION: "JS MWF 10:10" implies that those junior-senior level courses (i.e. numbered 200 and above) which meet at MWF 10:10 during the semester will be examined in this exam period.

Junior-senior exams are held in the normal class meeting rooms unless the instructor makes other arrangements with the Schedule Office.

Detailed room assignments for freshman-sophomore exams will be made and published at a later date.

Her songs belong to her

Reprinted from "Time"

She is a little girl lost behind a battered big-bellied guitar. Her dusky face, framed by a cascade of raven hair that spills across her shoulders and down to her waist, seems frozen in mournful repose. In a throaty voice edged with anguish, she sings some of the unluckiest lyrics ever heard in a nightclub.

"But where in the history books is the tale Of genocide to this country's birth, Of preachers who lied, How the Bill of Rights failed?"

Then, with a shy hint of a smile, she says to the audience, "I hope you're not offended." They are not; they are captivated.

In a trade plagued by imitators studiously imitating each is not her only pitch, and she has other things on her mind that any non-Indian can share.

What fires her songs with feeling is the peculiarly husky timber and flexibility of her voice. She can purr, she can belt, she can shade her voice with an eerie tremble that crawls up the listener's spine.

Orphaned as a baby, she was adopted by a Micmac Indian couple and raised in Wakefield, Mass. Her summers were spent on Sebago Lake, Me. It was here as a teenager, wandering alone in the forest, that she began to compose.

With the help of a government loan, she entered the University of Massachusetts, studied Oriental philosophy and elementary education. An honor student, she graduated in 1963 other, Buffy Sainte-Marie is uniquely herself. To begin with, she is a full-blooded Cree Indian. As such, she grew up a moody loner in a white man's world, she took lessons from no one, listened to no records, has had little truck with the chummy folk fraternity.

She writes her own songs, and at 23 she is the most intriguing folk singer to emerge in many a moon.

Buffy's protest songs are strictly personal. She is not interested in Viet Nam or the Bomb, but in Uncle Sam's treatment of the Indian. But protest and went to Manhattan, sat in on a hootenanny at a Greenwich Village folk den, was immediately offered a recording contract and nightclub dates.

Buffy now commands up to $2,500 a concert and hopes "to help correct the image of the Indian as someone who is chased across the movie screen or sits in his rocking chair watching his oil wells."

WHAT'S THIS?

Recently, some public-minded UMass students approached the Collegian office on a matter of some delicacy. Seems as if they had found a bag (paper) on the seat of a booth in the Hatch. Upon opening it, they found a woman's slip (size:

small), a number of hair rollers (size: medium), and a showed hat (size: kinda large). The Collegian would appreciate any information leading to the claim or return of the aforementioned articles. They won't fit us.

And it's better than ever today!

By GENA COREA,
Feature Staff

"I know she loveth me, but she dare not speak. She looked on me twenty times yesternight, and laughed so."

That's Ralph Roister Doister speaking, in the first English comedy, written before 1553 by Nicholas Udall. Ralphie is the hero of the drama organization, Roister Doister, UMass' first student organization.

Interested students formed the club on January 10, 1910 under the name "The Massachusetts Agricultural College Dramatic Society." In 1912, they changed the name to Roister Doister.

Because of the war, Roister Doister was inactive from 1917 to 1919. Then the club, through a notice, rallied the boys' round the stage again.

The support came. On June 18, 1920, the club presented "The Witching Hours" by Augustus Thomas. This play is significant in the RD's history. Girls were used in the cast for the first time.

In a somewhat ambiguous statement, Henry Peirce in his master's thesis on the Roister Doister's history, says, "This precedent enabled the group in the future to present plays other than farces."

Throughout its history, Roister Doister has produced plays in a fresh and stimulating manner. They produced "As You Like It" out of doors in a wooded glen. A brook bubbled nearby.

"Twelfth Night" took place in Grinnell Arena, a livestock arena for showing animals. The arena was converted into a 16th century theater.

And it's still operating! Roister Doister will cast for its three one-act plays on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of next week.

The three plays are: "A Slight Ache," by Harold Pinter, "Antigone," adapted by Jean Cocteau, and "Appollo of Bellac" by Jean Giraudoux. Scripts are available in the RSO office.

Roister Doister continues its tradition of hard work and sparkling plays. Mr. McKay, who spoke at the first meeting in 1910, would be proud of the present group. Minutes of that meeting read:

"A meeting of the students interested in forming a dramatic club was called to order by Mr. Sharpe. . . . Mr. McKay said the society having been formed, he hoped that its members would not let the interest wane, but accomplish something creditable to the college and to the club."

Post-holiday bus

The MAROON KEYS, a sophomore men's service organization, is sponsoring a bus from Port Authority (New York City) non-stop to UMass on Sunday, January 2, 1966.

The bus will leave Port Authority at 2:30 P.M. on Sunday. Reserve tickets will be sold through Friday 17 at the RSO office for $5.50.

This service is offered for out-of-state students to eliminate hours of waiting, as the Port Authority sells no seat reservations on busy holidays.

Married Housing

Campsites Available

BY NANCY LEIBOWITZ

Let's all play a game! It's called "Where Will We Live." All you have to do to play is be a student, married and poor. The object of the game is the Lincoln Apartments. They are designated on the board by the word UTOPIA.

Now someone start. Pick a card — advance to $45. This stands for the County Circle dorms. They are an intermediate move to UTOPIA. Here players learn sportsmanship. They share everything — even their bathrooms!

Next we pick a big M card. This stands for Mill Hollow Apartments . . . all graduate and undergraduate marrieds turn back! As Dante said, give up all hope to ever enter These gates (or did he?)

Now friend, don't get discouraged. You can still win. In fact, you just advanced two spaces — hey, watch out for that faculty man and that foreign student! Oh well, only four spaces back.

Your wife and kids are getting a little discouraged you say? They don't like you to study by lamppost light?

That's a good card you just picked. It says only four more years till you reach UTOPIA. Wait a minute! You graduate in three!

Quitting the game, huh? It is kind of hopeless, isn't it. Hey, don't forget your tent. Boy, is that campus pond going to get crowded. It's beginning to look like an Indian Reservation.

Hey, does anybody want to play a game?

No Place To Live

"State of UMass—Growing", shouted a Collegian headline at the beginning of the year. But some very important aspects of University growth have been overlooked.

For example, the University wishes to attract graduate students, but a large percentage of grads are married. Since there is not enough married housing on this campus, a great number of potential students will be lost to other colleges.

Particular among another group will be the veterans returning from South Viet Nam. It appears that the federal government will eventually have to put into effect a GI Education Bill similar to those which were passed after World War II and the Korean War. But most of these veterans will be married. No ex-GI will want to earn his degree at UMass, if there is no place to decently, and at a price which he can afford, house his family.

But even more, there is something wrong when a state university, supported by the taxes of its citizens, fails to provide adequate facilities for the very men who fought to defend that state, its university, and all which that university stands for in the way of education and free thought.

Of course, much of this is in the future, but this fact only emphasizes the lack of foresight exhibited by the administration. Not to sound trite, but time does pass quickly, and the future hurriedly becomes the present. If something isn't done soon to relieve these poor conditions for married housing, the University will suffer and may indeed find the shores of its pond crowded with tents.

the red bow in the waste basket

(Editor's Note: This article begins a series of columns which will relate incidents occurring in hospitals, the campus and anywhere the columnist has been.)

Mrs. Daughtery died with a red bow in her hair.

Yesterday she was alive. Very weak, but alive. Too weak to open her eyes. Not enough strength to eat. I asked her if she wanted anything. She whispered, "A baked potato."

Today I helped prepare the corpse. We turned her over to wash her. When we turned her back, a back fluid was all over her face. It had come up from her stomach. We washed her face. We removed the red bow from her hair.

The special nurse didn't remember post-mortem care. She read aloud directions from a post-mortem kit. "Place shroud under corpse. Fold right flap over right side of body. Follow same procedure for left side. Fasten folds together. Tie red ID tag to third toe on right foot. Tie white ID tag to outside of shroud . . ."

Then the orderly placed the body on a stretcher and wheeled it to the morgue, a walk-in refrigerator. Her face was left uncovered. That way, people in the halls wouldn't know she was dead.

Letters To The Editor

To the Editor:

For my part I do not want to commit myself to condemn or uphold the United States' policy, but what I do protest is the citizens who are condemning people for their particular viewpoints.

By dint of free speech any citizen can voice any opinion except violent overthrow of the government, and citizens can uphold or protest any policies as is their inclination. What disgusts me in any country are the people in it unwilling to tolerate any opinion but theirs. Specifically what disgusts me are the Iowa students demonstrating against the S.D.S., the American Legion which refused to deliver the Citizenship Award to Rabbi Gittelsohn because the rabbi marched on Washington last week, and the changing of draft classification for those male citizens who also have demonstrated or protested.

My stand is that these people are more the citizen than those who are trying to renounce them. Protesters are at the very least trying to arrive at some degree of truth. Are the Chauvinists ("my country right or wrong") really patriotic citizens? As my role in writing this is not to state a pro or contra I would only like to conclude that if the country is wrong I would surely desire to reserve my right to ask "Are we right?"

Married Student Writes

To the Editor:

As one of the 1300 married students on this campus I feel compelled to write concerning the article in Monday's Collegian about Student Housing.

It is a shame that the University doesn't feel obliged to help its undergraduate and graduate married students by supplying housing which they can afford. The hardest thing I ever tried to do was pay $115 a month rent and keepupother expenses as I did last spring semester. Most undergraduates simply can't afford costs like these on top of school costs. But it was luxury living: electric heating, beautiful tile baths, beautiful kitchen, and huge rooms. These things are luxuries and not necessary. Why can't the University see fit to help the 1300 students it doesn't help in housing. Surely a low-cost housing project isn't beyond the state that can afford 22 story buildings for single students.

You can say there's Lincoln, but have you seen the waiting list? And the undergraduate married student has very little chance to get in there. The Faculty, staff and even single grad-students can get in before an undergraduate with children. Surely there's something to be done to equalize chances. Many undergraduates will be out of the service and with families, aren't they important to the University?

Now the powers have decreed that the County Circle is to come down to make way for progress. All well and good I say, but Hampshire house apparently isn't to come down. Why displace the students living there? There are rumors that the Hampshire House is to be an office building. Now faculty offices take priority over housing for students. Even now Hampshire's second floor houses single male students. Why not displace these students and reconvert their apartments into student married housing as it used to be? Let the faculty find offices elsewhere, maybe in Berkshire or Middlesex. At least there would be room for 30 undergraduate apartments then.

It's time to help everyone. Let the cry be for more housing for everyone, including married students. To be a great university, the state needs to expand its facilities for married students as well as single students.

Merle Harris, 67

Newman Choir to Present Christmas Concert

GILES HEBERT

Under the direction of Mr. Gilles Hebert, the Newman Center Choir will hold its Third Annual Christmas Concert on Sunday, December 12, 1965 in the Newman Center Chapel at 6:00 p.m.

The featured work, Schubert's Mass in G Major, was composed in 1815 by the eighteen year old composer, and is set for soprano, tenor, bass soli, chorus, strings and organ.

The soloists are: Soprano, Ann Kathryn O'Sullivan, '67; Tenor, George Stillson, '68; and Donald E. McCarthy, '66; and Bass, Robert Roger Lebel, '67.

Mr. Hebert, a graduate of Assumption College, is presently organist and director of the Newman Center Choir since 1962. His Notre Dame Chorus recently presented the Mass in G in Holyoke.

Chess Team Remains Undefeated

The UMass chess team remained untied and undefeated as it crushed dW.P.I., one of the top New England teams, 4½-1½ this past Sunday. This victory added to the team's 3-0 previous record. Other victories this year include a 4-0 against Norwich, a 5-0 against A.I.C., and a 4-0 against Merrimack State.

As of there have been no losses to team members, only ties which were incurred this past weekend. Those participating in the tournament, in order of board positions, were Dave Palmer, Ed Kotski, Gil Daniels, Kim Sargent, Tony Abate and Bill Szymanski.

The team next plans to go to New York during Christmas vacation for the U.S. Intercollegiate Championships in hopes of bringing back trophies to UMass.

Special Forces Hold Maneuvers

The Bay State Special Forces, on their second trip to Fort Devens this year, held a joint exercise with about 70 cadets of the Northeastern Univ. ranger unit.

Under the leadership of Cadet Major John Soares, the UMass unit spent a tactical week-end with emphasis on the finer points of combat and reconnaissance patrolling. Highlights of the trip for the cadets were the bayonet and confidence courses.

The joint exercise, with a total force of about 100 men, allowed the operations to take place on a larger and more realistic scale. Two .30 caliber machine-guns and 30 hand grenade simulators made the combat patrol phase of the operation especially realistic.

The unit returned to campus after spending 35 hours in the field with only 3 hours sleep to break the monotony.

Search For 'Breck Girl' Begins

If you have never been a Winter Carnival Queen, Miss Football or one of the Ten Best Dressed, do not despair! Your chance for recognition may still be near.

Only a few girls walk out of Glamour Magazine every morning. But every girl can have beautiful hair and the Breck people believe most college girls do!

Miss Lolonda King, stylist for the Breck Co., feels that "the type of girl that typifies the 'Breck Girl' could be found at UMass."

This Fri., Dec. 10, Breck will visit the campus and hold a casting session in the Nantucket Room to choose a 'Breck Girl' from UM.

UMass Winter Concert To Feature Madrigals

In keeping with the spirit of Christmas, the UMass Chorale, Chorus, and Madrigal will pre-Dec. 12 at 4:15 in Bartlett Auditorium. The Chorale will sing a cappella selections including a madrigal, a folk hymn, works by Henry Purcell and Alan Hawness, and others.

The Madrigal Group will present several selections on its own.

For its finale, the Chorale and Chorus will sing The Christmas Story by Peter Mennin, a contemporary cantata of about 25 minutes in length. This will mark the first campus view of the new University Chorale.

Both the Chorus and Madrigal are newly created groups and it is expected that they will add much to the annual Winter Concert. The concert is open to the public with no admission fee.

Debate Society Successful At Tournament

A few weekends ago, members of the UMass Forensic Society travelled to UVM, Burlington, Vermont. The format of the debating tournament was of a practice nature. Debaters were given the opportunity to test new cases and new team combinations.

Representing UMass in the novice division was Alan Portnoy and John Durant, negative, and Elaine Pysz and Neal Whitman, affirmative. Entered in the varsity division was "George" Felker and Alan Davis, negative, and Anne Dalton and "Wren" Faren, affirmative. Each team debated five rounds. The total UMass record was eleven wins against nine losses, respectable but not remarkable.

Teams from thirty-four New England, New York, and Canadian colleges stayed at the Hotel Vermont, which, on the shores of Lake Champlain, practically floated.

Amherst Med. School Site Receives National Support

Supporters of an on-campus site for the University of Massachusetts Medical School won fresh encouragement Tuesday from the president of the American Medical Association.

Position Indorsed

Dr. James Z. Appel told newsmen he strongly indorses the AMA position that a "medical school is a better medical school when it is associated with a full university."

Stressing that "I would want to disassociate myself from any controversy specifically between Amherst and Worcester," Dr. Appel nevertheless spoke at length on the advantages of an on-campus facility.

In an afternoon press conference preceding his talk Tuesday night to the Hampden District Medical Society, he also discussed the high costs of medical and hospital care, the new federal Medicare program and general problems of medical education.

Saving Seen

Dr. Appel stressed that a medical school on or near a campus not only provides better education and training but involves a "substantial saving" due to the need to duplicate facilities.

The nonfinancial advantages of the on-campus school, he said, result principally from the "interchange" between basic science courses of the general university and those of the medical facility.

These advantages are mutual in that the overall university also gains from the availability of scientific facilities and courses connected with the medical school, he said.

Establishment of a new medical school in an off-campus location in Hershey, Pa., he said, is scheduled to cost $50 million and probably will cost $100 million or more by the time the first class is graduated. Dr. Appel is a resident of Lancaster, Pa.

Courses Offered

Officials of the Hershey school feel the absence of a general university so greatly that they plan to include philosophy, medical sociology and similar "humanistic courses" in an effort to compensate, he said.

The best protection against exorbitant doctors' fees, he said, is through grievance committees and claims review committees of local medical societies.

Regarding high hospitalization costs, he commented that the cause is the need of hospitals "to provide what the patient needs."

Principal cause of the shortage of new doctors, he said, is

Asian Linguists Needed

HONOLULU — Particularly crucial in Vietnam today, the shortage of Americans who speak Asian languages has long hampered U. S. diplomatic efforts in Asia.

Seeking to remedy this weakness, the East-West Center in Honolulu offers 100 full-expense scholarships annually to Americans interested in studying one of the languages of Asia.

EWC students study at the University of Hawaii with which the Center is affiliated. The Center has its own dormitories and American students are paired off with Asians to encourage East-West cultural interchange. Nineteen countries of Asia are represented in the student body.

EWC scholarships enable graduate students to complete their Master's degree in any field relating to Asia such as Asian art, religion, tropical agriculture, philosophy, history, political science and many other fields. All study an Asian language.

Qualified students may complete research and polish their language during a semester in Asia. Normally this field study occurs during the third semester of the grant.

For complete scholarship information, consult the Dean of your college or write to the Director of Student Selection, East-West Center, Honolulu, Hawaii 96822.

the lack of medical schools. "Medical schools turn away two qualified applicants for every one they accept," he said.

Total Picture

The country currently has 88 active medical schools, 11 in what he called "development stages" and 11 more in what he called "thought stages."

By the early 1970's, he said, 100 or more medical schools should be in operation.

Dr. Appel said he knows of no professional medical organization which is encouraging doctors to refuse to treat patients under the Medicare plan.

"Some doctors will not participate in filling out some of the forms involved," he said. He stressed, however, that their plans amount to a refusal to accept federal payment.

"Doctors can strike in the United States, but I know of no plans or threats regarding such a move," he said.

Disagreement Marks Viet Nam Discussion

"The U. S. moral and legal position in Viet Nam is untenable," Rev. Phillip Beragan of Epiphany College said in a Viet Nam panel discussion in Mahar Auditorium Saturday. The panel also included government Professor Bruce Marshall and history Professor Salvatore, both from Smith College.

The discussion was introduced by Diedrick Snoek, professor of Psychology at Smith. William Havard, chairman of the University's Government Department, acted as moderator. Each panelist spoke for 30 minutes and was allowed a five-minute rebuttal.

There are elements in U. S. policy toward Viet Nam that are demonic and paranoid, Father Beragan stated. He believes the U. S. has overlooked situational reality, mainly Vietnamese nationalism. Nations should be sovereign, selecting their own form of government, said Father Beragan. Emphasizing the cost in civilian lives, the priest said he sees no war-like solution.

Professor Marshall said Han-and under the influence of the adamant Red Chinese. He cited decreasing Viet Cong independence in terms of those not formerly wedded to North Viet Nam. The war's limits should be narrow, avoiding nuclear weapons, Marshall stated. Marshall forecast increasing effects on the Vietnamese government through U. S. escalation of the war effort.

Professor Salvatore urged continued U. S. involvement, viewing appeasement and surrender as further perils to peace. Viet Nam is another tragic episode in the history of totalitarianism leading to total despotism, reaction not revolution, Salvatore stated. Urging containment of totalitarianism, he cited examples of terror in Russia and Red China. Salvatore said communist dogmatists will make the utmost sacrifice to attain victory and wished Americans had the same devotion to our ideals.

After the panel, interested persons formed several groups and adjourned to rooms in the School of Business Administration.

UNDEFEATED REDMEN FACE POTENT RHODY TEAM TONIGHT

The University of Massachusetts varsity basketball team runs into one of its toughest tests in Yankee Conference competition tonight against the red-hot Rhode Island Rams at Kingston.

Coach Johnny Orr's diminutive Redmen topped Boston University, 65-49, in the season's opener and followed with an exciting 61-60 Conference victory at Vermont. However neither B.U. nor Vermont possess the overall speed and fire-power of the Rams. Coach Ernie Calverly's quintet has the experience and depth to be one of New England's top teams, and certainly the chief threat to Connecticut's defense of the Yankee Conference crown.

Rhode Island opened its season with convincing wins over St. Michael's and Fordham. The Rams are once again led by the prolific scoring of Steve Chubin, 6'3, who has returned after a year's absence without any apparent loss of point-making ability. Chubin was All Conference as a sophomore and junior. The other forward spot is being manned by senior Henry Carey, 5'11 jumping jack. Sophomore Art Stephenson, 6'4, 220 lbs., has been impressive in the pivot. Art was the key man on Rhode Island's once-beaten freshmen team last winter. His rebounding strength makes the Rams dangerous. The backcourt features two veterans and one promising sophomore. Seniors Mike Fitzgerald, 6'2, and Jim Cymbala, 5'11, have been standouts for two years with their all-around performances. Now they are joined by sophomore Lou Johnson, 6'1, whose long-range jump shots averaged 20 points for the Ram frosh. Top reserves include 6'6 Bob Boehm, a starter last year, and 6'8 Ted Haglund.

Massachusetts will probably counter with the same starting lineup. That means junior Frank Stewart, 6'4, and sophomore Billy Tindall, 6'5, in the frontcourt with juniors Jim Babyak, 6'3, and Mike Meola, 5'11, and senior Clarence Hill, 6'1, in the backcourt. The hustle and aggressiveness of the Redmen have been the most pleasing factors to Coach Orr. Statistics show that Hill (24.0) and Babyak (17.0) have supplied most of the offensive punch while Babyak, Tindall and Stewart have all averaged line rebounds.

Over the years Massachusetts and Rhode Island have engaged in many close and thrilling games. The Rams still lead in the series, 24-18, although the Redmen have won six of the last eight meetings. UMass came up with one of its best games of the year to win at Kingston, 79-67, exactly one year ago. Orr hopes that history will repeat itself, although the Redmen task this year appears to be much more difficult.

Massachusetts will return to action Saturday night by hosting Northeastern at Curry Hicks Cage at 8 o'clock. The UMass frosh will play the A.I.C. frosh in the prelim starting at 6 o'clock.

Jim Babyak, 6'3" junior forward from Easthampton, Mass., who has averaged 17.0 points and nine rebounds for UMass.

Hockey Team in 8-5 Loss to Ephs

Despite four goals by Ed Polchlopek of UMass, the Williams hockey team skated to an 8-5 victory over the Redmen Wednesday night at Orr Rink in Amherst. The Ephs, paced by Bob Bradley's three scores, handed UMass its first loss.

Williams broke up a tight game in the second period, scoring three straight goals. The Redmen came back in the final period to threaten the lead, but the Ephs held on to pick up their second straight victory.

Bradley opened up the scoring with the first of his goals at 6:44 of the first period. Polchlopek countered with a tally at 9:02 to tie the game. Soph Bob Cadigan, who scored three goals in the 5-3 win over MIT, had an assist on the play. Two quick goals by Rick Moore and Jim Roe at 10:04 and 10:40 made it 3-1 in favor of Williams, but Polchlopek put in his second score with time running out. The first period score was Williams 3, UMass 2.

Bill Roe and Polchlopek traded goals early in the second stanza, but then the Ephs went on a scoring spree with two tallies by Bradley and one by Bill Roe. Williams held a comfortable 7-3 lead at the end of two.

The Redmen got back into the game in the third period when Cadigan scored at 3:59 on an assist by Bill Skowrya, and Polchlopek beat Eph goalie Bob Stableford at 13:16. Williams got an insurance at 13:40 when Jim Roe, their big defenseman, completed the game's scoring.

Total saves for the evening were 36 for UMass sophomore goalie Bob Eddy, and 28 for Williams' Stableford.

SPORTS BITS

The trouble with the Boston Red Sox, ninth place finishers in the American League flag chase last season, was aptly put by Sox hurler Jerry Stephenson in a recent issue of SPORT magazine. His reply to a pretty stewardess who remarked that she would never marry a ball-player was, "Then marry someone on our club."

Should New York Giant sensational fullback Tucker Frederickson ever wish to embark on a political career, the former Auburn star could use the office of NYC mayor as a jumping off place. New York sports fans have not been so agog over a hero since Bobby Thomson's shot was heard round the world over a decade ago. If Frederickson continues to exhibit the antisocial behavior of running over, under, and through people, it will not be long before the term "Tuckerized" will become synonymous with the term coined in honor of the late, great fullback James B. Pulver.

Senator Ted Kennedy To Speak At UMass

Index Photo
SENATOR EDWARD F. KENNEDY

Ted is coming back. U.S. Senator Edward M. Kennedy will address UMass students on Vietnam next Wednesday afternoon in Bowker Aud. at the invitation of student organizations. The Massachusetts legislator who broke his back in a plane crash and stayed in Northampton's Cooley Dickinson Hospital will speak here at 3:15 Dec. 15. Kennedy recently completed a tour of Vietnam and will devote 40 minutes of his speech to that topic. He will allow 20 minutes for questions.

Rob Brooks, assistant to the dean of students, today announced Kennedy's plans to swing through the area and speak to students here and at Mt. Holyoke College later in the afternoon.

Ted was a speaker at Charter Day during the Centennial celebration in 1963.

BOMBARDIER RESIGNS; MEN'S DOSSIERS CANNED

By KAREN ROSE, Senate Editor
Two resignations and a surprise announcement by Sen. Mike Garjian (South-west) highlighted Wednesday's meeting. Sen. Treas. Gary Bombardier and the class of '67 senator at large, Rusty Leavitt resigned. Leavitt resigned from the Senate while Bombardier resigned only from his position as treasurer.

According to Bombardier, "I feel that I am no longer physically capable of continuing the fight to maintain the integrity of the office of treasurer against continuous attack."

Commenting on Treas. Bombardier's resignation, Sen. Pres. Dacey had this to say, "Treas. Bombardier's resignation represents a great loss to the Student Senate. The treasurer's job is a tremendous one, and one which offers virtually no public recognition. Treas. Bombardier has been outstanding in his dedication to the Senate, and I accept his resignation with great reluctance."

Gargian's announcement concerned the student dossiers which he had recently brought to the attention of the Senate. He announced that all men's student evaluation sheets have been recalled and destroyed.

Senate Committee On Communications Studies Three Journalists' Suggestions

UMass student publications and the Radio Station, using 60 per cent of the total student tax of $160,000 annually, are getting so big they need coordination to improve.

This is the reason for a Student Senate investigation into the possibility of a Committee on Communications. This new committee's main job would be to maintain high standards of campus publications and to make suggestions in weak areas.

The new study is the latest in an 8-year project not yet completed.

In 1957, RSO began an investigation into the possibility of establishing a committee to oversee and coordinate the activities of campus student publications. As then proposed, the chief function of this committee would have been:

- To work as a coordinator among students, publications, administration and Student Senate.
- To set general policy standards for all publications.

- To interpret problems arising in connection with publications budgets presented to the Senate.

- To investigate the feasibility of the establishment of new communications.

In the same year the Student Senate formed its own ad hoc committee on communications. That committee worked into 1958 but not until last spring did investigations into the subject resume.

This Senate committee, with Sen. Dick Wimberly as chairman, has interviewed this fall three members of the campus community who have journalistic backgrounds: Allan Miller, assistant to the University secretary and former editor of the Amherst Journal; Dr. Dario Politella, associate professor of English - Journalism, and Alvin F. Oickle, technical adviser to the Collegian and an editor of the Greenfield Recorder - Gazette. Each has presented a format on which a communications board could operate.

Miller sees the board as a supervising body. It would make rules for all campus publications. Allocation and management of funds and policy - making would fall under jurisdiction of the board, as well as power to appoint students to positions. Qualifications and experience would be the criteria.

Dr. Politella, in a paper submitted to the Senate committee, said: "It should be obvious that with the burgeoning community resulting in an increasingly complex function of student communications media, there must be a more formal structure to guide these media."

According to Dr. Politella, this "more formal structure" would be a communications board with the following duties:

- To approve budgets and request monies from RSO.
- To accept applications for positions of editors, business managers and radio station managers.

Dissatisfaction with the proceedings of the Senate Communications Committee has prompted action by the student heads of the communications media.

"We feel we must unite in the best interests of the communications media. It appears the committee is attempting to establish a board that would not include communications personnel as decision making members. As the proposal now stands we would only be ex officio non-voting members," said Index Editor, John Lawrence, spokesman for the group.

The committee had failed to formally invite communications heads to meetings and Lawrence decided that it was time to draft a proposal including the best points of all proposals to date.

"At the suggestion of a faculty member we decided to become an RSO organization and have met twice to draft a constitution," Lawrence reported.

Two meetings held this week have yielded a skeletal constitution for a Student Communications Board. The board would function only in an advisory capacity and all power held would be awarded by consent of the members of the board.

The board would "Act as an agent to promote interaction between the communications media and offer positive suggestions and solutions to communications problems," the draft states.

A tentative voting membership on the board would include heads of all student communications media, three faculty members, two student senators and three members of the administration. The non-voting chairman of the committee would be the co-ordinator of communications media.

The board would "Review the budgets of the media and submit them to the Budgets Committee of the Student Senate for their action."

Lawrence said he hopes the student positive step to improve communications and accept them as such."

'Satire is the way we live'— Jules Feiffer

By RITA GOTOWALA, Staff Reporter

"Satire is no longer a comment on the way we live; satire is the way we live." With these words Jules Feiffer, author, cartoonist, satirist concluded his comments on The Role of the Satirist in American Society.

Before a near capacity crowd in the Student Union Ballroom Mr. Feiffer attempted to justify the positions of the satirist and the cartoonist while making some interesting remarks on society at large. The serious intent of his satirical speech coupled with some straight humor kept his audience extremely attentive.

Feiffer was largely preoccupied with a faction he designated as the "radical middle". This radical middle which basks in a lack of notoriety and includes most of the "middle-of-the-roads" is but a conspiracy of our society.

To him the second-rate arts (movies, television) reveal 'the pulse of the times'. "the second-rate arts indicate what radical middleism has made of us... a nation of non-believers. We all believe in freedom of the individual, but we believe more in the threat of Communism. We all believe in Civil Rights, but we believe more in not making a fuss... We have become a nation in love with the soft self."

Feiffer asserted that there is definitely an overconsciousness in our policy of how other people dress.

He said, "presentation becomes more important than the cause; realism in our society has become a synonym for self-surrender."

Politics to him is a very important element in comics. "Nothing is so base or innocent that it isn't political," he explained.

"Humor creates a stereotype, including stereotypes of political issues. However, Feiffer feels that the genuine political cartoons in Europe surpass the American efforts. "As political cartoonists we are all Bernards." (Bernard is one of his cartoon

Critique Needs Help In Course Write-ups

Yes, it is true. Critique, the student magazine, publishes valid, objective summaries of criticisms and evaluations of courses and their instructors. This magazine is compiled to help you, the student. Critique supplies you with a source of information into the inside of courses offered at the University. The magazine also tries to raise the caliber of the University by improving teaching standards.

The Staff of Critique has just completed IBM processing of courses that were critiqued last semester. There are now some 50 or more courses for which summaries must be written. Therefore, at present, the Staff is in dire need of persons to formulate these summaries. If you would like to help us, we will appreciate your assistance, here will be a meeting for all those interested on Monday, Dec. 13 in the Franklin Room of the Student Union at 7:00 p.m. sharp.

characters who Feiffer describes as 'the inept hero'.

In order for us to numb our senses so that we will not surrender to our 'relentlessly corrosive' surroundings we turn to the satirist. The satirist's job as he sees it is to attack and relieve others from attacking.

In a question and answer period which followed his speech it appeared as though some took his comments to be more offensive than satirical. He denies that his work is not a form of protest and considers it rather as a form of self-indulgence. He clearly brought this point of view out in his final comments:

"95% or more of our doctors, lawyers, and teachers are hacks." That is, they are qualified only for the field in which they work, but cannot go beyond that.

"In 1964, I and a lot of others didn't realize that we were voting for Barry Goldwater's foreign policy."

When asked what he thought of Playboy magazine (for which he writes a monthly comic strip) he described it as 'a form of remote masturbation'.

"All of our entertainment in one way or another is just that; it's terribly patriotic," he added.

THE UNIVERSITY CHORALE

UM Chorale And Chorus Presents Winter Concert

This Sunday, December 12, the University of Massachusetts Chorale and Chorus will present a Winter Concert at 4:15 p.m. in Bartlett Auditorium. The Christmas Story, a cantata by Peter Mennin is the highlight of the joint performance.

The Chorale will also present an entire selection of a cappella music. Dr. du Bois, the new Director from Iowa, has been working since September to perfect their pitch and balance. The program includes several sacred songs, a folk-hymn, and a madrigal. The Chorale presented a concert at Belchertown High School Thursday, December 9.

The Madrigal Singers will

Senate appropriations debated

Garjian made this announcement after consulting with Dean Hopkins at the Senate-Faculty Tea, which was held during a recess of the Senate meeting. Hopkins told Garjian that the administration had been considering withdrawing the evaluation sheets because they were not meeting all their proposed expectations.

"The actions of the administration have taken me by surprise, they have gone beyond my greatest expectations," Garjian said.

"My goal concerning the dossier was student access to them, but I am equally happy with the present move by the administration," Garjian continued, "and it is my hope that the Dean of Women will soon follow suit regarding these evaluations."

The Senate passed a bill at Wednesday's meeting supporting the petition requesting wage increases for part-time workers in the University dining commons from $1 to $1.25.

The petition states that there has been "a significant rise in the cost of living during the 1964-65 years and student expenses subject to the same cost of living rise as society in general. Dining commons wages have not sufficiently reflected the cost of living."

Sen. Mark Tobin (Wheeler) stated that this petition "is only a first step toward a campus wide student wage increase."

In other action the Senate appropriated $250 to the Belchertown State School Volunteer Fund for the purchase of educational toys.

Sen. Rick Cass (Commuter) objected to this appropriation on the grounds that "the Senate has neither the duty nor the right to decide which charities the student body wants to support."

Sen. Lew Gurwitz, on the other hand, pointed out that the University has expressed a direct interest in the Belchertown program and thus the appropriation deserved Senate support.

The only other bill passed at the meeting was one involving the set up of a president's council.

There were two bills on the floor concerning the possible set up of a council to help the Senate president in his duties. In an unusual move towards expediency, Sen. Tim Cunningham incorporated his bill with the other one on the floor by amending it.

The bill empowers the president to appoint a council to assist him in administering his duties. It empowers this council to make recommendations for additional functions for each of the Senate standing and Ad Hoc committees.

Vice-Pres. John Greenquist was one of those objecting to the bill. He reasoned that having been in the office of Vice-Pres. for one week he could see no extra burdens on the president which would necessitate a group like this.

Later he said that if such a council is to be created "It is obviously ridiculous to set it up without the vice-president."

The final bill, when passed included the pres., v.p., and not more than 4 senators, to be appointed by the president, as the president's council.

Other items covered at the meeting included the approval of two budgets for the 1965-66 academic year.

The Mortar Board budget was passed at a total of $685. The budget for the University Band was amended by a cut of $92 so that the final budget passed at $2,602 for the year.

Pres. Dacey announced that the Senate office will be remodeled either during Christmas recess or intercession and that a total sum of $200 will be necessary to finance this structural change. The new offices will include one for each Senate officer.

Also announced at the meeting was the fact that Yahoo, having received the necessary funds, is now ready to print.

SENATE SPOTLIGHT

JIM ALLEN, Finance Committee

by ROMA McSWEENEY, Senate Staff

The Student Senate is composed of nine standing committees. One of the more important of these is the Finance Committee—presently headed by Jim Allen (Commuter Senator).

Each semester students pay a Student Activities Tax Fund of approximately $10. Few people realize exactly how this money is being spent.

In the spring the various campus organizations submit budgets to the finance committee. The committee then allots certain amounts of money to each group.

This money comes out of the S.A.T.F. and the remaining unbudgeted money is given to the finance committee. During the year the fin com receives requests for financial backing and supplies from many sources, thus this leftover money is used.

The most recent bill which was passed by the finance committee and then by the Senate concerned the Belchertown Volunteers.

After many visits to the hospital for retarded children in Belchertown, it was discovered that the children were in need of educational toys. These toys could be a great help to the children and could also aid the University students during their Saturday visits to the hospital. The committee allotted $250 to the volunteers to buy these toys for the hospital. This action was approved and passed at the Senate meeting Wednesday night. Previously, the committee was only concerned with internal affairs but with this bill and others in the future this policy is changing. It is Senator Allen's opinion that "in order for the finance committee to maintain its important role in the Senate it must develop and broaden its scope."

Following this plan, the committee is considering two new bills. The first is concerned with the foreign students. The committee has already financed a tea and supported an emergency loan fund for the approximately 350 foreign students on campus.

The second bill concerns developing some form of incentive for student leaders. This is still in the formative stage but may possibly result in the form of a scholarship for student leaders with a lower cume requirement than that officially stated in University policy.

SENATE ACTS TO RETURN YAHOO FUNDS

Yahoo will publish this semester. In the Student Senate meeting held on December 1, the Senate voted to remove funds from escrow.

Besides the transferral of funds the committee submitted these recommendations following its investigation:

2. that the Yahoo staff prepare a more detailed statement of their objectives and how they plan to achieve them.

3. that the mechanism be established on the Yahoo Editorial Board to handle the receipt and response to all correspondence pertaining to Yahoo publication, this making the Dean's involvement unnecessary.

4. that the matter of placing Yahoo on a subscription basis be referred to the Senate, as no conclusion was reached by this committee."

Point 5 was several changes to the Yahoo constitution to help make Yahoo a better functioning organization.

"6. Whereas, this subcommittee declares the succession of event which resulted in its creation and activity, it recommends that future investigating committees be constituted more properly by the initiative and free choice of representative students."

The report was a result of an open hearing held by the committee as well as several meetings at which they reviewed many of the aspects of the publication, mainly constitutional.

At the hearing Dean Field stated that he answered letters from parents on this matter because in his words "I questioned the appropriateness of it (Yahoo) as a tax supported item. I question whether a humor magazine is a necessary part of the educational experience of a college campus. And I am asking that this committee be responsible for answering the question."

Senator Tim Cunningham, Chairman of the committee, commenting on the work of his committee stated, "It was our purpose to evaluate the present constitution of Yahoo with the hopes of forming workable recommendations which would insure a functional organization."

Student Senators discussing issues with members of the Faculty and Administration at the Annual Faculty Senate Tea held Wednesday night.

Grades — An Accurate Judge?

By SANDRA FAIMAN, Editorial Staff

The question of grades at UMass or at any institution of learning is always an ambiguous subject. It is ambiguous because the goal of learning is not (rather should not be) to achieve grades, but rather to acquire new knowledge and to gain an objective view of what the knowledge represents. To defend a grading system or to urge for a more representative grading system should not be necessary. However, grades remain as an important part of the educational system; probably and achievement by students themselves.

If it is assumed that grades to remain as a part of the educational institutions at UMass, then what are the successes or failures of the present grading system? Do they accurately judge scholastic progress and achievement? Are they a fair means of providing the student with incentives for gaining knowledge rather than simply improving his scholastic average? (i.e. does the present system overemphasize meaningless goals?).

An analysis of the grading system demonstrates that both questions must be answered in the negative. First, the present four-point system does not accurately judge achievement. It does not judge anything when it gives the same grade to anyone who scores within a ten point range. The grading system leads to inaccuracy in evaluating a student's progress, which results in a meaningless final grade.

The second question must also be answered "no", when it is admitted that students do work toward a higher scholastic average. Yet, at UMass scholastic improvement may not be accompanied by a higher grade point average, but rather their efforts may be useless in the long run. This is again due to the lack of an absolutely representative grading system. The present grading system places the student in a general category of achievement, thus the grade does not reflect progress which the student may achieve.

In order to alleviate the rather meaningless grading system at the UMass, another more representative grading system should be instituted. Although it is unfortunate that grades are praised by students; since many students do value grades, then, they, at least should accurately represent what the student has achieved.

Editor's Note: The Civil Rights problem has been forgotten and the piles of news that has been written on Viet Nam, but it still remains an issue of much importance.

"Grab The Spoils"

By JIM HORVITZ, Editorial Staff

Ever since President Johnson placed his signature on the 1965 Voting Rights Act, many people have been confused by the hazy provisions of the law. Yet, despite any nebulous aspects of the law, it is more than clear that an historic breakthrough has occurred in the future of civil rights, more specifically, in the Negro's right to vote in the South.

The Voting Rights Act, in essence, eliminates the poll tax and literacy test as prerequisites for voting and enables the United States Attorney General to send federal registrars into districts where less than 50% of persons of voting age are registered. These federal registrars can then register all citizens wishing to vote, regardless of race or literacy. A clear-cut victory for the disfranchised Negro has thus been established.

Yet, recent statistics have shown that only about 180,000 of the South's 3,000,000 disfranchised Negroes have since qualified to vote. The Attorney General has persuaded county officials to comply with the law, rather than send federal registrars in, so that most of the registration has been voluntary.

Thus, the failure to register more voters must lie with the eligible voters themselves. They have been given the opportunity to register, even with the consent of some of the most adamant segregationist officials, but few have bothered to take advantage of what they have been clamoring for. Civil rights workers have even confessed that the novelty of the situation has simply worn off.

If the historic impact of this new law is to be felt, Southern Negroes must displace their apathy and organize a better effort into this registration campaign. In 1920 American women rose up in battle cry for equal suffrage and won. Now, in 1965, the Negro has also won a major battle. Yet, the victory will be of little avail to him if he does not grab the spoils.

A Proclamation

By JEROME S. HORVITZ, Editorial Staff

Hear Ye. Hear Ye. A proclamation from the town of Amherst.

Let it be known throughout the countryside that the establishment called the Drake has died. The Passing away occurred on the morn of December seventh, in the year of our lord, one thousand, nine hundred and sixty-five.

The passing occurred quite quickly with the least amount of pain.

The cause of death was due to the wishes of the disturbed citizenry who live nearby. Their complaint of inconveniences by those unbecoming citizens who used the inn moved the honorable leaders of this town to take the appropriate action. Therefore, from this day of proclamation, no mead can be served at the said establishment.

A warning is also now given to those unruly citizens who presently live on the town's border that they are here now obliged to remember that Amherst has always been tolerant of them, and that this tolerance can be at anything ended by our honorable fathers with the occurrence of any more inconveniences.

On concluding, then, the Drake will heretofore only be a place for fine food and soft drink. And any further inconvenience on the part of the barbarians encamped outside this territory will bring a final proclamation of exile.

Signed, on this day of our Lord, December tenth, one thousand, nine hundred and sixty-five. Long live the warm community of Amherst!

We hope the little men of the Orchard Hill complex are happy after their Wednesday night tree stripping expedition. Not only did they remove the colored light bulbs on our Christmas tree within hands' reach, but brought out chairs to reach the higher ones. We now notice a sprinkling of colored bulbs in windows. Could there be some correlation? To us this is indicative of a misdirected holiday spirit.

— You Don't Say —

Editor's Note: The author of the following column, Dan Glosband, is a former editor of the Collegian.

After a brief respite, during which I have supposedly rested my weary mind and recovered from the traumatic state common to practicing Collegian Editors, I have been encouraged (I hesitate to say pressured) to return to the fold. Specifically, I have been requested to present a column for publication.

I am unsure of the exact expectations of powers that be in the Collegian, but they can look forward to occasional bits of sardonic, not very funny humor, random embittered remarks, scattered trivia, bits of perhaps tasteless drivel—all presented with the regularity of a nonsched airline, and of questionable journalistic value. Remember, they asked for it.

A rather interesting ramification of retirement is the realization of the prestige intrinsic to the position, something one doesn't notice while in the position. People who have spent many an hour kissing my great toe, or at least appearing friendly, are found to have been merely interested in increasing rapprochement for personal benefit. Now that I no longer wield the so called "power of the press", many find it a bother to grant me a word of salutation.

Symbolically, resignation has stripped my laurels and my good conduct medal. I reached the nadir of ignominy when, at 8:54 a.m. on November 8, the Campus Police shamelessly removed the all-campus parking permit from the window of my automobile. I cried openly.

Detachment from a public organ does have its benefits however. Perhaps a presentation in list form would be easiest to follow:

I have not had to spend three mornings a week trying to cope with the intricacies of a malfunctioning print shop.

I went to a movie last week.

I studied for an hour exam.

My blood pressure dropped back to nearly normal.

I'm all through with this particular column. (that didn't belong on the list, but I'm counting on the fact that the copy-editor will miss the error—they have a habit of missing even the most blatant mistakes).

The Flame of Learning

by GEORGIOS PAN PIPEROPOULOS

The American "Spiritual A-gora" I had said last week, is much more different than the European one; and the "professor-merchant" who transacts in this context is a being much more "humane" than his European counterpart. And I went on to ring the bells of alarm in the realization that the American professor becomes more and more detached from his students as pressures for publishing and research increase.

LAST WEEK-END I read the following excerpt, from a speech given by the President of my Alma Mater, in the City College of New York Newsletter:

"Unless teaching is kept as the central function of the University," Dr. Gallagher, President of CCNY said recently in a speech at Boston University, "the institution has lost its reason for existence. It might better be called a research institute, and have done with the hypocrisy of indifferent instruction indifferently performed as an intrusion on research . . . The student has a right to expect something else than condescension, something not in the syllabus and not on the schedule. Somewhere during his undergraduate days he hopes to meet at least one professor who sets him loose, who stands ready to counsel and advise—or just listen, who is interested in him not as an IBM number but as a sometimes slashing and flailing and always exploring and inquiring person who wants to know what life is all about and what his part in making and remaking the world hopefully may be. Where students do not find these values in their University experience, they are ingloriously shortchanged. They should then be held accountable if they do not bring these matters sharply and clearly to the attention of faculty and administration."

Setting the young mind a flame: this is the secret of lifetime success for a professor. The mystique of the teaching-learning experience is fundamental in the life of a student.

EACH ONE of us is thankful to one or more professors for having given us this impetus for the spiritual flight. And yet very few of us have ever had the chance to thank a professor personally. Unfortunately lack of feed-back is a sui generis quality of the teaching profession. The CRITIQUE of UMASS may be one way of pointing out a reality to our faculty. It may be embarrassing sometimes, though. . .

Following on the heels of Dr. Gallagher's words, C.C.N.Y. and its Student Council have formulated a plan to permit students on the Uptown Campus to evaluate their courses and instructors by way of a questionnaire.

The questionnaire will give students the opportunity to anonymously rate their individual classes and teachers. The forms will be distributed to students by the instructor and each instructor will receive the results of his own students evaluation. There will be no correlations made by the College, nor public announcement of results. Each instructor receives his evaluation in complete confidence. . .

Though I may be wrong, I personally feel that the CCNY form of "feed-back" is a more discreet way of expressing gratitude to the "flame setters" and expressing a polite criticism to the others. . .

From A Marathon Broadcaster

I am a staff announcer at Radio Station KHAI in Honolulu and I need your help in gathering Christmas Cards to send to Vietnam and in organizing a demonstration.

I feel it would be very beneficial to the morale of the men in Vietnam if a large volume of cards and a simultaneous nation-wide demonstration, can be effected. I especially appeal to your campus organizations in hopes of combatting the feeling that the majority of students are anti-Vietnam.

I plan to dramatize this attempt by trying to break the Worlds record for continuous broadcasting. I will go on the air at 6 a.m. HAWAIIAN STANDARD TIME Tuesday, December 7th. The record now stands at 225 hours.

The Christmas Cards are to be mailed to our studios here in Honolulu and then delivered to Vietnam in time for Christmas by military aircraft.

No advance publicity is planned before the starting date of the drive on December 7th, at that time appropriate releases and the nation-wide appeal for support will be made via the Wire services and all available news media.

Any help you can give will be greatly appreciated.

"ONE WAY PENDULUM"

An Academic Experience and An Enjoyable Play

Director Kenneth Bordner

Students Give Their All For U.T.'s Absurdist Drama

By JIM FOUDDY, News Editor

The house lights dim, the curtain goes up and the audience settles back to enjoy a two hour production. For the audience the show begins and ends with the rise and fall of the curtain, but behind this two hour production are weeks of hard work preparing and rehearsing the play for the final stage presentation.

One Way Pendulum, the University Theater's newest play which opened last evening, is an example of this hard work on a student level.

DIRECTED by Ken Bordner and staged entirely by UM students, One Way Pendulum is an absurdist play which deals with characters who defy the laws of social behavior.

Written by N.F. Simpson, the play is the first master of fine arts production sponsored by the UT and is part of Bordner's master of fine arts thesis.

Bordner, a graduate of Princeton, holding a masters in English from UM, pointed out that the play "is a full scale production and not just an academic exercise."

BORDNER said that he chose this play in an attempt to present absurdism as a 'valid theatrical form' and noted that it is "not as way out" as some others.

As director of the play, Bordner's chief concern was co-ordinating the many elements of the production. He stressed the amount of work involved, but commented that his work has been made easier by the people under him.

"Although this has been my thesis production," he said, "it has been a major educational experience for all the department heads."

One UT member who has been working on the play for over a month is grad student Jim Stockman, who pointed out that for this production he has been "wearing three hats".

STOCKMAN'S work began as scene designer. In this capacity he was charged with designing the set and choosing colors, props and furniture in his preparation of the "overall aesthetic appearance of the set."

As technical director, Stockman was charged with building the set and seeing that it was arranged the way the director wanted, as well as other technical details involving curtain drops, scene changes and the use of mechanical devices used in the staging of the play.

Finally, as a graduate assistant and faculty member, Stockman was responsible for the actual theater and must handle any emergencies that arise in the building.

ANOTHER detail which must be well rehearsed is the lighting which is under the supervision of grad student Bill Segal.

Among Segal's tasks is to see that the lighting is perfectly timed with the action on the stage. Sitting in the back of the theater, Segal directs lighting control over a closed circuit phone system making sure that the actors and various areas of the set receive the proper amount of lighting at just the right times.

Another of the behind-the-scenes 'performers' is the stage manager concerned with co-ordinating the play during rehearsal and production on stage.

Stage manager for One Way Pendulum is Susan McGuinn, a participant in a number of other UT productions and who admits that her job is "a lot of work".

"Timing is the most important," she explained, "especially during the first five minutes of the play . . . then you're almost home free."

Sue commented on the co-operation she has been receiving from everyone on the crew and said that this was the most important element of the play's production.

She expressed the feeling of other members of the play's crew when she said that Director Bordner has been "very good and he is very understanding to the problems of the play."

Besides noting the work of the technical crews, Bordner praised the quality of the actors and their ability to present the absurdist drama.

THE BIGGEST PROBLEM I anticipated was getting the idea across to the actors that the play is absurdist," he said, but noted that they were very quick to grasp that feeling of absurdism.

"The trial scene is difficult to do but the acting in it is very well done," Bordner commented and feels that the actors "are getting their parts across without overstressing them."

Gets his point across:

'a blanket on her legs, a helmet on her head'

By DONNA KAHN
Feature Staff

The cash register clicked. The scales began playing Handel's Messiah as Arthur Groomkirby knelt on the table looking over plans for the reconstruction of The Old Bailey in his living room and the detective, like the audience, looked bewildered.

Can this play get any more absurd?

Can you, the audience, compare it to the absurdities in your own life? The success or failure of an avant-garde play depends on the audience's reaction or non-reaction to this question. If after seeing the play, can see the absurdity of your own life and begin to re-examine it, then it is a success. If you cannot, it has failed.

The standard of judgment is communication.

This theme of absurdity is communicated through the actors and settings which are in turn controlled by the director. The success of the play depends on the director.

"The One-Way Pendulum" is an absurd play produced by a suburb director. With his imagination, Ken Bordner's lively master's thesis sparkles. He communicates the absurdity of various institutions and modes of life in many ways.

Ridiculous portrayals of ridiculous people are piled upon ridiculous situations and ridiculous logic in a ridiculous setting. He gets the point across.

In his direction of the court clerk, Bordner combined elements of the Old Howard with those of the Old Bailey. It is very effective. He puts the defense counsel through paces that add to the ludicrousness of the court scene. Even to the selection of costumes (a helmet for Aunt Mildred), Bordner displays his imagination.

James Stockman doesn't give his creativity any rest either. His original set designs add much to the effectiveness of the production. You see before you one living room wall. The lights behind the wall come on. Zap! You see an upstairs room.

Thus through costumes and set design the character has been given a backbone. Considering the acting, Pat Fremi, as Arthur Groomkirby, does an excellent job act. The court scene, with him shrinking into the witness box, is very amusing.

Betty Corea as Aunt Mildred, is superb. Through her voice and mannerisms she is a little old lady—a little old lady obsessed with being on the move, to somewhere, anywhere, as long as she is moving. All this while she sits in her wheelchair, with a blanket on her legs and a helmet on her head.

The mother, Kathleen Atkinson, and the daughter, Robin Atkin, did not act as dynamically as others. Perhaps this is because they were not outstanding absurd characters in themselves, but characters whose personalities were exhibited through their reactions to the absurd behavior of the father and the aunt.

Also awkward was the detective who served as the narrator of the play. It could be that he was supposed to be awkward because like the audience the absurd world of the Groomkirby family was not his world. He was an observer in his world.

Certainly the world of this family is awkward to the audience. The play can only make sense if the audience can identify the world of the Groomkirbys to their world. If no common denominator can be found, then no communication can exist.

It is up to the viewer to see if absurdity is in his world also. If he sees his own absurdity and reexamines his life, the play is a success. One can only hope that the UMass students will put forth this effort. Certainly, it is to their advantage to try.

Working before the maze of lifts and levers that control the lighting for the "One Way Pendulum" are Christ Crowley, assistant electrician and Peggy Booth master electrician.

Ideal Solution: university erects good thrifty married housing

By TOM DONOVAN
Feature Editor

"The problem is that the population of married students on campus is exploding. . . . The housing on campus for these students is decreasing to an overwhelming extent."

This is the way Senator Lew Gurwitz, chairman of the Committee to Investigate Married Students' Housing, views the present controversial problem of married students' housing here.

The present controversy centers around the problem of 1300 married students on campus, soon to be faced with a total of 110 apartments in which to live. Furthermore, while one University official, Dean Moore of the Graduate School, has been quoted as estimating 5,000 married graduate students on campus in 1970; another official has held that the figure will be closer to 2500.

TO HELP THE UNIVERSITY:

Explaining the committee's role, Gurwitz stated "I feel that the University has an obligation to these married students as well as to the unmarried students here. As a result of this problem, the committee was set up to try to help the University to rectify the situation."

Said Gurwitz in a recent Collegian interview, "A major reason that the married student population will burgeon in the next five years is that veterans from both the Peace Corps and the Vietnam War will be returning after their enlistments are up.

RETURNING VETERANS:

He continued: "The University has an obligation to find housing for any of these returning veterans who are trying to educate themselves."

He believes that private industry does not take the needs of the students into consideration when it constructs housing developments off-campus.

"They may satisfy the demands of the faculty or a group of three or four single students, but they are far beyond the price range of most married students," Gurwitz stated.

CLASS HOUSING STUDY:

He disclosed that Professor of Landscape Architecture, Christopher P. Kantianis, plans to have a class study of housing on University property.

"He has agreed to have a class, next semester, devote some time to making plans for housing on university property," Gurwitz explained.

Since a recent Collegian article appeared, outlining the married housing problem, the Senator said he has had many people express sympathy and a hope for a quick solution.

SEVERITY OF THE PROBLEM:

He said, "Many people have stopped me to say they didn't realize the severity of the problem. A number of them even confessed that they weren't even aware that the problem existed."

Gurwitz summed up his feelings: "The ideal solution is that the University would erect sufficient housing for the married graduate and undergraduate students at a price they can afford. I have been told it isn't feasible, but I don't see that anything has been done other than Mr. Van Vliet's report on the problem for the Housing Office."

WELCOME SUGGESTIONS:

"To the best of my knowledge, no one in the administration is doing anything about this situation. I would welcome the help or suggestions of any persons in administration, faculty, or the student body who is interested in aiding us in this cause."

When Santa Comes, He Brings Holly Sprigs and Season's Cheer

Poet Clement C. Moore described Santa as fat and jolly, with a snowy beard. Cartoonist Thomas Nast drew him that way. The real life Santa, St. Nicholas, was a 4th cent. Turkish bishop, legendized for his love of children.

You decorate your home with holly and sneak kisses under the mistletoe. . . . toast your friends with a Christmas martini. . . . take for granted that Christmas was always celebrated on December 25. But did you ever stop to think of why you do these things?

Kissing under the mistletoe is said to have begun with the ancient Romans, who viewed the plant as a symbol of peace. Enemies, meeting under the mistletoe, were supposed to embrace and declare a truce. The Romans were also first to use holly at their December Saturnalia festival. But Christians also find holly appropriate because they see in it the symbolism of Christ's blood (the red berries) and his crown of thorns. The poinsettia, another holiday bloom, comes from Mexico. Joel Poinsett, first American Minister to Mexico, brought it here in 1836. The cherry tree, according to the well-known "Cherry Tree Carol," bent its boughs so that the Virgin Mary could pluck its fruit.

Both were started in the same gesture by the daughter of an early German chieftain on a campaign in Britain. Offering a garlanded bowl of wine to her father's princely host, she said "Wass-hell," or "Here's to you." The prince responded gallantly and they were soon married.

But it wasn't until the 17th century that people called a toast a toast. The term derived from a quaint English custom of floating a piece of toast in the drink to improve its flavor.

Pope Julius fixed Christmas at December 25, about the year 319 A.D. Two years later, after agreement on this date had been reached among church officials (some had favored fixing the Savior's birthday in January or March), Julius decreed that Christmas should thenceforth be celebrated on December 25. In the 6th century A.D. the year 513, to be exact, Christmas was made a legal holiday in Rome. But 100 years before that, the Roman government had required all theaters to close on Christmas Day. The Puritans, in 1639, passed a Massachusetts law making it a penal offense to celebrate Christmas! As for Epiphany, it occurs on January 6, and marks the three events in the life of Jesus.

Here's The Chance To Ski 110 m.p.h.

Skiing today looked upon as a great sport, has a longer history than you may realize, for the earliest pair of skis found in Scandinavian bogs date back to around 2500 B.C. According to Air France, which flies to some of the world's greatest ski areas, the first skis of which there is any record were made of animal bone and were tied to the feet with leather thongs.

The first Winter Olympics were held in 1924 at Chamonix at the foot of Mont Blanc. Today Chamonix, which boasts six cable cars, 18 ski lifts, four ski jumps and two skating rinks, is one of four French Alpine ski resorts included in Air France's ski package tours. The others are Val d'Isere, with 21 lifts, 20 official ski runs and 64 instructors, Megeve and Courchevel.

The highest speed ever attained by a skier was 109.14 m.p.h. set by Ralph Miller (US) on the slopes of the Gargantua Schuss at Portillo, Chile in 1955. Think about that next time you are schussing down a snowy slope.

Megeve, a major ski resort in the French Alps.

UNIV. THEATRE . . .

The final product of weeks of work and rehearsing will be presented at 8:15 again tonight and Saturday and Bordner feels that "it is a fine evening's entertainment for anyone who enjoys a funny play."

The play is open to the public without charge and seats may be reserved.

Western Mass. Hearing For Route Expansion

Western Mass. Bus Lines, Inc. of Northampton has petitioned the Department of Public Utilities for a certificate authorizing it to render a regular route bus service from Amherst to Northfield via Route 63, serving the intermediate towns of Leverett, Sunderland, Montague, Millers Falls and Erving.

A public hearing on this petition will be held in the Town Room, of the Town Hall in Amherst on Thursday, Dec. 16 at 10:30 a.m.

Joseph Maddaloni, General Manager of the company, stated that because there is no form of public transportation now available to the residents and students on this route, the company has received several requests to provide this service. Towns to be served along the route are isolated from surrounding communities because they lack a public transportation facility, he said.

He further stated that if this would be combined with the company's present rights between Amherst and Northampton so that the bus service to Northfield serving all intermediate points, including the campus of the University of Massachusetts, would begin and end at Northampton.

There would also be available at Northampton a connecting bus service to and from Springfield and points south, east or west and at Amherst a connecting bus service to Worcester and towns along Route 9. Anyone interested in this new proposed bus service can receive more information by contacting the bus company.

Mr. Maddaloni said he would appreciate interested people to attend the public hearing and to inform him beforehand of their desire for this service.

Keys charter bus NYC to UMass

Faculty Pianist Is Featured At Concert

Amherst, Mass.—The growing commitment to quality music education at the University of Massachusetts will be reflected this week in two concerts—one by the combined choral groups under their new director and a second by the rapidly growing symphony orchestra.

Dr. Richard duBois, the music department's new choral director, will present a concert Dec. 12 whose major work will be a contemporary Christmas cantata for combined choral groups and instruments.

Conductor Ronald A. Steele's University of Massachusetts Symphony, in a Dec. 14 concert, will undertake its most difficult project so far when it performs Schumann's Third Symphony. Also featured will be a new faculty member, pianist Howard Lebow, in a performance of a Mozart piano concerto.

In scope and variety of music and number of students involved, the two concerts mark a growth milestone of the kind that has been occurring with increasing frequency in the last three years, according to Dr. Philip Bezanon, music department head.

Three years ago the department had a faculty of four and a proportionately limited program. Now it has 11 faculty members, including a conductor, choral director and band director; specialists in musicology, music education and theory; teachers of voice and individual instruments; plus a full-time music librarian.

The department conferred one bachelor of arts degree in music last year; this year it has three seniors who are candidates. Last year six freshmen entered the program as music majors; this year the number is 18.

There are at present 33 music majors enrolled in the department. According to Dr. Bezanon, these music majors are working toward BA degree in four major areas of concentration: applied music, music history, music education and theory-composition. All students are auditioned and interviewed before being accepted as music majors, he noted.

The department this year has begun two regular recital series—one for faculty and one for music students. It also sponsors and trains a rapidly-growing number of groups that provide

Intramural Report

By DAVE JARNES

After just one week of competition both the dorm and frat champs have fallen in stirring upsets. Earlier this week Lambda Chi was victimized. Wednesday night was the Chadbourne Maroons turn to lose.

The Baker Buffaloes, who lost on Monday to the unbeaten Webster Rams, stunned the Maroons 50-48 in sudden death double overtime. Chuck Webster's 22 points paced the victors. Webster, along with Stan Flint outbounded the Maroons 39-10, a great factor in Baker's win.

Meanwhile the Rams annihilated the Eagles 57-30, as Bob Freed, Mike Payson, Burt Cady, and Bob Perlman all hit for double figures. The powerful Baker Barracudas, led by Lenny Mees' 21 points trounced the Broncos 68-18, while the Bruins had to go all out before edging the Garfields 40-32.

In a key independent league battle, the Untouchables, led by Charlie Lapier's 15 points, walked over the Courtesy Taxits 52-33. There appears to be no one among the independents who is capable of stopping the Untouchables from reaching the playoffs.

In other independent games, the Zeroes nipped the Shlubs 40-35, the Capitalists beat the Hoopers 53-43 despite Caskill's 22 points, Vacarro's 25 markers led the Crusaders to a 60-39 decision over the Bombers, and the Gunners won over the College St. A.C. as Jekanoski scored 23.

Brian Lajole was the big man again for ZN with 15 points and numerous rebounds in a key 37-29 decision over TC. SAM came very close to winning its first athletic contest this year but lost a heart-breaking 34-32 game in sudden death double overtime to PSD.

Jim O'Donnell led the way with 18 points as TEP bombed SPE 55-33. LCA got back on the winning track with a 53-34 victory over QTV. Ferranti scoring 19. KS found ASP no soft touch before winning 34-26, and BKP beat ATG 42-24.

Rick Levy powered the surprisingly unbeaten Comanches to their third win, 29-22 over the Black Bears. The Lemons overwhelmed the Redmen 82-16 as Higgenbottom with 30 and Dullio with 22 were immense. The Colt .45's beat the Limes 51-23, and the Cherrys romped over the Slippery Elms 41-22.

Jack Thomas paced the Aces to a 62-51 verdict over the Redwoods with 18 points while Alex Vyce got 19 for the losers. The Aces appear to be the class of the north league. Ray Stanells scored a season high of 41 points as the Patriots overwhelmed the Hawks 70-33. The Flaming A's beat the taller Panthers 39-29 and the Hemlocks nipped the Phallics 30-29.

Gorman had a good night as the Elms, Oaks, and Maples were triumphant over the Hi-Lo's, Pines, and Trojans. Joe Bohzcek hooped 28 points as the Hickorys cruised to a 66-44 win over the Hicks.

The Philosophers, highest scoring team in intramurals this year, scored "only" 55 but they held the Land Architecture to just 13. The Innkeepers re-nused a strong effort by the Chem Club in winning 51-46 as four men hit double figures. The Banthees romped over AIIIE 50-29 and the Buggers edged the Forestry Club 28-22.

In bowling the Buggers, Sil-

Mike Meola is a 5'11 guard from Schenectady, N.Y. whose strength of defense complements the play of offensively-minded backcourt mate Clarence Hill.

ver Foxes, and Hermits swept 8 points from the Banthees, Plywoods, and Forestry Club.

The Chadbourne Maroons swept 8 from the Aces and moved into first place, ahead of the Flaming A's. Bridges' 584 paced the Trojans' sweep of the Chestnuts while the Eagles and Oaks split their match and the Maples blanked the Slippery Elms 8-0.

The Patriots, Comanches, and Lemons took 6 of 8 from the Colt .45's, Bruins, and Hicks as the Redmen shut out the Hi-Lo's 8-0.

The Redwoods, Grants and Barracudas won 6 of 8 from the Garfields, Cherrys, and Birchies. The Buffaloes were the only A league team to sweep for the night with a win over the Bengals.

In handball Garfinkle, Daley, Decoun, and Olson have reached the semifinals of their dormitory divisions while Ricci has Decoun, and Olson have reached dependent division with a 21-6, 21-6, win over Rinaldi. Odelsky and Houde are the only first round winners among the frats.

URI Rams Drub Redmen

By GLENN BRIERE

Rhode Island's Rams established themselves as a strong contender for the Yankee Conference title as they routed UMass, 94-67, at Kingston, R.I. last night. A great performance by the Rams' Steve Chubin overshadowed Jim Babyak's fine 24 point output.

Rhody could do little wrong in winning their third game against one setback. They executed superior shooting, rebounding and ballhandling. A major contribution to their win lies in the fact that they held back all-conference guard Clarence Hill, who had what must have been one of his worst nights as a Redman. He scored only 10 points and he shot 5 for 21 from the floor, far below his usual performance.

The margin was surprisingly large, considering that URI had lost to Brown, not an outstanding team. But it was one of those nights when one team can do no wrong, and the other can do nothing right. The Rams played by far their best game of the season, and if the Redmen had played up to their potential, the story might have been a little different. But credit must be given to Rhode Island, who put forth an excellent team effort. More significantly, they beat the Redmen at their own game - speed. Rhody simply outthrust a usually hustling team.

UMass took the lead, 2-1, on a drive by Clarence Hill. Then Rhode Island scored four points to make it 5-2, and they were never headed off. The Redmen nibbled away at the lead, and they came as close as seven points with 7:40 left in the first half. But as fast as they had regained their poise, they lost it. Two free throws by Steve Chubin, who spent much of his time at the foul line, gave the Rams a 37-22 lead with 3:35 left. Then UMass ran into serious foul trouble when center Billy Tindall picked up his fourth personal with 2:12 left. Rhody led by a comfortable 42-28 score at halftime, but not impossible for UMass.

The second half saw URI reel off 10 straight points to pile up a 22 point lead. With 13:20 to go in the game, Massachusetts' faint hopes were extinguished when Tindall fouled out. Sophomore Greg Rand came in to do an excellent job off the boards, but it was a case of too little too late. Babyak hit consistently with his outside shot, but the discouraged Redmen could not keep up with Chubin and his cohorts. With three minutes left, Chubin left the game to a standing ovation. The 6'3 forward, who was all-conference in his sophomore and junior years, scored 26 points.

In rebounding, Rhode Island led 61-46. They had greater height and weight, but UMass showed no sign of the rebounding potential which was so evident in the Vermont game. The Rams also held a big lead in shooting, 48% to 34%. Other Rhody stars, besides Chubin, were Mike Fitzgerald with 18 points, and soph Larry Johnson, who came off the bench to score 16.

As for UMass, there were some good signs despite their performance last night. Jim Babyak continued his all around outstanding play. Gregg Rand showed good rebounding poten-UMass returns to the friendly confines of Curry Hicks Cage tomorrow night to play Northeastern. They will host Holy Cross next Tuesday.

A key man in the Redmen attack is 6'3 forward Frank Stewart, a Lynnfield native who has averaged nine rebounds per game.

Lennon Sets Record as Swimmers Bow to Jeffs

UMass swimmers lost to Amherst on Wednesday night despite the great individual efforts of stars Dick Daniels, Dick Lennon, and Chip Wyser. The Amherst team had too much going with them for the Mermen to overcome.

Co-captain Dick Daniels, as usual, was impressive. He won twice, in the 200 yd and the 500 yd Freestyle events. In both races, Amherst had nothing to compare with Dick's power and endurance.

Dick Lennon, after losing badly earlier in the 200 yd. Ind. Medley, came back to swim the 200 yd. Breaststroke in 2:32.0, against his former teammate, Pete Schleman. Dick defiantly broke the record, to make this his second Varsity mark for the school.

Chip Wyser placed first in the 50 yd. Freestyle with a time of 23.8. He later took a strong second in the 100 yd. Freestyle.

Surprising to all, this year's divers must be contended with. After only two interscholastic meets, their diving repertoire is varied and quite impressive, displaying both top form and grace. They proved this Wednesday with Tony Roubound taking first and Dick D'Andrea third.

Ken Nowak swam second in the 200 yd. Ind. Medley, and the 200 yd. Backstroke. Steve Levy took third in the 200 yd. Butterfly. Ted Severn, in his first Mass. competition, grabbed third in the 200 yd. Breaststroke.

Wyser, Daniels, Wilson and Nowak won the final event, the 400 yd. Freestyle Relay, rounding off the score to a respectable 51-44 swim meet.

Press Club Proposes Chapter Of National Journalism Fraternity

By PETER HENDRICKSON,
Editor-in-Chief

UMass Press Club is initiating plans to start a chapter of Alpha Phi Gamma, a student publications recognition fraternity that honors students who have worked significantly on one or more all-campus publications.

The fraternity's purposes, according to the Constitution and the members' Manual, are:

- to recognize individual ability and achievement in collegiate student publications and journalism
- to serve, promote and help to improve collegiate journalism
- to establish cordial relationships ships between students and members of the profession

- to fraternally unite congenial students interested in journalism.

The purposes are carried out by electing to membership and initiating students who have contributed with distinction to campus publications, by serving and promoting the college's publications program and by cooperating with professional newsmen in joint projects whenever possible.

ACTIVE MEMBERSHIP is open to students, faculty advisers of publications, journalism teachers and chapter advisers. Requirements for students are that they must:

- be registered in the university.
- have served one semester as

Editor-in-chief, business manager, associated editor, assistant manager or department editor of the newspaper; editor-in-chief, business manager, of the yearbook; a principal staff member of another significant all-university publication, including radio station; be above freshman rank; and have an acceptable scholastic average, at least above the all-college average.

The front of the Union lobby was the scene of crowds of students casting their votes for Winter Carnival Queen Saturday. Final nominations will be posted as soon as they are available.

Kennedy To Speak Here Wednesday

By MARGIE FLANDERS,
Staff Reporter

Edward M. Kennedy, U. S. Senator, will visit the UMass campus Dec. 15 to deliver a Vietnam address. The Senator is expected to arrive at Bowker Auditorium at 3:15 p.m. and to speak for 40 minutes, with an additional 30 minutes for questions.

Some Kennedy friends are pressing him to run for governor, but so far the Senator has shown no signs of succumbing to their arguments. From the office of governor, he would have a firm political base from which to mount a future campaign for the Presidency.

The Senator is appearing at the University in response to invitations from several student organizations. The groups co-

Adelphia Recommends Homecoming Changes

Adelphia said they feel that a change must be made in the organizational structure of the planning for Homecoming Weekend.

"Homecoming should be the largest week-end on campus because it draws, or should draw, the largest crowds of the year from returning alumni, the freshman class (its first major week-end), and from the fact that it is Homecoming," they said in a statement released Friday.

"This has not been so in the past due to the non-existence of a central directing committee and a poor inter-organizational communication system. We as Adelphians, feel that the following proposal will greatly facilitate the organization and coordination of the Homecoming Weekend activities," the men reported.

THIS RECOMMENDATION is divided into two parts. One part concerns the setting up of the original committee. The second part concerns the committee after it has been in operation for one Homecoming Weekend.

Recommendations for the original Homecoming Committee include:

1. It be an R.S.O. Committee set up as an autonomous group.
2. The Committee should be composed of thirty-five (35) members for the first year.
3. The Committee shall have the following officers: chairman, vice-chairman, secretary, treasurer and a representative from Adelphia as an Ex-Officio member of the Executive Committee.
4. This committee will be selected by applications and interviews by an ad hoc committee of the Student Senate appointed by the President of the Senate.
5. The committee will be selected no later than February 1, 1966.
6. The committee should include the following standing sub-committees: Float Parade, Rally, Rally Dance, Saturday Night Dance, Sunday Concert, Queens and Publicity. Ad-hoc committees may be added to these. The sub-committees will be responsible solely to the chairman.
7. The committee will choose its own advisors. Adelphia suggests that Evan Johnston, exec. director of alumni, and Robert McCartney, secretary of the University, be given special consideration because of their role in Homecoming.
8. The committee should be provided with working capital, if needed, from the Student Senate.

Recommendations for the Homecoming Committee after the above has been initiated include:

1. It remain a R.S.O. Committee as an autonomous group.
2. The committee be composed of a number of students to be determined by the previous year's committee based on the expected work load.
3. In order to provide good representation from each class for continuity: A minimum of 1/5 total membership of the committee will be selected from each of the upper three classes.
4. The committee will be selected by the previous years committee through the use of applications and interviews.
5. The following sub-committees be given serious consideration as standing sub-committees, made up of members of the committee, and responsible solely to the chairman, Float Parade, Rally, Rally Dance, Saturday Night Dance, Sunday Concert, Queens and Publicity.

License Renewal Urged By Pickets

A group of students at the University of Massachusetts, both men and women, picketed the center of the town Saturday afternoon carrying placards denouncing the action of the selectmen in denying the Village Inn, a renewal of its liquor license.

One sign said "Don't let the Drake be a sitting duck" and "Amherst, your brains are falling out." Police said the picketing was orderly as the pickets walked in front of the Town Hall and the headquarters of the Amherst Chamber of Commerce for about a half hour until the weather changed. The

St. Nick Reversal

By PETER HENDRICKSON, Editor-in-Chief

Three UMass students apparently pulled a St. Nick in reverse yesterday and were arraigned in Northampton District Court on charges of larceny of less than $100.

Facing a wreath-stealing rap are Louis G. Cove of 123 Hills North, Donald A. Binns of 319 Grayson, and Gerald F. Wood of 16 South Prospect St. Judge Luke F. Ryan ordered innocent pleas entered and advised them to obtain legal counsel. The case has been continued to Dec. 16.

ACCORDING to the Daily Hampshire Gazette it is alleged that the student trio stole 10 wreaths and a can of Christmas spray Thursday morning from Jeffrey's Florist Shop, Rte. 9, Hadley.

"Last night must have been the vandal's night to celebrate Christmas here," was the comment from one faculty member after a youth tried to steal the newly-decorated S.U. Christmas tree out of the lobby late last night in the midst of President and Mrs. Lederle's annual faculty Christmas party and dance.

The attempted theft and destruction of property followed an earlier act of vandalism when a sink in the men's room adjacent to the Hatch was forcibly torn from the wall.

THE DAMAGE to the sink, according to a S.U. custodian, must have been the work of three or more people.

He added, "They did it (tearing the sink from the wall) about 8:00 tonight. It looks as if they must have all climbed on top of it and jumped up and down."

Two quarter-inch steel retaining straps and all the connected plumbing were torn from the wall.

ACCORDING to a number of faculty witnesses, the youth, about 5'10" with short-cropped blond hair and wearing a beige car coat, was talking on the phone shortly before he walked over to the tree, picked it up under his arm and tried to force through a group of faculty members just leaving the building.

English professor Melvin Wolf, who was the first to accost the thief, stated that he grabbed the tree as the thief struggled by while another professor demanded, "What do you think you're doing!"

LATER, Dr. Wolf stated that he hoped the thief would be prosecuted if apprehended.

He explained, "I don't think college students deserve preferential treatment regarding acts that would send any other person to jail."

He added, "Too many college students get away with 'pranks and stunts' which actually are pure cases of larceny or outright property damage. Everyone should receive the same treatment and it should stand within the academic community as well."

"I wish I had grabbed the fellow, but he was dribbling Christmas tree ornaments as he went and I attach more importance to a Christmas tree than to an individual of that calibre," he noted.

ANOTHER quick-witted professor stated that he pursued the thief and wrote down the license number of the red station wagon which was waiting for him.

Chris Sorenson, evening manager of the S.U., noted that the thief left his fingerprints on the telephone at the lobby counter shortly before the theft.

THE WORLD

LAST WEEK both Hanoi and Washington reaffirmed their positions with respect to negotiations. North Vietnam's Pres. Ho Chi Minh in an interview said that the only way to a peaceful settlement was acceptance of Hanoi's demands, which include withdrawal of U.S. troops from South Vietnam. Pres. Johnson held conferences with top advisors last week, in which he stated his determination to seek every means toward peace before deciding on more rigorous means of dealing with the war. Last Monday an announcement came over the Vietcong radio that the guerrilla forces would observe a 12 hour Christmas Eve truce in the fighting if the South Vietnamese and American forces did so also. The State Department viewed the proposal skeptically, and emphasized that the war may continue for a long time.

PRES. CHARLES DeGAULLE last week failed to attain a majority vote in the Presidential election, although he did receive the largest percentage of votes with 44%. Since an absolute majority is necessary to win, a run-off between the top two candidates will be held next Sunday. Francois Mitterrand, DeGaulle's opponent, received 40% of the votes in last week's election, and will be DeGaulle's opponent. It appears that the security of DeGaulle's position may be slightly tenuous, although public opinion polls favor the success of DeGaulle.

THE SOVIET UNION announced a change in leadership with the resignation of Anastasia I. Mikoyane, last week. He was the Soviet Chief of State, and he will be replaced by Nikolai V. Podgorny. Other events in Russia were anti-Vietnam war demonstrations throughout the country, it was announced by the Soviet News Agency, Tass. At least 250,000 persons demonstrated in Moscow the report stated.

THE UNITED NATIONS Security Council, following a decision of last August to increase the number of members in the Security Council to 15, voted and admitted seven new members to the Council. These non-permanent members are Bulgaria, New Zealand, Mali, Japan, Nigeria, and Uganda. The enlarged Council will begin to function formally as on January 1, 1966.

THE NATION

THE LATEST U. S. space explorations continued this week with Gemini 7 remaining in orbit, manned by astronauts Lt. Col. Frank Borman and Comdr. James A. Lovell, Jr. Neither astronaut appeared disturbed by the prolonged confinement imposed by the long space exploration. However, the scheduled rendezvous with Gemini 6 scheduled for today, was cancelled at the last minute. An automatic device which rejects flights and terminates them at the launching pad if any malfunction is detected, apparently detected a malfunction. Thus it did not release the rocket which would have carried Gemini 6 aloft. A second attempt to rendezvous with Gemini 7 will be made on Thursday morning.

LAST WEEK McGeorge Bundy, so-called the last of the 'Kennedy intellectuals,' announced his decision to accept the position of Pres. of the Ford Foundation and leave the Johnson administration machine. Bundy served as a top consultant to Pres. Johnson on foreign affairs, along with Dean Rusk and Robert McNamara. His decision was explained by insiders to have been based upon career considerations.

THE CAMPUS

A SPECIAL PETITION registered against the Village Inn caused suspension of the liquor license of that establishment. The Amherst Selectmen voted to suspend the liquor license following complaints by neighbors about noise, rowdiness, and other inconveniences caused by the patrons. An appeal of the Selectmen's decision would have to be made through the Alcoholic Beverage Comm. in Boston, which would not be until Dec., 1966. Until then, the Drake will remain closed.

THE STUDENT SENATE voted to remove from escrow the funds of Yahoo, the campus humor magazine. The decision followed an open hearing held by the Senate as well as several meetings at which many aspects of the publication were discussed. A five-point recommendation for dealing with Yahoo was submitted by the committee. It suggested a more substantial definition of Yahoo's goals; a subscription basis for distribution of Yahoo to be considered by the Senate; plus several changes in the Yahoo constitution, to help make Yahoo a better functioning organization.

A NATIONAL TONE was brought to the Med. School issue, when Dr. James Z. Appel, Pres. of the American Medical Assoc., endorsed and encouraged that an on-campus site be selected rather than the proposed Worcester site for the Mass. Med. School.

As a press conference Dr. Appel emphasized that the on-campus location would not only provide better education, but also it would be a "substantial saving" due to the need to duplicate facilities if the Worcester site were chosen. The University would substantially gain from the availability of scientific facilities and courses connected with the medical school, he pointed out.

PICKETS . . .

Village Inn was formerly the Drake Hotel and before that was the Perry Hotel.

The inn is the nearest of any to the University of Massachusetts campus. Last week the Collegian, lamented the inn's possible demise in an editorial. It termed the inn a "genuine institution, similar to Heidelberg beer halls and the sidewalk cafes of Paris.

The inn has been involved in several liquor violations and on Nov. 30 selectmen were petitioned by 53 citizens not to renew the license. On Dec. 7 the board announced the unanimous decision not to renew the license. This license will expire on Dec. 31 unless the owner appeals to the State Alcoholic Beverages Control Commission in Boston.

New England Professors Back U. S. Viet Policy

NEW YORK — Some 190 professors representing Harvard, Yale, and 14 other New England colleges and universities Thursday announced full support of the administration's Vietnam policy.

In a statement released here the professors, including nationally-known specialists, said "As we understand this policy it is to achieve a negotiated settlement in which the people of South Vietnam will have the opportunity to determine their own destiny through free elections, protection for opposition parties, and a free press. It does not involve any attempt to destroy the North Vietnamese regime."

AMONG THE SIGNERS were two former national chairmen of Americans for Democratic Action, Prof. Samuel H. Beer, of the Department of Government at Harvard, and Prof. John P. Roche, department of political science, Brandeis University.

The statement, in the form of a petition of support for the administration, says that the United States has made important mistakes in the past in Vietnam. It adds that some of the military tactics now being used raise serious moral and political questions. But it concludes that "a Vietcong victory will spell disaster for millions of South Vietnamese and other millions in Southeast Asia."

THE SIGNERS welcome a constructive national dialogue to "discover new approaches" to the problem and oppose any talk of cutting off debate "on the questionable grounds that any opposition to the administration gives aid and comfort to the enemy."

Prominent specialists among the signers included Max Lerner, also a Boston Traveler political columnist, of Brandeis; Morton H. Halperin and Henry A. Kissinger of Harvard; Harold Isaacs, Max Millikan and Myron Weiner of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology; Bruce T. Dahlberg and Thomas C. Mendenhall of Smith College and, Gunter Lewy of the University of Massachusetts.

Dr. Wesley Fishel, chairman of a ten-year old organization known as the American Friends of Vietnam which coordinated the petition project, contrasted the signers with those who have signed academic petitions opposed to Vietnam policy.

"Opponents of the U.S. policy on the campuses," he said, "are largely teachers in fields unrelated to political science, international relations and Southeast Asian affairs. The further one gets from the subject—Vietnam and U.S. foreign policy—the more opponents among campus teachers there seem to be. The reverse is equally true. Most of the teachers of the government, foreign policy and international affairs support U.S. policy or accept it as necessary."

BOAC will leave you alone in Europe.

On a swinging BOAC Grand Orbit student tour you can explore the coast of Portugal, gaze at the Rif Mountains of Morocco, take an Adriatic cruise, visit the Islands of Greece, absorb culture in Spain, France, Italy and England, find yourself a Scandinavian viking, lift your stein in Germany, Switzerland and Austria, play roulette in Monaco, and have plenty of time to roam around on your own. The whole package will cost you $1921.30* round trip from New York. And that includes most meals, hotels and everything else. (You can also jet BOAC direct from Miami, Boston, Chicago, Detroit, San Francisco, or Honolulu. And join the group in London.)

To be sure you get what you pay for we hired some young tour leaders from Oxford and Cambridge and told them not to bug you.

They were all for it.

They said that's the only kind of tour they'd be interested in leading anyway. And that they weren't above a little freedom themselves while working their way through college.

EMORY PROF QUESTIONS RELEVANCE OF GOD

Emory University likes to view itself as one of the nation's best universities and among the very best in the south. Its boasting is not hollow, and a strong stand on academic freedom helps support this claim.

But Emory is finding its liberal reputation severely tried this year as the teachings of Dr. Thomas J. J. Altizer, an associate professor of religion at the Methodist-owned school, draw national attention.

"God is dead," he proclaims. Altizer bases his views, which have been discussed only in graduate seminars on two points:

—The traditional Christian faith has become totally meaningless and unreal" and "God is irrelevant to the modern world."

—"A whole new form of faith is called for as a result" and "the secular world is the source for spiritual and ethical standards."

Dr. Stanford S. Atwood states the university's position very simply. He says Altizer "is a professor who feels he has an idea worth discussing. He has a right to do so." Others who have involved themselves in the question don't think its that simple.

Even though the administration is determined to protect Dr. Altizer's rights and its own reputation, there is a strong public pressure to discipline the professor. A spokesman said the university has received "a flood" of heated telephone calls and number of demands for Altizer's removal.

"I believe strongly in academic freedom," one school official said, "but I'm afraid its a lot more saleable on campus than off. Off campus its a pretty slow mover."

Henry Lane, attorney, who is chairman of the schools board of trustees, said the institution was founded and is run on Christian principles.

"When a person comes here and expounds a principle that is not Christian," Bowden said, "he is fouling his own nest."

Another source of pressure is the Methodist church, which owns Emory outright and must approve the appointment of all of its trustees.

One of the most outspoken church leaders is Bishop Arthur J. Moore. Although retired, Bishop Moore dominated the Methodist church in Georgia for years.

Buczko Clashes With Volpe Over UMB

State Auditor Thaddeus Buczko said he was disturbed about Governor Volpe's response to an audit on the Boston branch of the University of Massachusetts "with a smoke screen and a statement that the report is 'a headline hunting job'."

Auditor Buczko, at a press conference, repeated that it will

"I do not think there is a place in a college (based on Methodist principles) for man who denied the basic tenets of that faith," Bishop Moore said.

He said that he is aware that Dr. Altizer has tenure at Emory and remarked, "that's part of the problem."

Altizer's colleagues view him with more respect. William Mallard, an associate professor of church history, said, "no brief statement can convey the scope of reading, reflection and real involvement in our world that have provided the substance for Prof. Altizer's views. His work is, of course, still in progress. But his perceptive judgments and forthright claims have helped pointlessness in theology and to discern a new form of the Christian heritage adequate for the present. His work has already been of the greatest importance to many of us at the University and elsewhere."

cost the Commonwealth $5,425,500 for the UMass branch if the lease is permitted to run until its expiration for the current year period "and I repeat that this building can be purchased anytime before April 30, 1968 for $1,500,000."

Earlier, Governor Volpe told his weekly press conference that

Gen. Hatch to Speak at AFROTC Formal Dinner

Brigadier General Royal Hatch, commanding general of the First Reserve Region, will be guest speaker at the Air Force ROTC Formal Dining-In Wednesday evening in the Student Union.

General Hatch, a native of Wellesley, Massachusetts, is a graduate of Dartmouth College where he was a member of the Theta Delta Chi Fraternity and Green Key Society.

He served in World War II, saw duty with the Air Staff at the Pentagon, and did extensive work in training the Air Force Guard.

In addition to his military experience, General Hatch has also been a news reporter and sports writer for the Associated Press and a Boston newspaper. He proudly serves as President of the International Council of Military Sports, an organization devoted to international good will through athletic competition among the armed forces of thirty nations.

It was for the University trustees to express their judgment as to whether the building should be purchased, and then for the Governor and Legislature to act.

State Auditor Buczko said the Governor's indication the Legislature has not made any appropriation for purchase of the building "is a pure subterfuge, for he well knows that this is an executive decision which must be made by him or the commissioner on administration . . . He urged Governor Volpe to recommend an appropriation under which the state could exercise the option to buy the building in which the Boston branch is located. "A substantial saving to the taxpayers of the state would result," continued the auditor.

Brigadier General Royal Hatch

UNIV SYMPHONY CONCERT TUES.

The University of Massachusetts Symphony will open its third season under Ronald Steele, director, with a concert Tuesday, Dec. 14, at 8:15 in Bowker Auditorium.

The soloist will be Prof. Howard Lebow, pianist, to be heard with the orchestra in Mozart's Piano Concerto No. 14 in E Flat K 449.

Wallingford Riegger's "Dance Rhythms for Orchestra" will open the program. The final work after intermission will be Robert Schumann's Symphony No. 3.

The concert is open to the public without charge.

No Pole Is An Island

By JEROME S. HORVITZ, Associate Chairman

How great am I.

Day in and day out I stand here—right in the middle of the road. I can't even remember when they put me here. I was probably just a baby at the time.

But let me tell you that I've had it—up to my wires. I can't take it anymore. Everyday people walk by and squirt at me as though I was some kind of freak. Don't they know that even a telephone pole has feelings? Besides this mental anguish, I have to go through the threat of physical disaster from those darn cars that seem to just skim by my sides from every direction. Do you have any idea what two and a half tons of moving metal could do to me? Humpty Dumpty would have probably looked better. In fact, back in the fifties, during a raging snow storm, a Ford came skidding down from Van Meter hill and smashed right into me. I was laid up, or should I say laid down, for a month with a multiple fracture in my side. It took a full month of convalescence before I could get back on my foot once again.

But did they learn? Did they put me on the sidewalk where any normal telephone pole should be? Certainly not. Instead iron pillars were placed around me. They said it was for my own protection. How considerate. They were even painted red no less. Actually I shouldn't complain. Just a few years ago the pillar to my left stopped a speeding M.G. And I mean stopped. Now the poor thing is bent and they won't ever bother to straighten it out.

Why have I suffered such a fate? I keep asking myself this question. Not that I'm one to complain, but I can't even get the enjoyment of catching flicks thrown from Van Meter anymore, since they retarded the street. Those fools put me in the opposite direction. I ask you. What's a guy to do?

So here I am—an outcast in society. Can you blame me for being a paranoic? All my life I've always been nothing more than a middle of the road telephone pole. Every year I wait and wait for them to move me. But all they care about are their new buildings—like the ones down the end of the street.

But who really cares about me? I never get any attention except once a year, during Christmas, a few girls always stop by my light and give me a little joy by singing Carols. I just hope they don't forget me this year.

No Pole Is Worth Accidents

By STEVE SHEEHY, Editorial Staff

If you're one of those ~~fortunates~~ who have a car on campus, or even if you just ride in one occasionally, ~~and you have~~ driven to the Orchard or to Chadbourne, Greenough or Van Meter, then you will certainly have noticed the telephone pole, situated in the middle of Clark Hill Road.

This pole is a threat to the safety of every person on campus. Not only is it dangerous to drivers (but also to the pedestrians who must try and avoid being struck by drivers trying to miss the pole. In addition to the pole being situated in the middle of the street, it is surrounded by small steel pipes, thus making it even more dangerous. The fact that Clark Hill Road is sloped right at the spot where the pole is placed makes it extremely treacherous when the road is wet. A glance at the pipes scratched and scarred, will show that they have been hit numerous times. True, most of these accidents result only in a dented or scratched bumper, but even these can result in expensive damage. On top of this is the danger of a person, unfamiliar with the area, who is perhaps going to fast and doesn't see until too late that there is a telephone pole in the middle of the street. One doesn't have to think too long before he can appreciate the consequences.

No one seems to know why this pole was placed in the middle of the street. Why could it not be placed at the side of the road as most poles are? The pole is only a few feet from the grass at the side of the road where it could be relocated and not be in anyone's way. It would certainly not cost too much—Of course, one cannot place a monetary value on the cost of a serious injury or loss of life. The point is that it can be removed without any great problem. Perhaps it would require a few days work. Certainly the end result would be more than worth the trouble.

When Bell invented the telephone, he couldn't foresee the problems that the millions of wires would create. When some unknown genius invented the telephone pole, the problem was solved. At least it was solved until this pole came onto the scene. It can be solved, it should be solved, but will it be solved?

Future Housing Please

In reference to the articles recently written in the Collegian concerning married student housing, we would like to make the following comments and pose a few questions.

Why are faculty and staff given first preference over married graduate and undergraduate students in Lincoln Apartments? Faculty and staff are in a financial position to pay considerably higher rents than a struggling married graduate or undergraduate. Why are single foreign students given preference over married students? Three or four foreign students could easily get together to share the expense of an apartment in town. Married students cannot do this.

We have repeatedly been told by the housing office that there are no future plans for housing for married students. Why? Encouragement, not discouragement, should be given to married students for trying to better their education.

As far as we can see, this administration and board of trustees has done everything possible to discourage future housing. They have been pressured by the town of Amherst not to build more married facilities. The town wants to benefit indirectly from the rents received through Colonial Apartments and the other housing projects springing up all over Amherst. How many married students can afford to pay $125-$150 per month for rent? You might point out that these new developments are quickly being occupied. However, many of these occupants are single students who have banded together on the rent, thus lowering their cost of living. This rent is split at least three or four ways. Staff can also afford these rents.

Why doesn't this University build new and inexpensive housing for married students? We'd greatly appreciate a reply from this administration. What does the university propose to do with the 5,000 married students expected in 1970? We do not want garbage disposals, wall to wall carpeting, or air conditioning. All we ask is a roof over our heads, enough rooms in which to survive and a rent of $90 and under if possible. Is this too much to ask?

One Against Sam

To The Collegian Editor:

The idea behind your new column in the Collegian, entitled "Sam Sparc Speaks," troubles me greatly. Perhaps the author of this column considers himself particularly witty, in that he is able to take the popular stereotype of a Young Independent and turn it into an object of derision. This is no great accomplishment. I've seen people do much better jobs with Negro, Jewish, and Polish stereotypes, but they have met with less success. It is no longer "nice" to criticize Religious and ethnic groups in the North. But it seems that some people, unable or unwilling to deal with their personal frustrations, still need scapegoats. So Sam Sparc suggests Young Independents to serve this purpose.

For those of my fellow students who enjoyed and approved of this column, I would ask that you take a long, hard look at yourselves. Why do you feel a need to superficially condemn Y.I.? The group is really quite small—certainly a minority of 30-50 people shouldn't frighten you that much. But we know it's not their numbers that worry people, but what people believe to be their ideas. The Author of Sam Sparc depicts the Y.I.'s as being mentally lazy, as crusaders for any cause they can find, regardless of how absurd it may be. Yet it seems to me that the writer of this column, in his attempt to reinforce a distorted stereotype, is creating an excuse whereby he and others can avoid dealing with the questions raised by the Young Independents. In this respect, I would say it was he who is intellectually slothful.

Do Young Independents raise questions that you would rather not face? Do they threaten assumptions that you would rather not investigate? If this is the case, then they are performing a very necessary task in a democracy, and deserve the praise of all who believe in free speech and diversity of opinion.

The atmosphere that such articles as "Why I Became A Y.I." creates is one of intolerance, both for members of Young Independents and the ideas they express. Within such an atmosphere, similar to that of the McCarthy era in many respects, genuine education cannot take place. I hope that a majority of my fellow students will recognize the Sam Sparc column as the creation of a bigot, not of the traditional sort, but of a new and less obvious variety.

Louis C. Pellissier '67

Sam Replies

Dear Mr. Pellissier:

Pshaw! Pshaw! How can you lower yourself to name-calling. Why that's similar to the McCarthy era in many more respects. Nonetheless, I thank you for your constructive criticism. To know that the article made you so red-in-the-face that you felt compelled call me: prejudiced, a bigot, a McCarthyite, intellectually slothful, frustrated, and undemocratic, not only tells me it made you think (a new experience, perhaps!), but it sounds as though you were really personally offended. For the latter, I am sorry, but for the former, it's good for you, boy.

LET'S PLAY BALL WITH LEAPIN' LYNDON AND FRIENDS

By SAM SPARC

Good evening, ladies and gentlemen, this is your velvet-voiced announcer, Ev Dirksen, here to bring you the play-by-play of tonight's big game between the Dominant Donkeys and the Erstwhile Elephants. The Dominants are favored to win tonight's contest by 110 points, but Captain Goldwater of the Erstwhiles told me just a few moments ago that his team would use a conservative attack in an effort to stem the tide of his team's seven-year losing streak. This game, by the way, is being played in memory of John F. Kennedy, with all proceeds going to the Harold Stassen Child Prodegy Foundation.

from neither here nor there but acceptable and appeasing in both, Ed Brooke. Hold on, folks, we can tell it's not Brooke coming out on the court; Bill Scranton, apparently a later starter, is substituting for Brooke.

Coach for the Donkeys is soft-spoken Lady Byrd Johnson, who has just purchased pink and orange uniforms in order to make the team a more beautiful team in which to watch. Coaching the Republicans is that fiery, outspoken former star, Decisive Dwight Eisenhower. Only through Ike's indomitable power has the team remained reasonably harmonious.

REPLACING THE national anthem, which cannot be sung tonight due to a sudden attack of amnesia to the scheduled performer Robert Goulet, the respective team fight songs will be sung: for the Donkeys, it's King of the Road; and for the Elephants, the prophetic folk-song Don't Think Twice It's All Right.

O.K., the teams are gathered at mid-court for the tap-off. The referee throws up the ball and we're under way. By a little arm-twisting, Johnson wins the tap. He passes over to Wallace, who dribbles off to the auxiliary court and tries to start his own game. Johnson, obviously angered, tries to get Happy Humphrey in as a sub, but no one can seem to find Hubie, nor has anyone seen him in months. So Johnson pages Bobby Baker, who was suspended from basketball last year and is now getting his last chance with the Johnson Boys. In appreciation, Baker presents his captain with a solid-gold basketball.

ALRIGHT, it's Elephant's ball. Nixon puts it into play. He passes over to Rockefeller, who loses control of the ball, but Scanton picks it up...only to have it again taken away by his teammate Captain Goldwater. Goldwater, angered over Scranton's attempt to move the ball forward, dribbles over mid-court, stops, and lets a shot go from the hip, a long forty-foot bomb. Oh, it misses the rim and the backboard completely.

Democrats get the ball again. Kennedy and Johnson begin to fight for who will take out the ball. Johnson easily wins the argument, Kennedy is removed from the game, and in comes Walter Jenkins. Jenkins, ladies and gents, comes out with no uniform on, runs up to Johnson, embraces him in a gesture of gratitude, but is quickly escorted from the court by police. Desparingly, Leaping Lyndon calls for Humphrey again, but he still cannot be found. Bob the Bomb McNamara, known for his tight defense, enters the game to the boos of the Springfield contingent. McNamara passes straight to Johnson, who dribbles past Truthful Ted, takes a tricky underhanded shot, which goes around the rim and through. Johnson pulled the wool over everyone's eyes on that play, folks. The score is now a lopsided 2-0.

AT THIS POINT, Goldwater would like to substitute, but he has not had a bench in ten years. Last year, it was thought that Battlin' Bill Miller would provide some help, until it was discovered that he'd never played any real basketball before. Al-right, play is resumed. Scranton passes to Goldwater who gives off to Lindsay. Lindsay, in a dash of independence, refuses to accept the ball from Goldwater, claiming he dislikes being on the same team with the Arizona great. The crowd starts to cheer J. V. wildly, and Lindsay responds by entering the stands and shaking hands with everyone in every section.

Now stunned by Lindsay's action and realizing he only has four men left, Goldwater frantically asks for volunteers from the crowd. The only response, however, comes from Harold Stassen, who sees a possibility to at last be in a starting lineup. Goldwater now throws up his hands and forfeits the game because of lack of player support. Ray Bliss, general manager of the Elephants, just informed our man on the floor that he will call for an immediate reorganization of the club in the hopes of getting together a solid team for the future, a team that can play a modern game of basketball.

SO THAT'S IT FROM HERE, with the final score a shut-out in favor of the Donkeys, and reminding you that any duplication or rebroadcast of his game is prohibited without the express written consent of: Luci, Lynda, Pat Nuggett, Lady Byrd, Him, Her, Blanco, George Hamilton, or Billy Graham. Good evening from your hosts, the Alcoa Aluminum Company and the Donnelly Highway Sign Company. Stay tuned for Press the Meat, the story of LBJ's 1964 handshaking campaign, which follows over most of these same Lady Byrd Stations.

Velvet, Ev, saying Bye for now.

"Yes,... there is a Santa Claus"

At Christmas time, campus fraternities and sororities extend the spirit of Christmas to hundreds of underprivileged children in the Amherst and surrounding areas.

It is the season of Christmas parties with gayly lighted Christmas trees, colorfully wrapped gifts and a "good old" Saint Nick in each fraternity.

The children are brought to the fraternity houses where they are greeted by festive Greeks. Santa arrives with a myriad of gifts from pick-up-sticks and mechanical robots to fire engines and dolls.

THE TOTS PLOW THROUGH MOUNDS of ice cream and cookies while enjoying their favorite cartoons, and finally they leave with their arms loaded with gifts and their hearts filled with laughter.

The Greeks this year sponsored many various Christmas festivities. The traditional Christmas parties with a fraternity and sorority hosting underprivileged children were in the main this past weekend.

Lambda Chi Alpha and the women of the Holyoke School of Nursing held a party for children of the Amherst-Belchertown area. This party typified the Greek Christmas parties with gifts, Santa, and cartoons.

AMONG THE FRATERNITY AND SORORITY combinations were, Kappa Sigma and Pi

Beta Phi who entertained children from the Holyoke area. Tau Epsilon Phi and Sigma Delta Tau played Santa Claus to children of the Amherst area, as well as Alpha Epsilon Pi and Sigma Kappa, also Theta Chi and Chi Omega.

In other activities, the Brothers of Alpha Sigma Phi serenaded underprivileged children in Belchertown.

The Brothers of Sigma Alpha Mu undertook a project to benefit all the children at the Belchertown State School for retarded children.

THE SAMMIES talked to Mrs. Grover, assistant supervisor of the school, who suggested that the school could use a radio and a record player, which would perhaps be better than a party for a few of the children.

The Sammies then went and sold candy door to door in the Amherst area to raise the money for these items. With the profits the Brothers of Sigma Alpha Mu purchased an AM-FM clock radio and a Stereo record player. Both these gifts will be presented this week.

CHRISTMAS PARTIES, carolling and gifts, are a traditional occurrence with the UMass Greeks. The reason for this sharing of Christmas with the children of the surrounding area, as Steve Monsien, treasurer of the interfraternity council said, "is to spread good will throughout the entire community."

Houston Has Unique DVP For Playmate

University of Houston fraternities gave a royal welcome to Jo Collins, Playboy Magazine's "Playmate of the Year," who was in Houston recently.

While she was in town, Miss Collins was pledged by two of the men's Greek groups, Phi Kappa Alpha and Phi Sigma Kappa.

She also attended several stag parties at the fraternity houses. Her reaction to the fraternity men was, "They're just wonderful."

with another hit, "Dream Angel."

Lately it's been Steve Walker of The Bold, Taj Mahal and his group in 1963, and vocalist Don Johnson.

But after yesterday's concert in the S.U. Lounge, the consensus is that another name will be soon added to the list—and pretty high up there, too.

Sophomore Ruth Steinberg singing for the first time here, seemed to enjoy every minute of performing, despite an attack of the flu.

Singing songs from Judy Collins, Joan Baez and our own Buffy Sainte-Marie, she excelled in either slamming out a song like "Tear Down the Walls" or whispering a soprano "Fly Away You Pretty Little Bird."

One listener, who said that he had been here for the past five years, declared that she was another Buffy in the making.

Warming up to his subject, he added, "I was really pleased when she came through with some of those high notes . . . clear as a crystal."

A 19 year old Russian major from Boston, Ruth has been singing since she was eleven. She admitted that she has been playing the guitar for only a year.

She said, "I just picked it up from one of the girls in the dorm."

Many thanks to 'one of the girls in the dorm' and to Ruth Steinberg for a sparkling hour of song.

SOUTH COMMONS STUDENTS ASK --- WHERE'S GERRY?

A girl had lost her pocketbook while eating. Before she gave up hope, even before getting worried, she went to the ladies behind the food counter and asked for Gerry.

This is the way it goes in the South Commons when any student wants a helping hand and a friendly smile—"Where's Gerry?"

Working in the South Dining Commons since last year as Senior Dining Hall Attendant, Gerald Baldrassaro is considered by many students as the best feature of UMass' newest dining area.

In a recent Collegian interview Gerry said of his job with the students, "I really love them. They are really good kids. Never any problems with them, they listen to me."

A former owner of three co-operations, Gerry sold them out lock, stock and barrel and retired, five years ago.

"After five years I got lonesome and came up here. I'm having a wonderful time here with the students," he stated.

Regarding the inevitable complaints from students about institution cooking, he stated that, although the complaints are not as numerous as is believed, he has what he considers an honest and frank reply.

"I just tell them 'You know you can't replace Mother's cooking,'" he laughed. During the black-out, some students came running up wanting to know where the 'riot' was. Except for a few students who tossed some pies around, there just wasn't any."

Concerning his transformation from businessman to dining hall attendant, he explained, "When I came up here, all I had was a great liking for people your age."

He added, "The rest of the Commons' management, particularly Mr. Blanchard and Mr. Bongiovanni have taught me everything I know about the job. Their suggestions and experience helped me out a lot when I wasn't sure what I was doing."

As he left to greet students at their tables, he commented, "You know, usually the kids are a pretty happy bunch, but it seems like each year at Christmas time, they have an added friendly, open look on their faces."

He smiled and added, "Maybe they're thinking of Mother's cooking when they get home for vacation."

BMOC'S DON'T HOLD A CANDLE TO EGGHEADS

Depending on your current academic standing, you'll either be heartened or sobered by a discovery revealed in the November Reader's Digest. It is that in a study of 17,000 men working for a leading industrial company, success in college was the most reliable indicator of success in a career.

The company that made the study is one of the nation's largest, American Telephone and Telegraph Co. In the Digest article A.T.&T. Board Chairman Frederick R. Kappel says that of the men in the top third of their classes at college 45% were also in the top-salaried third of the company. At the other end of the scale, 40% of those in the lowest third of their schools were also in the lowest third in salary.

Kappel says that although the quality of the college makes some difference, it is less of a difference than the quality of the man. That is, top students from average colleges were more successful than average students from top colleges.

Another discovery made in the survey was that extracurricular activities in college bore little relationship to career success. "It is only real campus achievement that seems to have significance," says Kappel. "Mere participation in extracurricular goings-on does not."

The significance of these findings is apparent. "More and more," says the telephone company chief, "these statistical guidelines dispose us to look within the top half of the college class for the individuals to whom we will offer career opportunities."

PRESS CLUB . . .

Associate membership is available to former students who would have been eligible for membership had the chapter existed at the time they were in college, heads of departments or divisions in which journalism is taught and faculty members who are associated with institutional publication or public relations.

HONORARY MEMBERSHIP may be granted to members of the journalism profession who have achieved distinction in journalism or through their interests in the fraternity.

Active and associate members are charged an initiation fee of $6. There is no fee for honorary members.

Alpha Phi Gamma was founded Dec. 11, 1919, at Ohio Northern University, Ada, Ohio, by five staff members of the Northern Review: B. H. Focht, Lloyd W. Reese, Tom B. Haber, Fred C. Slager and R. S. Ly.

The group remained a local organization until 1923 when two members started a plan to make it a national fraternity. Six other Ohio colleges were represented at Ohio Northern on March 23, 1923, and were granted charters. That same day the first woman was initiated, making the fraternity co-educational.

THE FRATERNITY WAS strengthened in 1929 when Omega Xi Alpha, Ohio, a California fraternity, merged with Alpha Phi Gamma as the Western section of the fraternity.

In 1957 Alpha Delta, a similar journalistic fraternity, disbanded and most of its active chapters were granted charters in Alpha Phi Gamma. Additional chapters have been established at a moderate rate of growth since 1957.

Alpha Phi Gamma has annual regional meetings for its chapter, makes awards to journalists who have distinguished themselves and issues a series of publication of news and opinion about the collegiate press.

The official publication of the fraternity is the Collegiate Journalist, edited by Dr. Dario Politella, professor of journalism at UMass.

you can be secret agent:

He was putting on his favorite cologne when the door buzzer sounded. Room service—dressed up as a French maid—was the most gorgeous creature he'd seen in some time. He remained poised, ready to reach for the Walther in his shoulder holster. He didn't recognize her, but something told him that she was there to deliver something deadlier than breakfast. He moved just in time as the knife flew through the air and imbedded itself with a twang in the wall behind him. Grabbing her shoulder, he spun her to the door and trained the Walther on her...

This isn't an episode from a James Bond adventure, but it could be. Will the dream hero shoot the intruder? It won't be necessary because his male magnetism, a much more reliable deadly weapon than the automatic already gives him "the license to kill... women."

What are the factors in the charm of the 007 type hero? Here are some tips:

001. Know what you want and go after it. Bond isn't supposed to be a "nice guy" after all, he's a Secret Agent who's licensed to kill. Without drawing a bead on anyone, you too may find that you'll get what you want if you refuse to let others take advantage of your good nature.

002. Show decisiveness in all situations. According to the screen's Sean Connery who is James Bond to millions of women, "I think one of the appeals Bond has for women is that he is decisive - cruel, even. By their nature women aren't decisive. 'Shall I wear this? Shall I wear that?' - and along comes a man who is absolutely sure of

While there are exceptions, "nevertheless we must be concerned with relative probability," Kappel writes. "When you hire a high-scholarship man, your bet is that a drive already demonstrated will be sustained."

Anybody have some studying he wants to do?

For millions of men (and women), the James Bond image means adventure and excitement. A symbol of masculinity, 007, is probably today's most idolized hero. What makes an 007 hero? Read on.

everything, and he's a godsend."

003. Work hard on your well-groomed image. Bond is in great shape, and he dresses to kill; so should you, within the limits of your budget. Don't forget that for anyone as sophisticated as 007, good grooming includes that the selection of after shaves and cologne and other scentsible grooming aids.

004. A smile can work wonders. This is especially true if you know when not to smile—which is most of the time! Bond is the quiet, somber type; his humor, when it flashes, is the dry, sardonic kind. When you smile seldom, acting as if you are preoccupied with weighty matters, a girl can't help wondering if you really are pleased with her. Then you flash your rare smile.

005. Be adventurous - but with the right kind of caution. Bond loves the fight, but even more he loves winning. He knows the differences between daring and recklessness, and so should you.

006. Remember that style makes the man. Agent 007 treats himself well. Good hotels, gourmet foods and wines, important cars, are his way of life—his trademark. Why not cultivate your tastes too? Dare to have habits; a certain wine always at your table; an offbeat brand of cigarettes, the aroma of a special cologne. Always remember women prefer a man of taste. If you act as though you're entitled to the best, it's more than likely that's what you will get.

007. Always be cool. This is really the "ABC" of the 007 hero. James Bond is above all, self-possessed. Keep your temper at all times—Secret Agent Bond may indulge in a flying tackle, but he never flies off the handle. You can avoid the temptation to boast—let your actions speak for you. They'll say flattering things, if you've learned the secrets of Bond's appeal.

With a little practice, in fact, you may find it easier than you think to establish a firm "bond" between yourself and the 007 hero image.

Beer And Song--But No Neighbors Complain

The college crowd may be hep on the jerk and the frug, but many are just as happy on Saturday night having an old-time song fest.

Springing up in various cities across the country are tiny cafes, with sawdust on the floor, and red-checked cloths on the tables.

By nine at night, there's invariably a long line waiting to gain admittance; college boys in crew-necked sweaters with their dates in colorful jumpers and car coats.

ONCE INSIDE, they'll soon be roaring out tunes like "Dixie," "Caroline," and "Sweet Sue," to the accompaniment of a banjo group or a honky-tonk piano.

The German area of New York

City known as Yorkville has a number of such spots, and is popular with the Columbia-Yale-Rutgers crowd.

THE SIGNS in the windows of the cafes are roughly hand lettered. At the Red Onion, the sign simply says, "Banjos Tonight."

If a singing group, known or unknown, is to be on hand, another sign goes up. At Charlie Bates', billed as an oldfashioned saloon, a folk group such as All the King's Men sings while the pianist takes a break.

The pitch is simple, pleasant corn, which quickly turns into good fellowship. Then the pianist plays "California, Here I Come," and the happy natives stand up to be applauded.

Requests written on postcards are passed up, and the college alma maters are vociferously sung. The waiters wear vests with college pennants on them, ranging from Rice in the South to Yale in the North.

The pianist starts an ad lib song, "Hey, Lolly, Lolly," and different tables of students contribute a verse.

AL JOLSON and George Cohan would be happy to know their oldies are known and remembered and treasured.

Those who deplore the scandalous ways of youth should take a look some Saturday night, at happy kids with a seventy-five cent stein of beer, singing their way to good clean fun.

Burke Family Singers Here

Natives of New England and one of the unique attractions of the concert stage, the Burke Family Singers will present a concert in the S.U. Ballroom tonight at 7:30 p.m. Admission will be 50 cents without an ID and only 25 cents with an ID.

This talented family captivates the eye as well as the ear. Termed, "an American Trapp family" father, mother and ten children, join to create music at a rare level of excellence. The Burkes' comprehensive repertoire is sung in eight languages, and consists of sacred and classical choral music.

They will be singing: "Le Sommeil de l'Enfant Jesus," "The Little Drummer Boy," "Carol of Bells," "Stille Nacht" a medley of songs from the Sound of Music and others.

Student Sexual Behavior Need Not Concern Admin.

By ERIC PACE of the N.Y. Times

A group of 260 psychiatrists declared yesterday that the private heterosexual and homosexual behavior of students need not become the direct concern of college administrators.

This opinion was made in a 129-page study, entitled "Sex and the College Student," prepared by a committee of members of the Group for the Advancement of Psychiatry. The study also recommended that colleges draft explicit rules governing some areas of sexual behavior, provide information about birth control and venereal disease and gave counsel on aspects of abortion to girl students who are considering termination of pregnancy.

THE STUDENT'S PRIVACY requires respect," the report says. "Sexual activity privately practiced with appropriate attention to the sensitivities of other people should not be the direct concern of the administration."

As to heterosexual behavior, the study concludes, "a certain amount of freedom in the area of student social and sexual interaction with the opposite sex is now taken for granted within limits of personal integrity and public decency."

"At the same time," it says, "we believe changing sexual mores and new social realities requires the college to be explicit about its view toward sexual conduct on the campus."

The authors took the view that homosexuality among students may be only a passing phase.

"Manifestations of homosexual feelings during the period of young adulthood vary widely," they said, "the ultimately successful heterosexual adaptation of many students who reveal overt homosexual manifestations at some point in their adolescence or early adulthood makes it difficult to define the boundary between serious psychopathology, transient aberrations and normal adolescent development."

THE REPORT ALSO says that "instances of homosexuality occur among women students probably as frequently as they do among men, particularly in residential colleges."

Nevertheless, the study finds "there is no evidence that the presence per sex of an actively homosexual individual on campus will necessarily increase the incidence of homosexuality."

AS TO CONTRACEPTION, the study favors providing students with information, but not medical materials. Information about "the public health aspects of venereal disease" is suggested on the same basis.

The report said a college health service should also be ready to help the unmarried girl student "in making the diagnosis of pregnancy as early as possible in order to give [her] and her partner as much time as possible to consider alternative plans."

If she is considering abortion, counseling may "pave the way toward a more satisfactory resolution," the study said.

"In the final analysis," the report says, "the college cannot control the sexual behavior of students, but college officials can be clear about their own and the college's expectations of acceptable behavior on the campus."

A GAP spokesman said copies of the report could be bought for $1.50 at the GAP office at 104 East 25th Street.

separate residence units for 192 students. It is not planned to initiate the operation of these tower residence halls as part of the residential college program in September, 1966, but rather to permit the development of student and faculty plans during the course of the year for special programs which may be seen by both groups to be most adaptable to these residence units.

In this group, T-4 and T-5 are proposed to house women, T-6, for men. (Because of an architectural change after the blueprints were produced, there is no longer a T-3!)

To serve further the needs of the Southwest Residence Area, the second dining commons will contain a snack bar of three- to four-hundred seats to provide supplemental food service and an area for social functions which will form an integral part of the Area's programming.

• The two dining commons to be in operation in the Southwest Residence Area in September, 1966, are sized to serve adequately all residents of the Southwest Residence Halls. Students living in these units will have unique opportunities for dining programs and informal contacts through the closeness of dining and residence halls. This plan, however, requires that ALL students who are living in these halls be participants in the broadening plan. ALL students who are residents in this area will automatically be billed as members of a five-day board contract. The usual exemptions for seniors and those over twenty-one years of age WILL NOT be applicable.

Rates for residence halls have been established within the Southwest area, by recent action, for the first group of residence halls, at $175 per semester. The present Gorman House, Brett House, and Orchard Hill residence halls semester rental of $150, and the rent of $100 for the semester of all other residence halls, remains at this time unchanged although higher costs of operation and the maintenance of improved residence hall standards in the face of generally rising prices may well require an increase in these rent designations. The review of residence hall cost and the occupancy rate will continue throughout the spring and information concerning any possible change will be made available as it is developed.

The opening in September of some fifteen separate residence units in the Southwest area, each for 192 students, will permit any group of students now occupying a residence hall which is to be transferred to the opposite sex to move as an entire group, maintaining their own organization and autonomy, to one of these new areas; or to move to one of the older residence halls which is being re-assigned. Throughout our discussions we have endeavored to keep in mind the desires of many students to preserve the integrity of the residence group with which they are now living. The Housing Office will make every effort to see to it that such groups remain together as they desire.

Nothing contained in these plans should, in any sense, be seen as fragmenting or separating students who have built their relationships during the course of the year. The major changes herein proposed make possible a change in the course of student life that many students sincerely seek.

Certainly no single announcement can provide the answers to the personal and special questions that may be asked by individual students or by residence hall groups. It is our hope, however, that the outline of the above program will represent a move toward integration and flexibility of both program and social grouping within the University thus providing better student life for all student groups.

William F. Field
Dean of Students

Residence Hall Policy Explained by Dean

The efforts undertaken several years ago to insure adequate and uncrowded residence hall housing for University students, by accelerating the construction program for residence halls, will have been achieved by September, 1966.

The scheduled completion of the five high rise halls in the Southwest Residence Area and the addition at that time of the second dining commons to be located there, will assure the return of all residence halls to normal occupancy levels. The successful completion of this phase of the construction program provides opportunities for initiating or extending programs within the student residence halls which have been under discussion for some years.

THE FOLLOWING PROPOSALS for residence hall usage represents the result of a review by the Housing Office in cooperation with the office of the Dean of Men and Dean of Women. The program is being distributed in this advance form at this very early date in order that all students can have ample opportunity to review it in the light of their own residence hall needs and the particular desires of the groups affected by these changes.

Members of the Student Personnel offices concerned will be available to meet with students to discuss additional details of the program and to incorporate extensions or modifications which may develop from such discussions.

High in the priority of thinking in the development of this proposal were factors that have been of continuing interest and concern to the Student Senate and other student groups for some time. Included here was the desirability of having residence areas contain approximately equal numbers of men and women students.

It seems that such housing groupings permit a broader social program within the residence halls, including the development of many educational activities relating to dining on a co-educational basis.

THE INTEGRATION of men and women in the various residence areas also provides the possibility of students selecting their own residence units in any one of the three major residence areas on campus to provide greatest convenience to academic building facilities or other units of prime concern.

The proposal envisaged, for example, will make available additional residence units in the so-called Northeast Residence Area (the Quad) for men whose classes are primarily in that section of the campus.

Another factor which is present in this proposal is the desire to develop residence hall assignments which can be left relatively unchanged for a number of years ahead in order that students who select a given residence area may have the opportunity to remain undisturbed in their college program if they so desire. It is our firm belief that the assignments proposed here will contain a high degree of stability and that enrollment changes will largely be met through the completion of additional new residence units.

A final factor in developing this proposal was the very important obligation to provide improved on-campus housing for the students of the Stockbridge School and for unmarried graduate students. The over-crowded housing situation on campus for the past several years has resulted in the priority assignment of housing to undergraduate students to the detriment of housing for Stockbridge and graduate students. Within the general principles stated above, then, the following residence hall assignments are proposed for September, 1966:

• COUNTY CIRCLE—All of the County Circle units will be removed from student occupancy. The construction in the Southwest Residence Area and of the highway leading east to west will require the removal of all of these buildings from the active list.

• BAKER HOUSE and GREEN-OUGH HOUSE will be assigned to male students of the Stockbridge School of Agriculture. The use of these facilities will permit the development of a social and educational program for this group, and will provide a focus for many of the School's activities, something which, unfortunately, has not been possible in the past.

• BUTTERFIELD HOUSE which by its location and facilities is conveniently adaptable, will be made available to single male graduate students who are in need of campus housing.

• Within the Northeast Residence Area, women's occupancy would be continued in the residence halls listed below (with maximum occupancy listed in parentheses):

Arnold House (170), Hamlin House (140), Knowlton House (140), Dwight House (137) and Mary Lyon House (137).

Present plans call for the renovation, as funds become available, of Lewis House, which would remove this facility from occupancy for the academic year 1966-67.

The following residence halls within the Northeast Residence Area would be available for occupancy for men:

Leach House (120), Crabtree House (120), Johnson House (129) and Thatcher House (110).

• Within the Southeast Residence Area, women's occupancy would be would consist of the transfer of HILLS HOUSE, both the north and the south wing, (357), to occupancy by women students, thus providing a sizeable women's residence in this area of the campus. Women would continue to be housed in VAN METER (332).

• In response to requests for an extension of residence hall self-government privileges to senior women, which could include the elimination of sign-out procedures and curfew limitations as the residents may develop such standards, Brooks House

(131) would be set aside for senior women.

It would be possible during a trial period of one year to gain experience with the elimination of many operational procedures which have been seen as desirable in the past and to permit the residents to develop new ones as might be appropriate. This special senior house could serve as a demonstration unit for residence hall programs adapted to the upperclass students.

• The Orchard Hill Residential College units would remain unchanged under this proposal, with Field House and Dickinson House for women, and Grayson House and Webster House for men.

• Within the Southwest Residence Area, men from the four year division of the University would continue to occupy the residence halls listed below:

Chadbourne House (121), Brett House (252), Wheeler House (150), Gorman House (333) and Mills House (122).

• Within the Southwest Residence Area the residential college program now being developed by Faculty Master Clarence Shute and Preceptors Gail Oakland, Mark Noffsinger, Maida Riggs, and Dean Albertson in the four low rise residence halls will be extended to include the first two high rise (tower) residence halls in this area.

These six facilities will comprise the Southwest Residential College. A dining commons in the core serves these students.

• The first of the tower residence halls, T-1 and T-2, each consist of three separate residence houses contained in a single tower. T-1 would house men and T-2, women.

These high rise or tower residence halls are all basically the same: a residence unit (three per tower) consists of seven floors, six floors being occupied by students, thirty-two on each floor, and a floor lounge to serve each of the three houses within the tower.

The seventh floor, located in the middle of the house, contains the apartment for the Head of Residence, the various social lounges, recreation rooms, vending areas, and the house office. Each of these residence units, then, contains 192 students, with the total of three units within the single tower serving 576 students.

For convenience, then, T-1 serving male students may be thought of as containing T-1 (Upper House) for 192 students, T-1 (Middle House) for 192 students, and T-1 (Lower House) for 192 students.

• Three additional towers to the south of the Southwest Residence Area are grouped close to the second dining commons for this area (now under construction). This group of four facilities is scheduled to open in September, 1966 as well.

The three towers are designed exactly as T-1 and T-2. Each contains three for good when Army picked up a five point advantage on the trampoline. Al Carver and Toby Kasavana both were running smoothly on the tramp until they hit the springs for automatic point deductions. Army's Drew Allen and Dana Groover recorded strong eights for the top two places.

The difference in caliber of UMass' Army opposition from the team they beat last week, Pittsburgh, clearly showed up on the horizontal bar. Last week Carver scored a 7.5 and won the event. At the academy, Carver registered 8.15 that went for a fourth place. The Cadets totaled 25.6 from their three men in the event.

The long horse proved to be Mass' best event with a first place and a 26.1 total. Army won it with a 2.2. Cohen was the last man in the event to compete and he scored with a 9.0 and 9.35 on his two vaults. His first was not enough to beat out Jon Steel, the previous competitor, but his second score beat Steel by .20 with third going to Army's Hank Simon.

The parallel bars contest was the biggest point gainer for the Redmen with a 23.75, five more than Army received. Jack Bradbury and Dave Lizotte each had an 8.05 score for a first place tie. Dick Booth added to the Mass score in finishing fourth. Only Jim Dusenbury added much to the UMass score on the rings. His 8.25 tied with Army's Bill Langois and George Winton for second behind Jack Ouellette, also of the Cadets. The 25.3 Army score in the final event boosted their score to 169.85, an increase of six over their non-league win over Kings Point last week. The UMass total was only .05 lower than the winning score over Pitt. In several events the Redmen lost points when a mistake or point-killing break hit otherwise well executed routines.

The freshman meet was close most of the way though each event being won by a fairly decisive margin. Mass excelled in the floor exercises, high bar, and rings, but Army won four events with back to back wins in the parallel bars and long horse that were enough to withstand a last ditch rally on the rings by UMass. Individual winners for the Redmen freshmen were Dick Dauphinals in floor exercises, George MacLeod on the side horse, Steve Sager on the high bar, and Dick Delgallo on the rings.

Tuesday night at 7:00 the Varsity team will host Southern Connecticut State College, a team they beat convincingly last year, in the first of two non-league meets, and Wednesday night the women's team opens its third season. Both meets will be held at the Auxiliary Gym.

Stockbridge Loses Riflery Match

Showing a weakness in the prone position, the Stockbridge School Rifle Team was downed by the Northeastern University Freshmen at the Dickinson Hall range 1151 to 1135.

The Stockbridgemen outshot the Husky Pups by three points in the standing position and by thirteen points in the kneeling position, but blew the match in the opening prone position firing with only two men breaking 90.

Intramural Report

By Dave Jarnes

Thursday's activity in basketball was highlighted by the first losses suffered by the two southwest dorm entries. The Comanches were upset by the Cherrys in a thrilling defensive game. All three of the Comanches' wins have been in low scoring games, but this time the tables were turned. Stillman's 23 points were instrumental in the Cherry's win.

Meanwhile the Colt 45's were bombed 60-40 by the powerhouse Butterfield Lemons as Higgenbotham controlled the boards with 23 rebounds and Dulio scored 22 points. However, the Lemons suffered an earlier loss to the Mills Birch, who are unbeaten and took over the south league leadership with a 45-40 triumph over a surprisingly stubborn Middlesex Redmen team, who were paced by Canlan's 22 points.

The Gorman Maples, who stand at 4-0, took over sole possession of first place in the West league by clobbering the Gorman Oaks 49-20 as McQuode, Lagoy, and Eaton all hit double figures. The Hickories nipped the Pines 52-50 as Dick Klemansky, Joe Bonczek, and Steve Whalen combined for 46 of the victor's points.

The Trojans rolled over the HiLo's 56-31 as Jay Kenny hooped 26 points and hauled in 20 rebounds. The Hoovers edged the Elms 32-25 and the Slippery Elms squeaked by the Limes 49-47 as DelSesto scored 22 points for the Elms.

In the north league the Aces continued to roll along with a 57-32 trouncing of the Trotters as Thomas got 20 and Crowley 26. Ed Rist and Chet Zabek controlled the boards and combined for 29 points as the Panthers scored an easy 59-35 triumph over the Phallies. Rounding out dorm action the Flaming A's whopped the Hawks 45-17.

Turning to the independents, the Philosophers, who've really been running up huge scores against their helpless opponents, did it again by annihilating the Chem Club 92-40 as Ken Gerlack flipped in 25, Tony Hay 19, and John Floris 19. The Innkeepers rolled to a 69-34 victory over the Banshees as Terry Swanson led a well balanced attack with 18 points.

In the only other games AIEE nipped the Forestry Club 40-36 and the Land Architecture beat the Buggers 43-28.

Turning to handball, Block reached the Flight B division of the dorm division by beating Garfinkle 21-14, 21-12.

SWIM MEET

The UMass swimmers, who lost a tough one to Amherst last week, will try to get back into the winning column tomorrow afternoon at 2:30. Joe Rogers' mermen will host Wesleyan at the Boyden Gymnasium pool. This meet will be followed at 4:00 by a freshman contest. 90.

UM WINS THRILLER

by DAVE JARNES

In what certainly must go down in history as one of the most exciting games ever played in the venerable Curry Hicks Cage the hustling UMass Redmen, led by Clarence Hill's 27 points withstood a late rally by a determined bunch of Northeastern Huskies to edge NU 78-72 before a small crowd of 2,200.

The first half was certainly UM's finest this season as the Redmen blitzed to a 41-32 half-time lead. For the first 8 minutes the Huskies held the upper hand as Jerry Knight's outside shooting and Harry Barnes' spectacular jump-shooting and rebounding gave them a 15-11 lead. However, Coach John Orr installed his famous zone press as the Redmen outscored NU 30-11 to take a 41-26 lead before the Huskies cut down the lead a little at the half.

Jim Babyak, who had another excellent game, got 12 of 22 points in the opening half as he hit on several long bombs.

The second half began innocuously enough as UM built up a 52-36 lead on Clarence Hill's fine shooting, and it appeared the Redmen were home free. However, at this point Northeastern switched from a zone defense to a man to man and began to chip away at the big lead.

For the next several minutes UM's lead varied from 7-9 points until Billy Tindall fouled out with 7 minutes left. With Tindall on the bench, UM, which was outrebounded 49-29, lost control of both backboards and had to hold on for dear life to win.

The last four minutes of the game left the fans breathless. Northeastern's ability to cash in on one and one foul situations (they were 24-30 from the line) kept the Huskies in striking distance. With UM leading 72-66 Harry Barnes hit two foul shots to cut the lead to four. This promising sophomore was certainly impressive for the Huskies as he scored 23 points, had 11 of 12 foul shots and grabbed 13 rebounds. NU's full court press upset UM and the Redmen lost the ball. Ricky Weitzman came back with a bomb to make the lead a precarious 72-70. Clarence Hill sank two foul shots but Barnes matched him to make it 74-72.

The Huskies' press again forced UM to throw the ball away. Weitzman then missed two outside shots in attempting to tie up the game as the crowd gasped on each shot UM finally got the rebound and John Lisack was fouled; John hit both foul shots and UM got the ball back on a missed shot. Gary Gasperack then made one of the prettiest plays of the year on a two on one break when he flipped a behind the back pass to Jim Babyak and Jim hit a short jumper for the final score of the game.

Shooting-wise UM did exceptionally well, hitting on 29 of 56 floor shots for a 52% average and 77% at the foul line with 20-26.

Although most of the plaudits were deservedly given to Hill and Babyak, not enough can be said about the steady game played by Frank Stewart. Frank played a solid game on defense, picked off 6 rebounds, got 9 points, and handed out 6 assists, an exceptional total for a forward.

The next game for the Redmen who are now 3-1 will be here against Holy Cross on Tuesday.

Matmen Split

by ART KEOWN

The UMass wrestling team lost a close meet December 8 to the Coast Guard Academy. While the Redmen wrestled well they dropped crucial matches and lost 21-20. Scoring wins for the Redmen were Jesse Brogan, Art Keown, George Darling, and Ralph Caisse, and Dave Kelley scored a draw. Then on December 11, the team evened their record by defeating Tufts 25-13. In the 123 lb. class John Gallagher (UM) was decisively by Altwater (T) 1-0. Dave Balanoff (UM) then decisively McKenna (T) 6-0 to even the team score at 3-3. Gene Smith, wrestling out of his weight class, was caught by Capt. Greg Gessay of Tufts and pinned in 1:08 of the first period. UMass ace Jesse Brogan then disposed of Tufts' Sugarman in the 145 lb. class with a fall in 3:32.

With the score tied at 8-8, Art Keown (UM) decisively Dave Heard of Tufts 15-3 to put UMass ahead for the first time. Co-captain George Darling (UM) got off to a slow start but wrestled well and defeated Nordan (T) 6-2. The lead was increased more as Bill Heimbolt, wrestling the best match of his career, demonstrated a well-learned series of takedowns and overwhelmed Earle (T) 12-3. O'kula of Tufts was decisively by co-captain Dave Kelley 11-1. Ralph Caisse (UM) gave the Redmen their second fall as he pinned Weston of Tufts in 7:11 in the 191 lb. class. In the heavyweight division Toner of UMass, wrestling his second match, fell into a half-nelson pinning combination and was pinned by May of Tufts in 5:32.

UMass coach Hess was impressed by the wrestling of his team and feels that they are improving. The next meet is at home against Amherst College on Wednesday, Dec. 15, at 3:00 p.m. in the Boyden Auxiliary Gym.

Frosh Cagers Romp In Easy 98-67 Win

By TOM FITZGERALD

In a free-wheeling affair Saturday night at the Cage, the UMass frosh coasted to a 98-67 decision over the yearlings of American International College. Coach Charlie Kingston, now in charge of the freshmen, employed his entire bench in the second half after the Redmen had amounted a 51-33 halftime bulge.

The Aces took an early lead of 7-6 when Jim White sank a corner shot after a feed from Sonny Hansley, but shortly after, back-court standout Joe DiSarcina made a steal at mid-court and drove in to score on a lay-up. The Redmen went on from there to lead, 23-16, at the 10-minute mark.

With three minutes gone in the second half the Redmen executed a gem of a play on a fast break. Mike Gemei tossed a behind-the-back pass to Ron Nowakowski, who flipped the ball to John Shockro for a close-in basket.

Nowakowski, rebounding from a below-par performance at Leicester last week, led UM with 19 points. DiSarcina hooped 17, Gemei 13, Shockro 11, and Lonnie Lehrer 10 to pace the well-rounded attack. Lehrer played in the pivot after center Peter Gayeska had fouled out with 11 minutes to play.

On the whole, the team shot and rebounded well, but will have to cut down on its numerous personal fouls against the tougher competition ahead. Some of that competition will arrive Tuesday night when the Holy Cross freshmen, with former high school All-American Ron Telxera, try to keep the Redmen from their third victory. The contest at 6 o'clock will precede the varsity tilt.

Gymnasts Lose to Powerful Army

By AL RICE

The University varsity and freshman gymnastics teams dropped meets Saturday at West Point when Army staged strong finishes in the final events. The Cadets beat the varsity 169.85 to 153.70 but the freshmen kept it closed and lost by a slim 117.75 to 115.0 edge.

The Mass varsity won only the parallel bars event in total points and their only first place came in that same event when Jack Bradbury and Dave Lizotte tied with 8.05 scores and on the long horse when Al Cohen won with a 9.35.

Army Captain Howie Pontuck won the floor exercises with a 9.1 and the Cadets also picked up the only two eights to take a strong lead that UMass cut into somewhat with solid performances by Bob LeClair and Fred Babakian on the side horse. UMass went into the hole

Kennedy Warns Students Not To Tire Of Viet Nam Conflict

by GORDON DAVIDSON, Day Editor

"The question facing the American people is whether we are going to become tired of our responsibility as world leader, and not aid six million people who have been trying for 25 years to determine their own form of government." This was the basic question posed by Senator Edward M. Kennedy yesterday afternoon to an audience which filled Bowker Aud. to overflowing.

The senator started his lecture with a review of some of the past events in Vietnam's political history, and pointed out that the Vietnamese people have had to throw off the shackles of colonialism, fight a 25 year-long guerrilla war, and at the same time try to establish a stable government.

"Are we going to hold the South Vietnamese people responsible because they have had no chance to develop a national identity, or a stable government?" the senator asked.

THE BASIS for American involvement goes back to the Geneva Accords of 1955 and 1956, and the U.S. has accepted the responsibility of giving these people the right to determine their own form of government, the senator added.

The North Vietnamese are pouring arms and propaganda into Thailand and Cambodia as well as South Vietnam, and it is up to us to show them that we have a commitment which we will maintain, the senator stated. "We must be mentally prepared for a military commitment of 20 to 30 years." The senator explained that a change of attitude is needed to develop humanitarian concerns as well. The refugees in the country need help, and trained people in health, education and sanitation are desperately needed. "It will be a hollow victory indeed if we reach a negotiated peace and have not provided the South Vietnamese people with a stable structure for democracy to continue."

"BUT IT IS HARD for Americans to get excited about terrorism which is taking place in a country 9,000 miles away," the senator stated. "Americans have to think through the nature of their commitment. The Communists are prepared to last in Asia indefinitely and they feel that it is only a question of time before Communism sweeps through S.E. Asia."

The senator explained that the Vietnamese people are patriotic and dedicated to their fight. He pointed out that there is no shortage of volunteer schoolteachers and mayors, and leaders, even though their predecessors have been kidnapped and shot by the Viet Cong.

The senator replied to a question of why the U.N. has not been called in by stating that it has no jurisdiction in internal affairs, which is how both North and South Vietnam define their struggle.

He stated that he was opposed to bombing Hanoi, and to the use of nuclear weapons in the war. "If we bombed Hanoi, it would only be a matter of hours before Red China would be in the war and we would be involved in World War Three."

STUDENT SENATE FINISHES MARATHON PRE-HOLIDAY MEET

By KAREN ROSE
Senate Editor

At the Constitutional Convention held last night the officers and senators voted approval of a bill requiring budgeting of class funds.

This bill requires that the officers of each class draw up a proposed class tax in the spring of the year and on the basis of this estimate the class tax shall be determined. The officers shall submit their tax proposal to the class exec council for approval and then to the Senate Budgets Committee and Constitutional Convention for final approval.

Sen. Bombardier (Gorman), the originator of the bill claims that this action "is only a beginning. In three or four years the classes will wonder how they got along without budgeting."

Senate President Daey demands order at last night's meeting.

The bill passed with an amendment instituted by senior class president Bernie Dallas in which he stipulated that the class officers have the prerogative to request tabling of their respective budgets to an arbitration board.

The board members shall include the officers of the specific class requesting such action, four senators — namely senate treasurer, chairmen of budgets and finance committees and the senator-at-large of the respective class. The other board members will be the RSO business manager and the co-ordinator of student activities.

The board shall discuss the budget and refer it back to a Constitutional Convention.

The second bill on the agenda concerned the possibility of releasing the senate president from his constituency upon his election to office in the spring.

Debate on this issue ranged from the question as to whether this move was legal to the point raised by Sen. Gaudet "is the new Senate, capable of electing a president in the fall?" This question was raised in regards to the issue that it would not be fair that the Senate sitting in the spring elect and authorize, permanently, the president for the ensuing academic year.

At this point Sen. Kevin Downes brought it to the attention of the chair that a quorum was no longer present and thus the Convention was dissolved.

In a Senate session which started at 12 midnight, due to the constituting Convention, and lasted until nearly three in the morning the Student Senate dis-

Trustees' Vote Finalizes UMass Boston Branch Purchase

by KAREN ROSE,
Staff Reporter

The UMass Board of Trustees voted Tuesday to formally approve the purchase of the UMass Boston branch from the Boston Gas Company at a total cost of $2,712,000. The trustees also voted to ask the Legislature for more than $40 million for educational and construction purposes.

The bill to purchase the University's Boston branch at Stuart and Arlington Streets was filed for the trustees by Senate President Maurice Donahue.

Concerning expansion of Goddell Library, for which funds were not set aside by the Legislature, for fiscal 1966, Provost Oswald Tippo stated that $375,000 in planning money will be needed for the library. It is estimated that library construction will cost $10,600,000.

BOTH PRESIDENT LE-

DERLE and Tippo expressed disappointment that the priority list submitted to the legislature by the Trustees was not followed. The library headed this list. Tippo stated that the goal of one million volumes for the library should be reached by 1970.

Funds were also requested for construction of a Fine Arts building, graduate research center, a new liberal arts building and a continuing education center.

The trustees also asked for $1 million for construction of roads and walks on campus and $1.5 million to house a new steam and utilities plant.

The new plant is necessary due to the rapidly increasing number of buildings going up annually.

IN THE FUTURE the trustees see a probable expansion of the School of Nursing, an Engineering School for nuclear and chemical engineering, as well as an addition to the WoPe building.

Hugh Stubbins, architect for the Southwest Dormitory Complex announced at the meeting that all five high rise dorms will be ready for occupancy in Sept. 1966.

Then then showed the trustees drawings and plans for the proposed dorms on Sunset Ave. These will be four and five story dorms housing a total of 1,072 students.

Also scheduled for completion in 1966 are two dining halls. The dining hall for the present Southwest quad is to be finished in January. This commons will feed from 900-1000 students. The other commons, to be completed by Sept. will feed 1,100.

STUBBINS CONCLUDED by saying that with the completion of the towers and the Sunset Ave.

Kennedy Warns Students Of Long Conflict In Viet Nam

COMMENTING on anti-U.S. policy demonstrations, Kennedy said he felt they contribute something to free debate if they are done in a constructive, positive way. "But this does not include card burners, to whom I am opposed", the senator added.

When asked why the U. S. doesn't just drive out the North Vietnamese and get out of Vietnam the senator replied, "We're trying, but they're a pretty resilient group."

The local branch of SDS, UMass Young Independents distributed leaflets which were an excerpt from the N. Y. Times news story describing the death and suffering of the Vietnamese people. The purpose of the pamphlets according to one of the distributors was to "generate some pointed questions toward Sen. Kennedy on what's happening in Vietnam."

After the lecture, over 200 students waited for the senator outside of Bowker, and when he appeared, the crowd closed on the senator. The senator was escorted to his car by six policemen after shaking hands and signing autographs for the eager crowd.

high-rise dorms here to stay after university's growing pains

By MICHAEL GIROUARD

"There is plenty of room for expansion on campus. We have enough space to house double the projected enrollment," according to Theodore Martineau, the University's planning engineer. Mr. Martineau further stated that he foresaw no difficulty in housing students in the future.

Martineau explained the current trend towards building high-rise dorms.

"High-rise dorms are there because you can get more people in the same space with ten stories than you can with three stories."

THE UNIVERSITY'S projected policy of construction was explained by Mr. George Norton, Associate Director of Physical Plant. Norton said that, among many projects slated for future construction, were a new administration building, an addition to Machmer, a building for graduate research, a farm service building, and two additions to Bartlett. A central storage building is in the final stages of design.

As regards those impediments which plague most students and faculty such as the disappearance of a road overnight or noisy construction equipment, Norton explained that there will be continuing construction.

"There will always be the little inconveniences."

MARTINEAU added that the Circle dorms (Plymouth, Hampshire, Berkshire, Middlesex and Suffolk) will be coming down because the University needs the space.

"They were only temporary structures anyway," said Norton.

Norton and Martineau weren't able to offer any definitive statement on the proposed new Fine Arts Center which had been the ward of Yamasaki, but they were confident of its eventual emergence as a reality.

Martineau wished to thank the students, "for their patience and co-operation in bearing with us while the University is in the midst of its most active growing pain."

dorms, the complex will house a total of 4,685 students.

The budget for construction, furnishings, fees, and expenses not including financing totals $5,685,000.

The trustees also voted to apply to the FCC for a license to operate Channel 58, an educational TV station in Springfield. The station would cover much of western Massachusetts.

Funds for this project totaling $400,000 are available at present. The University has reserved $200,000 and a federal grant matching this sum has also been provided.

cussed issues ranging from the purchase of a color television for Thatcher House to the repercussions involved in the scheduling of classes during religious holidays — namely Good Friday and Holy Saturday.

The motion concerning the Thatcher House TV involved a $448 load from the Student Senate.

Sen. Greenquist, the originator of this bill, pointed out that his constituency considered this purchase a necessity. He went on to say that Thatcher, as an RSO organization, had every right to apply for such a loan.

MANY SENATORS, among them — Kelcourse, Downes and Gurwitz, pointed out that appropriating such funds would set a bad precedent and could run into huge financial sums annually, should other RSO organizations follow suit.

Senators Bombardier and Greenquist brought a bill to the floor recommending that the spring semester schedule of classes be revised to insure that no classes be scheduled for the Friday and Saturday immediately preceding Easter Sunday.

At this point the entire senate launched into a debate with the issues ranging from the consideration of the religious holidays of other faiths to the theological implications of the bill. Senator Bombardier pointed out that theoretically some 70% of the University students follow the practices set forth in Christian dogma.

He went on to say that if many or all of these people choose to go home for the weekend there will be very few people left on campus and that it thus may be unfeasible to have the University open at this time.

SENATOR GURWITZ here pointed out that if the Christian holy days are to be treated in this manner that similar allowances should be made for the Jewish campus population. Senator Cass made similar statements regarding, among others, Practicing Marxists, Buddhists, Moslems and any other religious groups present in the campus community.

Suggestions were made to the effect that the Senate look into the possibility of Dean's excuses for these days. It was brought out here that there is no such thing as a Dean's excuse and that excused absences during Jewish holidays this semester

Greeks Plan "Fraternal Park"

It appears that university fraternity life may have drawn a fresh breath of air.

At least to those close to the situation a mild form of "solution" has been found. And the question of whether fraternities are to continue to be part of American college life, to them, is moot—they're here to stay.

Seven fraternities at UMass are planning a "Fraternal Park"—with the ultimate goal of including 20 "frats"—just off the university campus. The 40-acre tract of land in Hadley, as one observer puts it, is out in the "boondocks."

Pilot of Sorts

The park, say its designers, will serve as a pilot of sorts for fraternities around the country. Whether the plan is adopted nationally, therefore, depends upon the success of the UMass project.

Each UMass fraternity will build a $250,000 house for 50 to 60 students on a 1½-acre lot with a half-acre allowed for parking and another acre set aside for beautification. With an acre set aside for a recreational area, this means that 20 houses can be built with plenty of elbow room.

And speaking of elbow room, the neighbors have been taken into consideration.

"The land is so situated that no single home or neighborhood is encroached upon . . . and the area surrounding the park will be developed in a manner which will complement the project," says Gilbert S. Holland, one of the project's boosters and an alumnus of Alpha Epsilon Pi, one of the fraternities involved.

The AEPI fraternity at UMass is one of 90 active chapters throughout the U. S. and the lineup of AEPI members who are lending their talents to the project's development includes experts in the field of architecture, building, contracting, banking "and any other field connected with establishing a project of this sort," Mr. Holland noted.

Real Estate Expert

A real estate expert himself (he has a degree from University of Pennsylvania in real estate), Mr. Holland points out that the project is now a joint effort of the seven fraternities at the university.

"An organization will be formed comprising all fraternities, or sororities, wishing to join," Mr. Holland said, "now or later."

"The unique concepts we have at our disposal for financing, insuring and constructing this complex will therefore be available on a community basis. The seven fraternities which have gotten the ball rolling expect to move into Fraternal Park in the fall of 1967," he said.

"And whether or not a fraternity builds now or five years from now, they'll pay the same price for the land," he said.

"Each fraternity or sorority will be provided with an 'umbrella' which provides, in effect, for everything needed to not only construct, but also to maintain the respective facility."

To Install Oil Depot

With a supervising architect available, plans call for installing an oil depot with separate lines to individual houses, "resulting in vast savings to all," Mr. Holland said.

Similar ideas are incorporated in the insuring, designing and construction plans.

The facilities housing the fraternities in the meantime will be sold through a central clearing house. "The university, if officials there so choose, will have first crack at any of the structures at a fair market value," Mr. Holland said.

"Our objective," he said, "is to construct a complex with private capital, with the profit motive eliminated in this case; a complex that will not only house roughly 10 per cent of the student undergraduate body, but which will also save the university about $4 to $5 million in dorm construction."

The planners of the project point out that in property tax revenue alone, Hadley stands to make about $100,000 annually.

Blessing of Officials

The actual building operation has the blessing of university officials and by late next summer, the site will be cleared for building.

Senate and the Foreign Students here on campus.

The committee is to include members from three Senate standing committees—Finance, Activities, and Public Relations, as well as a member from Mortar Board and three members of the International Club.

Two resignations were announced at the meeting. Senator

By next fall, architects will be designing 10-12 houses, depending on the number of fraternities or sororities committed to the plan at that time.

The national impact, Mr. Holland said, is such that the complex "will serve as a guideline to other universities and colleges by equipping them with the know-how and methods of new concepts in financing, insuring and constructing such a complex."

The plan would appear to fit in nicely with future growth plans at the university. In the not too distant future, the campus will be completely sealed off to traffic, with students "commuting" from one side to the other by bicycle, or busses.

An 80-foot wide highway from Fraternal Park will connect with the main artery leading into UMass from the southwest.

And, the university will have direct supervision over the students who belong to the fraternities.

Rationale for Project

The rationale for the project is, as Mr. Holland puts it, "to develop a social as well as intellectual environment which will help students to become effective leaders of tomorrow . . . to teach them how to live by providing them with the right climate and atmosphere."

Whether or not the project serves to dull the loud roar of voices raised in the past against fraternities remains to be seen.

But the status of future fraternity life would appear to be a bit more secure at this point.

Moriarty has resigned his chairmanship to the Public Relations Committee while Senator Kaczinski has resigned her Senate appointment to DVP.

It was also announced that elections will be held today from 8:30 to 5:30 in the Student Union lobby for two commuter senators and one fraternity senator.

SENATOR CUNNINGHAM of the Academic Affairs Committee informed the Senate that Hill would like to establish an accredited course in Hebrew as a fulfillment of the language requirement set forth by the University. Cunningham pointed out that the committee was unable to work on this item because sufficient information was not available for action. "However, the committee fully supports the proposal made here," Cunningham said.

Senator Wimberly, head of the Communications Committee brought to the attention of the Senate the fact that his committee has drafted one constitution for the proposed Publications Board and that board members have themselves drawn up their own constitution.

It was decided that further research on the constitutions must precede any other proposed moves in this area.

Concerning the Ad Hoc Committee on Married Housing, Senator Gurwitz commented that "there now seems to be hope and interest in this area."

An instructor in the department of Landscape Engineering plans to devote class time to draw up plans for possible housing for married students at the University.

Finally, the Senators approved an appropriation of $570 to the Crew Club for necessary equipment.

"Good Sound" Marks Chorale, Chorus Singing

By R. C. HAMMERICH

The first public appearance of the revamped chorale and chorus at the University of Massachusetts Sunday afternoon was aided as well as hindered by cramped quarters.

It was the first appearance of the new director of choral music, Richard duBois.

He presented a program in two parts: the first, a group of 10 songs and carols; the second, a nine-section contemporary chamber oratorio titled "The Christmas Story" by Peter Mennin.

THE PROGRAM was given in Bartlett Aud., an excellent lively little hall of about 400 seats which serves very well for student and faculty recitals and chamber music, but overflows frequently for events of wider interest.

It overflowed Sunday. There were listeners standing at the back of the hall, along the sides, in the hallways near the side entrances and even in the backstage wings.

They showed evidence of enthusiasm for the music in spite of their discomfort. It was an enthusiasm that was, for the most part, well placed.

The first section was performed by the Chorale, (54 members) except for DiLasso's echoing O Che Buon Eco, which was sung with telling effect by the Madrigal Singers (10 members), some of whom sang the echo hidden in the wings.

THE OTHER 10 pieces came from many musical periods, from 16th and 17th centuries (Vittoria, Purcell, Pitoni, Dering, Morley, DiLasso, to the 20th, Hovhanness).

Their performance was characterized by the easy grace that comes from paying attention to tonal blend and melodic continuity.

Mennin's Christmas Story, which followed a short intermission, enlisted the forces of the University Chorus and Chorals, a group of about 90 voices, augmented by Dorothy Ornest of the faculty, soprano, and an instrumental ensemble of two trumpets, two trombones, organ, piano and percussion.

THE WORK is deceptively simple. It's seeming austerity hides technical crags, and although the University's voices lost strength and surety during a couple of passages toward the end, they had already established a high score during the first three choruses.

The 90 singers were stacked up on six levels of risers and filled the little Bartlett stage. They filled the little hall with good sound, too.

— Christmas and Vacation Thoughts —

From the Chaplains

One of the great ironies of history is that our culture thinks of Christmas as a religious occasion when Christmas is really the most secular of events. By "secular" I do not mean Christmas ought to be what merchants have made of it in our time, complete with Santa Claus and pink plastic trees, for this, in fact, is a manifestation of the American religion of affluence. Christmas is secular because it is the celebration of the flesh, of materiality, of the world. Could the symbol "Incarnation" (literally, "in the flesh") point in any other direction? If Christmas was religious, Jesus would have been born in Church or in Heaven or some other "holy" place; but as the story goes, he arrived under the same unsanitary conditions as other babies of that time (20th century crèches to the contrary, of course). The fact that he was not born in a place apart but in a stable (translated into 20th century language as "service station") underlines the common aspect of this event.

Christmas is the event par excellence which directs us toward the world: its promise is that there are no heroes, supernatural or otherwise who will rescue us from life; its proclamation is that human beings can dare to live their lives as human beings, neither more nor less; its message is that life is to be lived here and now, not in some time in the future or in some never-never world. The "secular" poet E. E. Cummings said it best:

never mind a world (for god likes girls and tomorrow and the earth)

David A. Purdy
Chaplain, United Christian Foundation

Chanukah, perhaps more than any other holiday in the Jewish calendar, emphasizes the ideal of religious freedom. Originating in the successful defense of Judaism against the onslaught of syrio-Greek paganism, the observance of Chanukah through the ages has been the occasion for a yearly affirmation of Jewish devotion to freedom of religion, not only for ourselves as Jews, but for all men.

This year we again make that affirmation. As we look forward with our Christian friends, toward the observance of respective holidays, may the freedom in which we do so continue to flourish, that we may be enabled to enrich our lives with the religion of our choice, in devotion of God and in service to our fellow men.

Rabbi Ruchames
Jewish Chaplain

Peace on earth! As we hear these words again this year during the wonderful Christmas season we are reminded of the responsibility that is ours of intensifying our prayers that this phrase will come to life and be given its fullest meaning throughout the world. Truly this is a joyful season as we commemorate the birth of our Lord. However, as we look about us we realize how far short of the ideal man has fallen. Family strife which is causing the home to disintegrate, racial injustice and turmoil which are eating away at the very foundation of our society, conflicts and war among nations so contrary to the teaching of the Prince of Peace—these are all a far cry from the message we received nineteen hundred years ago as our Saviour was born.

In a few days we shall be returning to our homes and the happiness that only we can describe. As we enjoy our days in the warmth of our family setting, let's be mindful of those less fortunate. By our prayers, especially on Christmas day, plead for the peace of Christ in the minds and hearts of our fellow men. Such interest in others will certainly be pleasing to God and rich in its rewards for ourselves as we participate in the true spirit of Christmas.

To all of our students, faculty and staff we send our most sincere good wishes for a holy and happy Christmas and a New Year filled with God's choicest blessings.

A Christmas Letter

Leave Stanislaus Alone

To the Editor:

In response to recent editorials, "No Pole is an Island" and "No Pole is Worth Accidents", the friends of Stanislaus Chadbourne, (the pole) feel it their duty to speak out.

Stanislaus is not an ordinary pole—he is an institution. For years he has carried upon his shoulders the burden of supplying power and communication to the grateful residents of the hill. How often do students give directions by referring to the "telephone pole in the middle of the street"? This pole, "Stan," is truly a landmark.

The authors of the editorials seem to feel that Stan causes accidents. The truth is, Stan prevents serious accidents daily without a splinter of recognition. He stands at his post acting as a deterrent to the amateur "Fireball" Roberts or A. J. Foyt. Just by his very presence, he prevents the transformation of the "Chadbourne Road" into the LeMans Straight. We recognize the service he extends to his neighbor (the mailbox, the pedestrians, and the men of Chadbourne) by preventing "two-wheelie" corners.

True, no pole has feelings. But, Stan is not an ordinary pole. He is a safe congregating point for carolers, hitch-hikers, and dogs. For one sober person would dare challenge Stan's strength.

The expense of relocating Stanislaus can be expressed in dollars and cents. However, the inconvenience of temporary loss of service cannot be disregarded. Instead of relocating Stan and disconnecting his family ties, we suggest a "tie and tails" outfitting—fluorescent paint and reflectors. Residents of the hill can sleep soundly tonight for Stanislaus Chadbourne is awake.

From the Precisionettes

Belated But Worthwhile Thanks

The Precisionettes performed at UMass's last football game of the season at the University of New Hampshire. This trip will be especially remembered because of the warm hospitality afforded us.

Two UNH band members welcomed us Friday night when we arrived, and brought us to the campus. The next day, the band lent us their raincoats and after our performance, brought us a large box of apples, which disappeared rapidly.

We would like to take this opportunity to express our appreciation to the University of New Hampshire Band for their help and hospitality.

From Pres. Lederle

The Christmas holiday season is an especially joyful time. Following the stress of daily classes, arduous studying and difficult exam, it is a pleasure to take time off to renew old acquaintances and participate in traditional festivities of the season.

The holidays offer us an opportunity to break from the daily routine, to receive both mental and spiritual refreshment; and to share our many rewards with friends and loved ones. These cheerful days of celebration provide the renewed buoyancy and vitality that we all need as we look forward to the challenges of the coming new year.

As you depart in many directions for the Christmas holidays, Mrs. Lederle and I extend to you and your families our warm, personal wishes for a happy holiday and successful new year.

John W. Lederle
President

From the Staff

What do you write for a Christmas message? How can you express your true feelings when your feelings have been expressed in a zillion and two ways for 2000 years and now almost sound trite. Except you know they are sincere. You deeply wish everyone health, happiness, the attainment of all desires, love, prosperity, and peace of mind. You wish for more peace, human tolerance, adherence to the Bible and the Ten Commandments. And more and more love. To wish for good marks or a YanCon Championship seems so infantile, so insignificant, and you wonder why you pay so much attention to it for so long. The Christmas season has a way of making you think in perspective, even if only for one little day.

But you still haven't written an inspiring Christmas message; you've only strayed off the path (how irrelevant when compared to life). But then suddenly you get the idea you've been searching for.

We, of the Collegian, wish each and every one of you a very Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year.

COOPERATION? Swingin' Sam

To the Editor:

I was quite disturbed during a recent visit to the new Robert Frost Memorial Library at Amherst College to find that University students are not only prohibited from borrowing books, but also barred from using the library facilities at all. I was told that I was "not even supposed to be in the library, but unless a guard is posted at the door, we're not going to throw you out."

I can understand why inter-college borrowing of books could create problems and is therefore not allowed, but doesn't it seem in keeping with Four College Co-operation that the library resources be open to University students.

The new library is not only an asset to Amherst College, but also to the Amherst educational community. I therefore believe that its facilities should be open to same.

To the Editor:

Congratulations on that brilliant satire "Let's Play Ball With Leapin' Lyndon and His Friends." Your column is a bright and refreshing spot on the editorial page. It focuses our attention on campus and national goings-on by your injection of the needed bit of humor into the issues at hand. As long as we retain our freedoms of speech and press, and use them, we need not fear anyone. Undoubtedly, you will come in for criticism from the targets of your fun, such as the Y.L.'s, but those students who have any sense at all will praise you. To paraphrase E. B. White, your column can become the "holes in the stuffed shirts through which the sawdust slowly trickles." I hope you will continue to turn out such devastating satires.

Women's Affairs Committee
Updates Rules and Regulationsby NANCY LEBOVITZ,
Staff Reporter

The Women's Affairs Committee this semester has been working in cooperation with Dean Curtis' office to revamp the women's rules.

Committee co-chairman Jacquie Hall has set up four sub-committees: correspondence, organization, conference and communication, to deal with the increasing amount of work involved in committee projects this year.

Sen. Hall has announced that two changes in women's rules will become effective next semester. With the permission of Dean Curtis, women students 21 years of age or over and under 21 with parental permission will be allowed to live off campus.

The rule requiring University women to co-sign their guests in and out on the sign-out sheets has been repealed.

In the future, the format of the blue overnight card will face reform. Only pertinent information for the purpose of emergency location of the girl will be required on the card, and the house-mother's signature will not be necessary.

Proposals still in the discussion stage now are centering on an improved sign-out system, counselor systems, guests in dormitories on weekday special occasions, possible revision of the counselor evaluation sheets, and 8 o'clock Freshman curfew.

The COLLEGIAN Staff wishes you a Merry Christmas

Index Reminder

To the Editor:

With Christmas vacation approaching, and the end of first semester not far behind the holidays, all of us are beginning to feel the pressure of time on our everyday activities. This pressure is especially well known to all of the personnel of the student publications on this campus throughout the entire year.

Many of the campus publications are seen at various times during the year, but several are produced to be distributed to the University only once; among these annual publications is the Index, the UMass yearbook.

As is not uncommon with many things on many different campuses, the Index receives a great deal of criticism from year to year, as to its content, and as to the quality of material that is printed in it. Throughout the school year, the staff of the Index work diligently to produce a product which will be well received by the student body.

In the continuous effort that is applied to this publication, we, the staff of the Index, ask the aid of the members of the student body.

If you feel that the Index has not been up to par in the years that you have been on campus, come in and offer your suggestions and your help to those who have obliged themselves to the students on this campus. Make the Index a part of your college experience by participating in the final stages of its production. Only by contributing your time and your ideas can you truly be justified in criticism of the end result. If you have made no effort to contribute your ideas of a good yearbook, then you cannot be justified in your criticism of the finished product.

YULETIDE MIRTH

The residents of Hills House were treated to another vivid example of what passes for humor in some University circles. The Christmas tree in the dormitory lounge was destroyed and all of its ornaments smashed by some person or persons who apparently are taking the hard Scrooge line this Christmas or are reacting against the growing commercialism of the season and felt duty bound to rescue Hills' residents from their Madison Avenue frame of mind. Hills wishes to congratulate these vandals on their cleverness, their stealth, and their wit, for no one, presumably, has ever seen anything more amusing than a toppled, broken Christmas tree. One mystery, however, still remains: Why did they steal the Christmas lights? Perhaps to decorate their motorcycles.

"What's Come Over This World?"

While many of us are here (in relative safety) protesting against our government's policy in Viet Nam, we have unwittingly (perhaps?) neglected to find out how our men stationed in Viet Nam view their own situation. Most of the men there are not publicity-seeking martyrs or heroes. They don't want to die anymore than we do. Yet, they remain in Viet Nam fighting for a cause which seems so remote from many of us but which, in all reality, isn't. Why is it that THEY haven't deserted en masse or staged senseless demonstrations, AND YET, WHO HAS A BETTER RIGHT TO???

The following is an excerpt taken from a letter written by one of our servicemen who is now stationed in Viet Nam. He wasn't particularly overjoyed with his assignment to Viet Nam, which automatically carries with it the very real possibility of death. But he is there as a representative of our country which has upheld the principles of "Liberty and Justice for ALL" from the beginning of its history. Do these principles apply to Americans only???

... You know, one thing that really gripes me is the draft card burners and the people who protest our being here in Viet Nam as being foolish or bad. Of course, we don't want to be here, but the South Vietnamese government asked for help to free their country from Communism and terrorism. Our government saw fit to agree, so it's our responsibility to comply with its wishes. I would like to have the protestors make an attempt to visit this country, and get an accurate picture of what's going on over here, and see the conditions these people must live under—all because they want freedom from oppression! Perhaps then, the protestors would re-evaluate their ideas and opinions.

Many of our men have been sent to Cam Ranh Bay. They have been shot at: they live in filth and mud; they have no conveniences; and they have to be continually on the alert—their lives depend on it! And for what? To stop the spread of Communism. It has to be stopped somewhere, and I'd much rather fight it here than in my own hometown. Maybe people think it can't happen in America, but people thought we'd never have race riots in L.A. either. A glance at the headlines last August showed just how wrong they were . . .

Soph. President Keough Lauds JFK Concert, Defends Class Unity

Class of '68 President Bob Keough: "I thought it was great!"

by TOM DONOVAN,
Feature Editor

"It was unfortunate that the Collegian wasn't better informed about our recent J.F.K. Memorial Library Fund Concert."

This is the way President of the Class of '68, Bob Keough, feels about the recent Collegian article which appeared under the headline, "BEACH BOYS CONCERT."

Keough explained, "Although the concert featured a nationally known group, it was not the Beach Boys Concert."

FREE SHOW:

The '68 Class President went on to laud the other three performers for their benefit performance.

"The Prince Spaghetti Minstrels, The Boss Tweeds and The Bold all performed for nothing—they turned all payment back to the John F. Kennedy Fund for the new Library," he said.

Keough remarked that entertainment agents from California to Boston were at the benefit concert. He noticed that they were all impressed with the professional calibre of the groups.

JAMES BROWN FLAIR:

"One California agent told me that the Bold had a polished James Brown flair to it. He also made a prediction that the Boss Tweeds would surely be heard from in the near future, particularly as a result of their original songs," Keough reported.

After the J.F.K. Concert, it was discovered that the sophomore class had raised almost $5,000 toward a John Fitzgerald Kennedy Reading Room in the new UMass Library.

CLASS STRUCTURE UNNECESSARY:

"This class function more than adequately answers the charges of some of the administration members that separated classes and class officers are no longer necessary," he stated.

Keough explained that the J.F.K. Memorial Library Fund Concert was just another example of the class expansion away from the traditional "entertainment" functions and toward charitable and public service endeavors which involve the entire state or country as well as the academic environment.

WILLIS REPORT RESPONSE:

Keough stated, "For example, the Class of '68 last spring initiated the trip to the State House in response to the Willis Report."

He also revealed that the sophomore class this spring will be sponsoring a trip for underprivileged children from Boston to the UMass Amherst campus to provide them with a more concrete academic stimulus.

Keough added with a smile, "Contrary to the Collegian concert review, I thought the J.F.K. Memorial Concert was just great!"

june 21st. and it's christmas

Editor's Note: Every so often I come across something that makes my throat tight and my eyes blink—a special Christmas.

June twenty-first and it's Christmas morning for Sue. The happiness of a child.

And when she's happy and wonderfully young, she marches down the street shouting "Everybody loves a parade!" and everyone she's with feels happy and young and everybody loves a parade.

Sue runs in the rain and catches the water on her tongue. She wades in the Prudential fountain.

She jumps out of a sailboat to catch a lady bug.

She giggles.

She knows that the Christian Science Monitor Building is Cinderella's palace. She picks pansies in front of it. The clock strikes midnight. She runs up the steps, flings her loafer away and says, "Oh dear, I dropped my slipper!"

She runs along the beach at night, splashing water—singing. She makes jungle noises.

She posts on the merry-go-round.

She brings home surprises.

She loves to cuddle.

Carol Sing

UMass' annual Christmas Carol Sing was held last Sunday night in the Student Union Ballroom by the class of 1969. It boasted an attendance of well over five hundred people.

The sing was a dual purpose show. UM students, led by Bill King and Gary Le Beau, sang more than fifteen carols with Judy Leach providing piano accompaniment.

The Madrigals, a girl's vocal group directed by Donna Pratt, performed such favorites as "Christmas is Coming", and "Do You Hear What I Hear?"

The highlight of the evening was the appearance of Santa Claus Ron Garner and his helper Dee Dee Turner, who tossed candy canes to the audience. Cocoa and doughnuts were served.

Gary Le Beau, president of the freshman class, expressed his thanks to the Freshman Executive Council and to all who helped with decorations. He also thanked all those who attended for making the sing the success it was.

What kind of success was it? Many people agreed with Fran Pijar when he said, "It was great!"

"Santa" steals collection plate in church, provokes guffaws

By PETER HENDRICKSON
Editor-in-Chief

The First Congregational Church's Santa is a sneaky UM student who made off with the collection plate during last Sunday's service here in Amherst.

Tom MacLachlan, a senior English major, dressed as the fat man, filched the collection plate from a stunned usher (Dean of Students William Field) and slipped the proceeds into a sack before rushing from the church.

According to Rev. Richmond K. Greene, minister, it was not a bold theft but a daring hoax in the interest of education. The test was designed to gauge the congregation's reaction to an act which broke accepted social norms.

Tom reported that the reaction ranged from indignation to smothered guffaws but no one attempted to halt the thief.

THE PROCEEDS were deposited (after the heist) in the minister's office. Although Tom has attended the First Congregational Church during his four years at UM, he was not recognized through the disguise.

The assistant of the sociology class, Georgios Pan Piperopoulos, noted that Tom's exploit is but one of a number of norm-breaking episodes that have upset students and townspeople.

A co-ed hustled into the library last week with a typewriter and settled herself in the middle of the quasi-quiet study hall to pound out an assignment. It is reported that she was castigated with jeers, hisses and spit balls before she picked up and left.

"A SHAPELY BLOND" slithered into Howard Johnson's in Northampton and removed her coat revealing that she was clad only in a scanty bikini," a Collegian informer reported.

One small, but "mean" young man slapped a woman in the face near the center of Amherst and was nearly flattened by an irate bystander who thought he had hurt the woman. Little did he know that the attacker had arranged the incident beforehand.

Letters were sent to a variety of campus leaders to discover if they would support a movement similar to the Berkeley revolt. Student Senate circles were shaking a bit upon receipt of the letters and political activists were eyed suspiciously.

Organizers of last year's Spring Day were closely watched and a Post Office Box in Amherst was under surveillance for a short while to see who would retrieve answers to the questionnaire.

"SOCIOLOGY is so often just a set of concepts and definitions," according to Prof. Robert Stanfield. He is the Social Problems instructor who for the third year has assigned students to break social norms.

"Two years ago, a student wore a suit and tie for an entire week and, amazingly, made his best friend angry. The friend said he was trying to pose as a professor," Stanfield said in a Collegian telephone interview.

The UM prof said he was "a bit upset that religious services might have been disturbed. I stressed that the exercises were not to be illegal, immoral or in violation of any official University regulations. I did not restrict them to campus but hoped that most of the projects would be in the realm of the campus environment."

"I'm trying to make academic learning relevant to experience, but not at the expense of notoriety," he explained.

Stanfield pointed out that the society harbors many who exhibit deviate behavior.

"My concern is to have the students realize how people see themselves when put into the role of a deviate. They must discover why rules exist and find out just what holds society together. I hope I can show them some of the ways to overcome the problems presented in the course," he said.

EVEN the professor entered in the experiments to demonstrate deviate behavior. He came into class and silently sat down in a student's seat.

"The students exhibited nervousness, uncertainty and then laughter. However they soon tried to explain my action as a deviate. They entered into the spirit of the course," he said.

"It's a short-cut way to Black Like Me, the story of white reporter John Griffin who tinted his skin black and traveled through the South. Obviously, the students can not experience the behavior in the same depth but it is now a small thing for some to wear a beard for a week," Stanfield noted.

As the exercise is now in its third year, Stanfield said he feels the problem is beginning to lose some of its potency.

"Deviant behavior appears less deviant now," he explained. "This is nothing new," he said, "it has been used on other campuses. I'm trying to dream up an alternative project."

At any rate, the papers are due tomorrow and will be graded on originality, perceptiveness and relation to other problems of social behavior.

Some Sparkling Spotlights Showing Skiing Situation

by TOM DONOVAN
Feature Editor

For those students who don't have to study, the Christmas vacation period is going to be spent either basking under the Bermuda sun or skiing down the Northern slopes.

There isn't much to say to you Bermuda-bounds, except "Bon Voyage".

Now to those slopes.

New Hampshire has reported that there are three new ski areas this year which look promising and should help accommodate the holiday deluge of skiers.

They are: Copple Crown at Brookfield, Mt. Rowe at Gilford, and Spruce Mt. located at Jackson, N.H.

Serious skiers who will be spending their whole vacation on the skids can find out more about the many New Hampshire areas in two publications available on a first-come first-served basis from the state of New Hampshire.

Just write to the Ski Editor, Division of Economic Development, State House Annex, Concord 03301, N.H.

The names of the two booklets are Winter Holidays and the Winter Guide.

Swinging into Vermont we find a host of slopes open, mostly with good to excellent conditions. Among the most well-known are: Jay Peak in North Troy with three inches of new snow; Killington which boasts an 11-17 inch base with new snow; and Mt. Mansfield in Stowe, with a new, more softly banked Nose Dive Trail, is happy with two-four inches of new powder on a solid base.

Moving on to Fayston, Vt., we find Glen Ellen with good to excellent conditions on a 15-34 inch base with new snow; Madonna Mt. in Jeffersonville has two-four inches of powder on an 18 inch base; and Sugarbush at Warren has new powder on a 21-32 inch base.

Rutland fans will find Piko Peak more than adequate with three-four inches of new snow on a solid base.

Students spending the vacation on campus might have good skiing at Mt. Tom this weekend if the weather turns colder pretty fast.

Right now, Mt. Tom reports that they have no snow presently but that the snow machines are ready and waiting for the first hint of colder weather.

Due to the ever-changing New England weather, conditions may change overnight and the ski areas know this.

Therefore, to keep people informed with up-to-date ski reports on virtually all N.E. ski areas, various information services have sprung up.

All a person has to do is call the telephone number in his area and he will get all the latest information on his favorite ski area.

The following numbers are open 24 hours a day, the first three are even pre-recorded:

Dormitory Changes Bring Varied Campus Reaction

by RICHARD DANCA,
Day Editor

Reaction has been mixed concerning the proposed residence hall changes made public in Monday's Collegian by Dean of Students William F. Field. Home-mothers of mens dorms seemed not as violently opposed to the idea, as many women's house-mothers were.

Student reaction ranged from registration to excitement. Many women students expressed a desire to move to more centrally located Hills House, but some men and women said they were reluctant to have to break up their dorms.

Director of Housing, John C. Welles said "we have not yet had anybody making violent comment against it."

Under the proposal, which Welles emphasized is "still just a proposal" residence would change in 15 dorms. Most of the changes will put into predominantly women's areas on campus and will move women to what are now men's dorms and would encourage a shift of students to the new Southwest tower dorms.

Also, Stockbridge students will abandon their dorms in the County Circle area to move to Baker and Greenough Houses, and Brooks would become an experimental all-senior women's dorm.

Mrs. Edith L. Robinson, house-mother of Greenough said "this was partly anticipated" but the residents "were hoping for renovations in the basement" which was a cafeteria in the past.

Mrs. Robinson said there is "quite a bit of dorm spirit" in Greenough, and as far as she knows the residents "want to stay together as a group."

Baker's housemother, Mrs. Lillian Hunter said "I've been expecting it for about six months" but "some of the fellows are awfully upset after having the house fixed up."

Baker and Greenough will be Stockbridge dorms next year.

Mrs. Elsie Johnson, of Johnson House said she would not comment yet "since it is only a proposal."

Two other housemothers, Mrs. Marion Cummings of Lewis and Mrs. Marjorie Clough of Leach also refused to comment.

Crabtree's housemother Mrs. Ann Silva said "I think the University is being very fair, they're nice enough to let us know soon enough" for students to make their plans.

She also said she thinks the shifting around is an experiment, since "we're an experiment too". She and her husband live in Crabtree, although she is head of residence.

This is her first year as a housemother, and she said she and her dorm residents "are open to suggestions". The dorm will host Dean of Women Helen Curtis this week to discuss the proposal.

Mr. Raymond P. Yelle, head of residence at Berkshire said all the Stockbridge students are "looking forward to the change."

He also said he thinks it is a good idea to keep the Stockbridge students together.

Transferral of Hills House to a women's dorm came as "no great surprise" said Mrs. Gladys Williams of Hills South.

Mrs. Grace Glass of Hills North said "we've all been prepared for it for two or three years." Neither housemother knew if plans were being made for residents to move as a group.

Mr. Welles of Housing said that the plans for dorm shifting were made "after a three-year study and talks with students and staff."

He said "I think it's a good proposal, but if students don't like it so much so that it upsets their stay on campus we would probably change it."

The proposal "will be definite, I would suppose, soon after the beginning of the second semes-

Campus Mail

Volume Is Staggering

By CAROL ARCIFA

Who keeps track of the more than $900,000 in movable property at the University? Who sends out the grade post cards many request after finals?

These two unconnected duties fall under the jurisdiction of Fred Utley, supervisor of property and mail, his four employees, including junior Tom Cadigan.

Last year, campus mail handled 435,000 pieces of inter-office mail, servicing 46 buildings representing 115 departments. Each building receives two collections daily: Goodell library and Machmer Hall, three; South College, four.

ABOUT 300 LETTERS with incomplete University addresses are received and readdressed daily. Migration of students on and off campus increases the problem of keeping track of students' addresses.

From March 1, 1964, to June

30, 1965, the office also handled 68,632 or about 850 pieces per day of U.S. Mail.

Second-class publications; catalogues for graduates and undergraduates, short courses, summer sessions, and others came to 47,127 pieces, according to Utley's records.

Daily record keeping and monthly billing for 35 accounts were effected.

U.S. OUTGOING MAIL requiring postage came to 864,457 pieces from July 1, 1964, to June 30, 1965.

Lunar Craters Explained

By PAMELA METAXAS,
Staff Reporter

The formation of craters on the moon was one of the high points in a speech last Wednesday night by Dr. Eugene Shoemaker, chief, Branch of Astrogeology, U.S. Geological Survey, in Flagstaff, Ariz. He delivered the speech entitled "Geological Processes on the Moon" in Morrill Auditorium.

Illustrating his talk with slides, Dr. Shoemaker pointed out that the "impact of interplanetary objects has been known for some time." This included both the earth and the moon. He said that the streaks of light sometimes visible in the sky are meteors falling within the earth's atmosphere at a high velocity. Meteors and other fast-falling objects cause the formation of craters he added. One of the best known craters is the meteor crater of Arizona. Craters may also be formed by "shallow subsurface bursts of chemical and nuclear explosions." Dr. Shoemaker remarked.

He divided lunar craters into primary and secondary—the former being much larger than the latter. "Typical features in large impact and large lunar craters are raised rims, lobes projecting outward and the roughness of the surface," he added. Such lunar crater formations cause degrading of high points and filling in of low points and a "general leveling" of the lunar surface.

Dr. Shoemaker believes that lunar crater formations is one of the most important geological processes operating on the moon although "there is very clear evidence of other geological processes." Several of these processes such as the formation of natural glasses and volcanic action correspond to processes presently operating on the earth, he concluded.

Apply Now!*Placement Seeks SeniorsBy PAMELA METAXAS,
Staff Reporter

Senior male students on campus are not registered for placement and are not applying for interviews according to Robert J. Morrissey, Director of Placement and Financial Aid Services at the University.

"It is to their advantage to be registered with us and to have interviews with us," he said during a Collegian interview.

He added that he believes there has been such a decrease in placement registering for three reasons:

- Graduate school
- The draft
- ROTC

Morrissey pointed out that all senior men should visit the placement office regardless of their after graduation plans. For the student contemplating graduate school, it is vital that they build up a dossier in the placement office that is good for ten years. In this way, he said, prospective employers may obtain this information (references, interviews and evaluations) long after the student has graduated. If a student has not registered, all he has for a record is a cumulative grade index.

He also said that draftees may work for 3 or 4 months with the company of their choice before they enter the service. When they return they will have a job waiting for them.

"ROTC students definitely should register with us," he added. If they register now with the Placement Office they may either work for 3 or 4 months before entering the service or they may accumulate a file that will aid them when they fulfill their military commitments, he commented.

He remarked "Vietnam is making more young men conscious of the draft and more believe the draft will be stepped up, but they should not let the potential of being called into the draft interfere with everyday living and expectations."

He was quick to point out that male seniors should visit the office early in the year. "We cannot get enthused over seniors who visit us late in the year anxiously seeking employment when they have never been near us before to register."

SEASON'S GREETINGS*Collegian Technical Advisor Publishes 2 Training Manuals

A practical program to help small daily newspapers train beginning reporters on the job has been developed by a journalism faculty member at the University of Massachusetts.

The program combines plant and beat tours, briefings, sample assignments, readings and other elements in a flexible schedule designed for dailies that have no formal training programs of their own.

It is based on the practical experience of Alvin F. Oickle, UMass journalism lecturer and Collegian technical advisor, who is also assistant managing editor of the Recorder Gazette, 13,500-circulation evening paper in Greenfield, Mass.

THE UMASS program is set forth in two training manuals written by Oickle—one for the training supervisor and a parallel manual for the trainee.

The basic course blueprinted by the manuals is 40 hours. It can be implemented in the first week of employment or spread over two weeks. It is also designed as a core course, from which a continuing training program can be built.

"The purpose of the training program is not to make every employee an expert in every field," according to Oickle. "Rather it is to give every employee a knowledge of general functions so he can accurately and ably represent his newspaper to the public."

The program is a middle approach, Oickle states, between the lengthy formal programs of big newspaper organizations and the "learn on the job" approach of most smaller papers.

"THE ONE-WEEK and two-week core programs are offered because most newspapers can't afford to have a news employee in training for a longer period," according to the UMass faculty member. "On the other hand, no newspaper, no matter how small or hard-pressed, can afford to send into the field a person who has virtually no knowledge of the organization he will represent."

Editorial room orientation has a major part in the training program. Scheduled are rewrite duties, beat tours with experienced staffers, and briefings on style rules, policies, and the keeping of date books, telephone lists, and other basic tools of the newsman's profession.

Also scheduled are orientation visits in the newspaper advertising and circulation departments, the business office and in the composing, stereotype and press rooms. A minimum of two hours in each department is recommended and the schedule usually calls for an exhaustive briefing by the department head, tour of facilities, and observation of work in progress.

THIS HEAVY stress on all-departments orientation is a feature of the UMass program, according to its author, because a staff member on a small daily often goes far beyond the scope of his reportorial duties in representing his paper. The staffer is often called on to explain late deliveries, mistakes in ads or misprint bills, Oickle explained, and can do it more constructively if he knows what's going on.

According to Dr. Arthur Musgrave, chairman and professor of journalistic studies at the University, the training program is offered with the expectation that editors who use it will suggest revisions.

"The hope is that through a team effort of editors concerned with training new practitioners, a revised edition of these manuals will be forthcoming to better serve the cause of education for journalism as a profession," Dr. Musgrave said.

The program has been developed in connection with the University's New England Newspaper Fellowship graduate program. In cooperation with the New England Society of Newspaper Editors, the University each year provides a program of readings, lectures, weekly seminars and summer study for the professional enrichment of selected journalists.

Copies of the manuals can be ordered through the University of Massachusetts Bookstore, Student Union, Amherst, Mass.

Kappa Delta Pi Initiates Twenty

The Colonial Lounge was the setting for the second induction of initiates into the University's Kappa Mu chapter of the National Honor Society in Education Kappa Delta Pi.

Organized for the first time on campus last year, under the sponsorship of Dr. Fiorino of the Education Dept., Kappa Delta Pi joins the growing ranks of honor societies on campus. The purpose of Kappa Delta Pi is to encourage high professional, intellectual and personal standards and to recognize outstanding contributions to education.

It also endeavors to maintain a high degree of professional fellowship growth by honoring achievement in educational work.

Twenty new initiates were taken into the society Dec. 2, from among graduate students and the junior and senior classes of elementary education majors.

Objections To Elimination Of Grades

By KATHRYN SEDERBERG
The Collegiate Press Service
(Third in three articles)

If grades are generally acknowledged to be an inadequate measure of a student's achievement, especially in areas of creativity and initiative; if they lead to a distortion of the educational process, replacing intellectual curiosity with memory - cramming and luck; if their over-emphasis leads to psychological and sometimes actual illness—then why do not more colleges and universities eliminate or modify their grading systems in favor of a broader form of evaluation?

Two objections persist when discussing the possible elimination of grades:

• A thorough verbal evaluation, such as that given at Bennington and Sarah Lawrence is time-consuming and expensive. It is feasible at these two colleges because of the small enrollments and facilities which are willing to spend the necessary time. As the size of the college increases, this form of evaluation would become more and more impracticable.

• Graduate schools tend to insist on the need for grades in determining admission, although some admit that they could reluctantly learn to do without them. Many of these same graduate schools no longer issue grades once the student is admitted. Most graduate schools learned to compensate for the variations in computing grades among various colleges, but they quake in consternation at the thought of interpreting a multitude of vague evaluations.

A college which changes to a verbal evaluation instead of the conventional grades runs the very risk that its students may be discriminated against in the competition for graduate school and other events, whether such discrimination be intentional or unintentional.

Lawrence W. Hanlon, M.D., director of admissions, Cornell Univ. Medical Col., has said: "In my experience with some of these unusual methods of reporting academic standing, there is frequently so much uncertainty about a student's academic ability that he simply can't be considered for admission."

The Univ. of Minnesota's Prof. Louis T. Safer who conducted a recent grading experiment in the University's general college, reports encountering a similar difficulty. General College has tried experimenting with many types of grading systems over the years, Safer said, but always it runs into the problem of interpreting the results within the university framework. How, for instance, are various unusual evaluations to be interpreted in determining whether a student has met the requirements for graduation or for transferring to another college?

Regarding changes in the grading system, the Conference on College Grading systems noted: "Conversations are still going on; inquiries are still being received. Much detailed information is in order; research is sorely needed. Some colleges, it is hoped will experiment. Grades will not soon be abandoned—but their domination is challenged."

While encouraging further experimentation, two more immediate steps can be taken to modify the damaging effects of an obsession with grades:

1) Grades should be de-emphasized as an end in themselves. They must be recognized as only one measure of a student's achievement, a measure which by itself cannot be the absolute criterion of rewards and privileges, whether academic or otherwise.

2) Whenever possible, the cryptic letter grade should be supplemented with a further evaluation of the student's strengths and weaknesses, to offer a more complete picture of his intellectual growth.

UM Staff Members Honored

Amherst, Mass.—Epsilon Sigma Phi awards for outstanding service in extension work have been given to seven Massachusetts men and women.

Epsilon Sigma Phi is a national extension honorary society. The awards were made at a state extension conference last week at the University.

Among the UMass personnel honored were: Robert M. Grover, professor of veterinary and animal science and extension poultry specialist, was cited for excellence in the development of programs for state poultry raisers.

Dr. Douglas N. Stern, professor of veterinary and animal science and extension veterinarian, was cited for work with animal diseases.

Miss Winifred Eastwood, head of the UMass extension division of home economics, was honored for educational work that has aided the disadvantaged, handicapped and elderly.

Everett B. Hatch, Franklin County extension agent in 4-H and youth work, was cited for his work in this area, particularly in the development of conservation programs.

UMass Prof Frisco Bound To Speak

An expected 3500 historians will flock to San Francisco for the 80th annual conference of the American Historical Association being held December 28-29-30 with headquarters at the Hilton Hotel. The venerable society is meeting on the West Coast for the first time since 1915.

The Association, whose members are interested in historical studies, whether professionally or otherwise, is to be joined by 26 smaller groups meeting jointly with it during the three-day conclave. Conferences will be held at the Saint Francis and Sir Francis Drake Hotels as well as at the Hilton.

Professor Howard H. Quint of the University of Massachusetts will provide comments on "Russian Views of American Society in the 20th Century" for a session the American Studies Association is holding at the American Historical Association meeting in San Francisco. The seminar will be at 9:30 a.m. Wednesday, Dec. 29, at the Hilton Hotel.

Intramural Report

by DAVE JARNES

In an early north league showdown the Baker Barracudas nipped the Baker Bruins 36-35 in a hard-fought defensive contest in which the Barracudas' overall balance proved to be the deciding factor.

The Webster Rams kept pace with the Barracudas by virtue of a strong finish to cruise to a 50-31 triumph over the Greenough Garfields.

The Chadbourne Maroons destroyed the Grants 85-32 as Martines with 21 points led four double figure scorers. Bob Keating's 18 points were high for the Grants. In a battle of two winless teams the Broncos defeated the Eagles 54-33.

BKP's overall balance paved the way for a 59-51 victory over a good ASP club, which was led by Bill Cannata's 19 points. Al Sagesse pumped in 20 points to lead SPE to a 62-42 decision over still winless SAM.

In other fraternity games, John Boyle's 21 points enabled KS to repulse a strong effort by TKE in winning 48-40 while AEP beat ATG 50-40, and TC edged TEP 32-29.

In independent action the Untouchables really turned it on by bombing the helpless capitalists 98-30. Al Garsy with 16 points paced 5 double figure scorers. Paul Ruel and Dave Jekanowski combined for 38 points in leading the Crusaders to a win over the Crusaders. Rounding out this week's basketball the Moody Blues murdered the Phantoms 65-30, the Courtesy Taxits upended the College St. A.C. 53-41, the Midgets beat the Five Fries 36-24 and the Hot Rod Raiders topped pled the Leftovers 83-20.

In handball Babiec defeated Beauvais 21-16, 21-15, Duggan won the B division of the dorms by beating Block 21-9, 21-9, and Oliver, who appears to be the best player in the tournament defeated Dr. Ricci to reach the finals of the independent division.

MERMEN LOSE TO WESLEYAN

The UMass Mermen lost to Wesleyan on Tuesday, 59-36. The one-sided meet was brightened only by the efforts of the team's choicest, co-captain Dick Daniels, Dick Lennon and Ken Nowak.

Dick Daniels decisively continued his winning streak in the 500 yd. freestyle with a time of 5:28.6. This is Dick's fastest time of the season, and he should get faster in the coming meets. He also swam second in the 200 yd. Freestyle earlier in the day.

Dick Lennon claimed his third University record in as many meets, when he smashed his own former mark in the 200 yd. Individual Medley with a time of 2:16.2. On the previous morning, Dick collapsed and received a bad face wound. Coach Rogers was undecided on whether or not to let Dick swim with the injury. His decision was a good one. Dick later took second in the 200 yd. Breaststroke, followed lowed closely by teammate Ted Severn, who took third.

Sophomore Ken Nowak set a new school time record for the 50 yd. Freestyle in 23.0. This is his first Varsity record, and judging from the way Ken swam, more will soon follow.

A difference of three points forced Tony Roubound to take second place in the diving. Tony is showing consistent improvement in his event. Chip Wyser, swimming against the best of Wesleyan, could take only a third in the 100 yd. Freestyle. Steve Levy placed third in the 200 yd. Butterfly, and Al Levine swam third in the 500 yd. Freestyle.

The 400 yd. Freestyle Relay took first, and almost a record, as they outswam, man for man, the Wesleyan team. The relay was comprised of Wyser, Nowak, Lovitch, and Daniels. On Friday, the team travels to So. Conn. in possibly their toughest contest of the season.

Skiers Prep for Season

The University of Massachusetts ski team began its fifth consecutive racing season under coach William P. MacConnell after choosing 11 racers out of a field of 22 candidates.

The candidates conditioned for this season's contests by running five miles per day and participating in weekend work trips at a local ski area. The work trips consisted of cutting and clearing ski trails at Thunder Mountain.

Returning from last year's varsity squad are co-captains Don Piezza, '66 along with Tom Pittendreich '67 and John Hurd '67, who suffered a broken arm just as last season began. From the junior varsity this year is Brian Hendricks along with Hanno Fontaine. Adding to the squad's depth are Fred Foster and Mike Zanolli.

In order to assure experienced racers for the future years, three ineligible men, Glen Langley, Tom Bradley and Dick McHugh, will continue to train and ski with the varsity.

This year's schedule includes twelve meets. The team opens against A.I.C. on January 29. Other opponents include Boston College, Northeastern, Tufts, Princeton, Brown and Amherst.

Redmen Rip Crusaders, 92-74

by DAVE JARNES

Johnny Orr's GO-GO kids ran up their highest point total of the season in downing the Crusaders from Holy Cross 92-74. After rolling up a comfortable 56-42 halftime bulge behind the fantastic scoring of Jim Babyak and Clarence Hill, the Redmen saw their lead dwindle to just three points in the second half, but were able to regain their composure and walk away with their fourth win in five starts this year.

Billy Tindall and Frank Stewart controlled the backboards in the first half as UMass was able to fast break to perfection while Hill and Babyak were red-hot from the floor. As a team, UMass shot a spectacular 62% in the first half while Babyak and Hill combined 18 shots in 25 attempts. Jim had 21 points at intermission while Clarence tied his own record with 24. Hill was able to take full advantage of the Crusaders' man for man defense by scoring on numerous one on one situations while Babyak was pumping in his patented jump shot along with some drives.

Keith Hochstein was the sole bright spot for the Cross as he showed plenty of aggressiveness in finishing the game with 15 points while gathering in 18 rebounds.

For the first nine minutes of the second half the Redmen turned ice-cold. After Babyak opened the half with a pop to put UMass in front by 16, the Crusaders began to eat up the lead. Holy Cross put on a half court zone press which upset the Redmen and forced them into numerous errors. With 11:18 left in the game the Crusaders had the lead down to 67-64 and with Frank Stewart in foul trouble on the bench things were getting tense. Mike Meola then hit a long bomb to start a string of 19 straight points for UMass as they zoomed to an insurmountable 86-64 lead with 2:46 left. During this streak the tight Redmen defense forced the Crusaders to come apart at the seams and go scoreless for an unheard of 8 minutes and 32 seconds. John Lisack, who has yet to miss a foul shot this year, came off the bench in a pressure situation to hit four free throws, stretched the Redmen lead from a precarious 69-64 to a more comfortable 73-64.

With two minutes left in the game, and UMass safely in front, Clarence Hill thrilled the crowd with a dribbling exhibition, Globetrotter style. Clarence finished with 35 points and tied Pete Bernard's record of 15 field goals in one game. Jim Babyak, who has been a pleasant surprise for Coach Johnny Orr this season, cooled off in the second half but still wound up with 25 points. Rapidly improving sophomore Billy Tindall scored 10 points and picked off 14 rebounds.

Sporting a 4-1 record, the Redmen now head into the Christmas tournament at VPI with optimism. Certainly this year's basketball team has made believers out of those who predicted a dismal season. With a hustling team that is as exciting as UMass is, it seems a shame that there were only 2200 fans at the Holy Cross game.

SKY HIGH — Redman Clarence Hill is seen here in a familiar pose, going up for his patented jump shot against Holy Cross.

Little Redmen Bow to HC Frosh

by TOM FITZGERALD

A strong second half spelled victory for Holy Cross' freshmen Crusaders over the UMass Frosh at the Cage Tuesday night, but the contest was much closer than the 94-80 final score would indicate.

The superior height of the invaders began to take its toll after the halftime break, which ended with UMass up by one point, 40-39. The Crusaders jumped off to a quick lead on a jump shot by forward Gerry Foley, and although the Redmen knotted the count at 63-all on Mike Gemel's basket, Holy Cross gradually took command.

Foley, 6'9" Ron Texeira, and 6'7" Ed Siudut provided the rebounding strength and really took over under the boards when UMass big man Peter Gayeska fouled out with 5:33 left. Holy Cross led by only 74-71 at Gayeska's departure, but then ran off seven quick points and were never headed.

The first ten minutes of the tilt belonged to UMass. The squad put on its best offensive performance of the young season and led at one point by 13. Joe DiSarcina and Ron Nowakowski spearheaded this drive with some dead-eye shooting. UMass led at the 10-minute mark, 29-20, but Holy Cross wore away at this lead gradually and came to within one point when Jim Moore sunk a long bomb at the halftime buzzer.

Nowakowski paced the UMass attack with 20 markers, followed closely by Gemel and DiSarcina with 19 apiece. Foley, with 25 points, Texeira, with 21, and Siudut, also with 21, were the pace-setters for the Cross. The defeat evened the Frosh's record at 2-2.

Sportsmen to Be Honored with Gifts

by MIKE GOULD

When last I journeyed to the northernmost extremity of the earth, I was lucky enough to get a guided tour of Santa's giftshop. I was overwhelmed by the vast assortment of Christmas presents brought before my eyes. Contrary to popular belief, Santa's kindness was extended not only to children, but also to deserving adults. In addition to the multitude of toys for the kids, there were stacks upon stacks of gifts for adults who had gained the favor of the ageless Mr. Clause. I had not realized the great enthusiasm which Santa had generated for athletics until I beheld the array of gifts which the old boy was ready to distribute to his beloved sportsmen from down South. I was amazed at the appropriateness of Santa's choices. Ignoring the "Do not open until Christmas" signs, my curiosity forced me to open those gifts intended for some of my favorite sportsmen and yours. Before I was detected by a suspicious elf, I was able to uncover a few most appropriate Christmas gifts:

For Vic Fusia—Early season pep pills for his perennial slow starters.

For Don Shula — An unbreakable doll named "Quarterback."

For the second place finisher in the NFL's Eastern Division—Ambulance service during the playoff bowl in Miami.

For Allie Sherman — A Gogolack.

For Bob Santucci — Recognition and appreciation.

For Frank Stewart and Billy Tindall—Six inches to share.

For Arther Ashe—A safe escape from Australia.

Lederle Family

Plans Quiet Holiday

by KAREN MORIN

Christmas at the home of the University president will be play and work.

"Presidents don't really do anything that's different on Christmas," commented John W. Lederle, president of the University of Massachusetts.

A son who is a senior in high school, and a daughter who teaches in Connecticut, will be home for the holidays. Many of the President and Mrs. Lederle's relatives are in Michigan, so they expect little company unless the children bring friends home.

The Lederle's do nothing special on Christmas Eve. Occasionally, groups of caroling faculty or students will stop by to entertain them. One year a group of faculty decorated their tree.

On Christmas Day, the Lederles rise at a "normal" hour. "The children used to get us out of bed at 1 o'clock in the morning but they're a little old for that now," Mrs. Lederle insists that the family have breakfast first. After breakfast, begins a long ritual of present opening. The youngest, their son, passes out the presents one at a time. President

Lederle recalls cries of "Hurry up and open your present so we can get at ours!"

In the afternoon, the president spends a few hours at his office. "New Year's Day is my day of relaxation. That's when all the football games are on," he comments.

President Lederle sees Christmas as a time of little disruption when work can be done more effectively. Students start returning soon after Christmas to catch up on their studies in the library so the campus is never completely deserted. "The decorated trees around the Union look lovely and the campus is beautiful" during the holidays, the President said. But there is still the routine to be adhered to.

The President believes that operation of the University should be carried on 12 months of the year. His reprimand two years ago resulted in service areas such as the Student Union and the dining commons staying open during the vacations. President Lederle said that the students who find it necessary to remain at the University during vacations should have access to certain facilities.

What would be his best Christmas present? Typically the administrator, he said it would be presented by the state legislators if they decided to pass the new revenue bill designed to help the University financially.

Foreign Students

Christmas To Those Who Stay

by JEANNE BROOKS

Christmas is not all candy canes and carols when you're thousands of miles from home.

This is the holiday story of the University's 270 foreign students. For most of them vacation will mean something besides packing up and going home.

The majority of the students will pass the holidays with friends across the country. Some will be going home, while others plan to use the time off for work and study in Amherst.

Chung Ja Lee, a graduate student in food and nutrition will spend her first American Christmas "working in the lab, and perhaps doing some studying, too."

For Chung Ja Lee and the others who will spend Christmas on campus, two University dorms will be open for housing. The Student Union and other University facilities will be open on vacation schedules for rest and relaxation.

Commented one student, a veteran of two UMass Christmases, "It is really rather nice here at Christmas, and very quiet."

Of the foreign students who do have vacation plans, Canadian Paul White is one of the more fortunate.

"I'm going home," said the Stockbridge freshman, "to my parents' chalet in Northern Ontario."

About 10 students expressed such plans as Paul's. They were mostly from Canada and, explained one, "home is closer for me than your own west coast."

A Christmas "with friends" is how most UMass foreign students will enjoy the holidays. The festivities will range from transplanted versions of native celebrations to a few American Christmases.

Ken-pin Chang will visit with friends in New Jersey. He finds his previous American Christmas to have been "similar to Christmas at home, in Hong Kong; quite reasonable and enjoyable."

Many of the students will be travelling, seeing more of the country and particularly the East Coast. Boston and New York are prime visiting spots on several Christmas agendas.

A cross country flight and Mexican holiday are planned by Xavier Moscoso, a Stockbridge freshman from Ecuador. "Every country, every place is different," he explained. "I want to see all that I can."

UMass foreign students generally find American Christmas exciting and enjoyable. Those who will celebrate their first holiday here are looking forward to it with some anticipation.

"It should be very nice," said Chung Ja Lee, who is from Korea. "All the campus lights look so lovely already, I'm sure it will be beautiful."

Christmas brings a common feeling to all students, whether home or half a world away. "Here, even old people have fun," said Moscoso, "just like little kids. Everybody has a nice Christmas."

CHRISTMAS—PEACE TO ALL

Jewish Community Expresses Views

On Christmas

by CAROL ARCIFA

"Keep Christ in Christmas," one Jewish girl exclaimed! What could she mean by this seemingly unorthodox statement for a Jew to express? The answer is found in comments by students on campus.

"To me Christ is a symbol of peace and brotherly love. That's what we all want, isn't it? Although the spiritual aspect of Christmas is lacking significance for me, I also partake in that feeling the atmosphere of Christmas generates to all," a Jewish girl explained.

Another said, "I, as a non-Christian, also regret the commercialization of Christmas. In the rush of last minute gift-buying, shoppers are sometimes too busy to realize the beauty of this season in which people are generally more happy, more friendly, and more generous."

"Warm Feeling"

"I try never to miss a Christmas midnight mass," a Jewish girl interrupted. "I respect the religious devotion many Christians display during the Christmas season, and it gives me a good, warm feeling to be in the midst of such devotion at a Christmas Mass."

Another continued, "I was going to put a big Christmas tree up in my room last year, until I was reminded that it was against dormitory fire regulations. I love the Christmas season—the bright lights, the decorations, the singing, and the laughing. There's a great feeling of togetherness that you just can't describe."

"Lighthearted Feeling"

A Jewish girl summed up the feeling, "The warm glow of the Christmas atmosphere is so contagious that it necessarily fills me with a light-hearted spirit of excitement."

When asked if he would be offended if he received a religious Christmas card, a Jewish boy replied, "Although I'd rather receive a card that reads 'Season's greetings,' I don't think I'd really mind getting a religious card. After all, it's the thought behind the card that counts."

His friends agreed, one adding, "We send cards to our Christian friends during a season significant for them, and they reciprocate by sending us Chanukah cards. Chanukah always closely follows or precedes Christmas day. This helps to bring Jews and Christians together in a feeling of religious devotion."

"Fine With Me"

"I exchange gifts with my Jewish friends on Chanukah, and I exchange gifts with my Christian friends on Christmas day," one Jewish boy said. "If the dorms want to make us exchange Christmas gifts, it's fine with me."

A Jewish brother at Sigma Alpha Mu exclaimed, "I love Christmas decorations. I even enjoy looking at Nativity scenes, although they have no religious significance for me. They are so pretty, you just can't object to them."

His friend said, "You really can't even object to using the taxpayer's money for Christmas decorations and Nativity scenes. After all, Christians are in the majority. We Jews are outnumbered, and we have to face it. Besides, many Jewish people love the Christmas season, and would object to doing away with all the festive decorations."

In other words, "Merry Christmas and Happy Chanukah!"

Jingle Bells Revisited

by VEDA NERONI
(SUNG TO "JINGLE BELLS")

Dashing thru the snow    On our way to class, down the hill we go,    Slide right by UMass; Chapel bells do ring,    Cut the class, I might, 'cause
it's more fun to play and sing A drinking song tonight!
Jingle bottles! Jingle bottles! Pass another beer!
Oh, what fun it is to drink at the Drake every year!

A day or two ago    I thought I'd take a ride, And soon Miss Fanny Hill    Was seated by my side; The car ran out of gas,    Way out on Eastman Lane, He reached out and made a pass, But it was all in vain.
Jingle bottles! Jingle bottles! Pass another beer!
Oh, what fun it is to drink at the Drake every year!

Breathless UMies

Baubles, Bangles and Beer

by ANGELA CARUSO

Preparations were made weeks ago for the onslaught of downtown Amherst stores by hundreds of breathless UMies in search of that last minute gift.

For instance, Ann August last year had all its jewelry stock sold out before the Christmas holidays. Evelyn Strange, manager, considers this final week before vacation the busiest. Gifts of lingerie, sweaters and skirts for parents and roommates are the most popular with few exchanges in their aftermath. Undergraduates are, by far, the heaviest contributors to the estimated 25 per cent increase in sales during the pre-Christmas season.

The Specialty Shop, next door, also logs a 25 per cent sales increase during the final weeks before Christmas, according to Donald Madsen, the proprietor. "At least half of this estimate consists of the UMass undergraduates, buying within the $2-$10 price range," he said.

Favorite items of the students are costume jewelry and small knick-knacks. "Contemporary card sales note the greatest increase during this season," said Madsen. Married students also make up a considerable quota of the sales increase in the higher priced articles, such as household items.

Baucom's Book Store has a 10 per cent leap in sales during the onslaught. Mr. Baucom particularly noted great increases in the sales of such "gift" books as, Kahlil Gibran's The Prophet, and the series of Langland books.

The College Drug Store notes an increase only in the cosmetic trade, while Augie's Tobacco Shop says it finds no difference in the sales rate at all. On the other hand, Louis' Food Store has a decrease in food sales in this week before vacation.

Most affected by the holiday migration is the Rathskeller Tavern, situated in the Village Inn. The Rathskeller notes such a drop in business during the holidays, according to Brad Parker, owner, that it closes for that period and transfers its sellable contents to the Open Hearth, upstairs.

"This decrease," he added, "is balanced by the increase in sales in the periods immediately before and after Christmas."

$ Weeping Wedded Workers

by ROBERT BEAUDREAULT

Most students will absorb some Xmas spirit through the activities taking place on campus in preparation for the holidays. This spirit is more than the traditional folksy type. It is a UMass Xmass spirit.

Some UMass students will not enjoy these activities. The "special 69's"—the swing shift—are missing the Christmas dances, the open houses, the secret Santas, the Chanuka party, the trim-a-limb, the carol sing and the Christmas Chorale Concert.

For the most part these students have so much to do at home that they "don't really miss these activities", one student reported. Others who live near enough to UMass can take part and they feel that "these functions add much to the holiday because they are run by students and for the students," as a freshman girl stated.

Upperclassmen who missed these activities in their freshman year stated that they "never really knew what they were missing and didn't feel too badly about it, but now they find the whole feeling something that they would hate to have to miss for anything but a pretty good reason."

"If only the students who are here realized how much fun all these things can add to XMASS," said one student, "they'd have a tremendous time getting ready for XMASS at home. They'd also have a lot to talk about."

To most readers the Christmas season means gifts, vacation, minimal study, and a maximum of fun. But to some it means free time from school to earn needed money.

The married students must devote time away from the books to the duty of supporting themselves and their young families. This is especially true during the Christmas season when study is at a minimum. While the single students are home generally relaxing from the tension of the semester, the majority of the marrieds will spend the holidays in their own on-campus or local apartments, working to pay for the added expenses which Christmas entails.

However, things are far from bleak for these students. While they are not materially wealthy, they are rich with the fact that they are a family during such a joyous season. And the faces of the children of these students on Christmas morning will make all the pressure and work of a student-family seem negligible.

While students with responsibilities only to themselves vacation in relative leisure, the married students must remember their responsibilities towards their mates and children, and spend their vacation time "bringing home the bacon."

For Whom The Bell Tolls... Vacation...

by WILLIAM TROUPE

With the sound of the bell that marks the end of a student's last class before Christmas vacation, the student will be on his way to do the things he has planned so long.

University students have many different plans for their vacations. The holiday, which runs from Dec. 18 to Jan. 2, will be spent as close to campus as the Hatch by some who are working and as far away as Florida by others having a carefree time.

Many students plan to work most of the vacation to earn money to carry them through the semester and to finance Christmas shopping. Local post offices and department stores will provide employment for many. Some students plan to work for a different reason. As one student commented, "I plan to lock myself in my room and catch up on all the work for the semester."

On the other hand, a large portion of the students plan to spend their vacations having fun. It will be kind of a last big fling before finals.

Some students plan to travel north to take advantage of the ski conditions, and others to the south to enjoy the warm weather. As one student said, "I plan to get on the plane in Boston with an overcoat on and get off in Florida wearing bermudas!"

Most students are not as lucky as that.

But no matter what their plans, most students spend the vacation at home with their families. Typical plans include parties, family get-togethers and shopping.

Santa's Been Here 1700 Years

(he must be doing something right)

by JEAN L. HAMMERSLEY

The merry, rotund little elf with snow white beard, clad in a bright red suit and cap trimmed with ermine, is a Christmas image beloved by children and adults alike. From a background of history and legend, this image has come to Americans.

Centuries ago, in the Middle Ages, times were difficult and law and order were not easy to come by. A patron saint with a reputation for good results was needed. Such a man was Saint Nicholas, known in the U.S. as Santa Claus.

Since his birth in 270 in Patara of Asia Minor, Saint Nicholas engaged in a multitude of wonder-working activities which later made him the patron of young women, sailors, schoolboys, robbers, and Russia.

Once an occasion arose which gave Saint Nicholas a chance to display his generosity. He heard that one of his neighbors, a rich merchant, had lost all his money and could not provide dowries for his three beautiful daughters. Then Bishop of Myra, he quietly dropped gold pieces down the chimney of their poverty stricken cottage at night. The gold happened to land in stockings hung up to dry. From this arose the custom of hanging stockings by the hearth on Christmas eve, as did his title of patron of marriageable young women.

But St. Nicholas' greatest fame is as a patron of children. It is said that an innkeeper had made a practice of killing young students who stopped at his inn. After cutting their bodies into little pieces, he threw them into a brine barrel to serve his guests. St. Nicholas brought back to life three little schoolboys who had encountered this fate by praying over the contents of the barrel.

These and other legends about Nicholas spread his fame rapidly in all parts of the known world after his death on Dec. 6, 341, according to most reliable historic data. By the 10th Century, hundreds of stories and legends had been gathered.

Russians coming down to Constantinople to trade heard of St. Nicholas, and he became patron saint of Russia. Many of its czars were named for him, including Nicholas II of the last ruling family.

He became patron in Greece also. His popularity there is reflected by the number of Greeks who still name their sons Nicholas.

But his fame as a miracle worker and patron of children spread mostly to Northern Europe. In Germany, word of him arrived in April, 972, when Emperor Otto II married the Greek princess Theophano.

However, not until about 100 years later, did his fame really grow, when Frederick II became ruler of the Holy Roman Empire 1194-1250. Now, in Europe and Asia on his feast day, Dec. 6, children receive presents from Saint Nick.

In Norway and Sweden he uses reindeer to get around. But because he has far to go, he stops only a minute and drops presents down the chimney.

In Germany and Poland, stockings are hung by the chimney or outside the window. But in Belgium and Holland, wooden shoes are put out for presents. Some hay is placed near them for the "big white horse" that St. Nick rides in those countries.

Sometimes Saint Nicholas travels alone. But other times he is accompanied by a helper, whose name and duties vary from one land to another. It is the helper's duty generally to locate the bad children, since Saint Nick never punishes people himself.

In Norway, Santa's helper is Kris Kringle. In Northern Germany there are two—Knecht Ruprecht, who carries gifts for good children, and Pels Nickel, who scoops up bad children and takes them away in a big black sock.

In Switzerland and Sweden, Santa is accompanied by his wife, Lucy, who helps him distribute gifts to those who deserve them.

In addition to the tradition of gift giving, the use of Christmas trees throughout Northern Europe and the U.S. is also connected with St. Nicholas.

An old Polish legend has it that in pagan times, while preaching Christian principles, St. Nicholas once pointed to the triangular pine tree and said: "Look at the way this tree rises toward the sky. In the same way your soul must rise toward the true God."

While he was speaking, lights were seen to flicker on the tree. From this legend grew the custom of lighting and decorating the Christmas tree.

It is interesting how Saint Nicholas became known as Santa Claus. Originally his name was known in Latin as Sanctus Nicolaus. In German it became Sankt Nikolaus. The Dutch used first Sint Nicolaas, then Santa Klaes. Finally, in America, it became Santa Claus.

With the Dutch Protestants, however, Santa Claus came to the United States. According to the early colonists who settled at New Amsterdam, Santa came on Dec. 6 and gave presents to the good Dutch children.

This practice continued until the British settlers changed the name of New Amsterdam to New York. They were annoyed by the Dutch custom because the British gave presents on Dec. 25, the anniversary of Christ's birth, and it was an anticlimax after Santa Claus had been a few weeks earlier.

The British changed Santa's day from Dec. 6 to Christmas Day. Today, the U.S. is one of only a few countries in the world where he comes on Christmas day.

In Britain, Santa didn't come at all for almost 300 years. After Henry VIII broke with Rome, Saint Nicholas was banned. Not until the time of Queen Victoria, did he appear again. Prince Albert brought the tradition from his native Germany. Thus Santa Claus resumed his annual visits in that country.

Now, throughout Europe, an element of confusion is arising. The children's feast day is still celebrated on Dec. 6, when St. Nicholas comes around. But on Christmas the gifts are distributed by a polly old man with a white beard. He is called Father Christmas in Britain, Pere Noel in France, and Babbo Natale in Italy. But he still appears to bear quite a resemblance to St. Nicholas, alias Santa Claus.

On Christmas Eve, this man of legend and history will slip once again down chimneys to leave gifts for all good children. Then he will drive away in his sleigh drawn by eight tiny reindeer to his home at the North Pole. Contrary to some sources, there IS a Santa Claus.

"Stranger, I am useless..."

a modern Christmas story

by GEORGE CAPACCIO

Skeptic, do not read beyond the exclamation mark! This is not a dare, but an order. Ah, you've disobeyed me. In that case, I shall force you to read my tale.

At a pre-Christmas party, last year, sober, calm and rational, I made the big decision. Every Christmas for 33 years I had waited for Santa Claus. That particular evening, I made up my mind that if St. Nick would not come to me, then . . . I sprang from the sofa, shouted a farewell to my friends and leaped out the front door.

Now the North Pole offers no easy conquest. The devilish snowflakes up there came at me like there were no tomorrow. Waves upon waves thundered to the ground, only to rise in layers of fierce legions bent on my destruction. They snapped, withdrew, then scurried about me, curling the Arctic floor. Only the image I had of Saint Nicholas' domain sustained me. But suddenly during a violent siege, the Snow God's white dust defenses and land forces retreated. A shadowy chateau posed against black skies.

My knocks brought a wizened, gaunt, drably clad old man to the door. "Saint Nicholas?" I asked, trying to hide my shock. He nodded. When I told him why I had come, he welcomed me inside. (If you think for a moment, dear skeptic, that I shall bore you with a fairy tale description of a spook house complete with cob webs and squealing doors, leave now, while you have the chance.) Last month's blackout could not compare to the airy lithograph into which I stepped.

My strange host showed me to a seat before a cold hearth. I began: "Sir, if I seem flustered, forgive me. I expected to find a story book Eden, yet I discern nothing. Why?" At length, he drawled: "Stranger, I am useless, a senile anachronism who can no longer kindle honest joy, piety and gratitude. How can I spark what isn't there? My Master is dead, and I have been serving a lifeless breath. Later I shall show you His tomb, but now let us witness His slayers." With this, Saint Nicholas became silent. Placing two bony hands on the arms of his chair, he raised himself to his feet. He clutched his cane, and stumbled to the staircase in an adjoining room.

In total darkness, we advanced step-by-step, ever so slowly. Not once did Nicholas pause or pant. He tapped his cane and shuffled his feet in cadent nuances throughout the ascent. Stopping at last, he lifted the latch on a massive wooden door. It flew open, and the winter solstice greeted us. Together we eyed the clear, icy night. For all my effort, I saw only dazzling stars and two-dimensional crests and dunes. Yet my guide saw much more.

He stiffened his back, frowned, spat, shook his pike and cursed into the darkness. Then he whirled toward me, and pointed into space: "Look there! Don't you see it?—a parade of those nocturnal creatures. Watch them slither, those fetish, vile serpents. See the one that bears false messages, and behind him the one that lurks in gaily colored paper.

And there, there, the next hideous monster, larger than all, clothed in green, flat and agile.

"Filth, I hate you! Your venom flows loose. You, foul scum, destroyed Him. Gloat! Rejoice! For now, at least, you have won." I confess I did not understand his rage, nor could I sight his demons. He snorted now and twitched violently. He seized his staff, flung it at the heavens. "Follow me," he ordered. King Lear-like in stature, gait and manner, Saint Nicholas then stalked through the thick, ebony syrup of night.

Snarling wind and swirling snow viciously opposed our intrusion. I gripped Nicholas' woolies to avoid getting lost in that bedlam. How I wanted to flee the coldness, the darkness and the demonic seducers that haunted the forsaken tundra. God, I suffered!

Numbed from agony, I failed to note our exit from the wretched place. But shortly I saw green grass and blue skies. I smelled flowers and felt the sun's warmth. I heard my guide speak for the first time since our pilgrimage began: "Stranger, I applaud your spirit. Now glory in these sights and sounds while there is yet time; greater things await us."

Saint Nicholas' assertion proved true. Soon we neared a mountain capped with a stately mausoleum. Climbing was no easy task, and with each foothold, Nicholas aged and saddened, slowly returning to his former countenance. Atop, he knelt and prayed. After several minutes of meditation, the faithful servant approached the tomb and thrust aside a massive stone door. Fascinated by this ceremony, I eagerly followed Saint Nicholas into the vault.

Despite external majesty, inside was strangely barren. A stone bench and a glimmering of light were all that I could see. The air was cool and damp, like the climate of wine cellars and catacombs, but the silence was eerie, almost insufferable. My naiveté and dread irked Saint Nicholas. He turned to me and said: "You don't understand why I have brought you here. You don't understand this shrine, and what you can't understand, you fear. Sad. Perhaps if I translate His epitaph. . .?"

Nicholas then hobbled over to a stone tablet resting at the head of the bench, and, squinting a nose apart from its inscription, he read aloud:

'You will not find me in this tomb,
Nor in church, nor on a street.
For on earth I died ages since,
And with my death,
My form, my soul were spent.
Yet there are those who say they see me,
And this is strange for I am not.
But stranger still are what they see.'

Finished, the hunched, lame creature then spoke directly to me: "Know that the Spirit is dead. Return. Tell all that I too have left them. Now leave me. Bolt the door."

Trees, Lights . . . . . But No Christ

by JACK MINE

One of the blessings of the American capitalistic system for individuals and businesses alike is free enterprise. Included with this is the right to advertise. The tell-tale signs of the growing commercialism of an otherwise religious holiday are all too evident to the naked eye. Garish store displays and exotic, surrealistic house decorations inform the public that it's Christmas time.

It is quite evident that the day after Thanksgiving is the unofficial opening of the Christmas hunting season. The well-trained buyer must know how to satisfy every person on his Christmas list so that no one will be disappointed. Nothing is more traumatic than to have a recipient grumble about a gift received on the day celebrated as the birth of Jesus Christ.

A Penn. State student driving through a suburban neighborhood during Christmas vacation last year confessed it looked like, "row after row of motels and diners." There is rivalry between neighbors over who can set up the gaudiest display.

There seems to be a hypocrisy between the humble Christmas Tree and the outside displays. The tree, usually the family's pride and joy, sometimes comes second to the blinking lights and moving sleds with singing reindeer. The tree is symbolic of an old European tradition carried over to the United States. The fast-paced American society now has artificial Christmas trees for those who can't be bothered to set up a real tree and take it down. Granted, the small artificial tree is a godsend to the apartment dweller in some cases; it is a "time saver" to the home owner.

The stores and shops all push Christmas in such a way as to give the impression that the average person would not know it is Christmas without their help. "Bargains", "specials" and "clearances" are all over the metropolitan shopping centers. "Santa-lands" and "North Pole villages" snag the children. The average child is better equipped on Christmas morning than the U.S. Army. Commercial enterprises stress more and more what is under the Christmas tree than what the significance of the day and the season is.

The meaning of Christmas is being swamped by gift giving and card sending. People are more intent on what they get for Christmas and who sends them cards than the thought behind both. The reason for the exchanging of gifts is a celebration of the Wise Men bringing gifts to the Holy Child. When the students of the University of Massachusetts

by ROBERT REED

The Christmas season is now upon us. Yes, Christmas is just around the corner. Unfortunately, it was just around the corner before Thanksgiving. As early as November 25 Christmas decorations were already up and most stores were anticipating the merry season.

This commercialization of this religious season is objectionable. People have gotten so interested in the commercial aspects of the season that religion is disappearing from the holiday. Children are made well aware that Santa will soon come with presents, but what about Christ? After all, it is HIS birth that we celebrate, not the coming of Santa Claus.

Sometimes the Russians seem correct when they accuse us of being heartless capitalists. Christmas is a good example. When stores begin displaying Christmas gifts and hanging decorations before December, they are going too far.

Even the churches realize that religion is disappearing from the season. Churches are relatively bare most Sundays, but when December 25 comes along they are jammed. People appear to be making only a token visit to church.

Last year the churches began to do something about this problem. One radio station carried a "commercial" which depicted the following scene: Two men met on the street and one mentioned he had just become vice-president of a company. The other man pointed out that his name was only pencilled in on the business card. The first man admitted that that was due to a fast turnover in the company. His friend then said, "I guess we're all just pencilled in in life." After this a group cut in with a ditty which suggested we would be "out on a limb without Him". They implied that everyone should believe and worship regularly. The announcer noted the message was sponsored by the National Council of Churches.

This struck home as a gross contradiction. The churches are aware of the lack of religion and the strong commercial aspect of the season. Yet they use a petty commercial to bring their message home.

It is high time everyone realized the meaning of this holy season. We should abolish the word Xmas from the language and bring back Christmas.

go home this week it would be wise for them to give some thought to the meaning of Christmas when buying and giving gifts.

our country, and the ideals upon which our country was founded have been in danger. Now is such a time.

Representing our country and us are boys and girls . . . no, better yet men and women, who won't be home for the holidays. These men and women serve us in many capacities, from soldiers and nurses to Peace Corps workers; and in many places, not the least of which is Vietnam.

Remember them in your prayers—remember them in your thoughts—but remember them! May they feel the warmth.

A Medicine Kit of Bourbon and Air Wick?

by MICHAEL GIROUARD

A scene at the Infirmary the day after Christmas vacation.

"Do you think it's that serious, Doctor?"

"Yes, Nurse Schlupp, I'm afraid we'll have to resort to drastic measures with this case. It's most unusual."

"I agree, Doctor. What will you do? Were you thinking of a cholecystectomy? Is it bad enough to warrant an exploratory laparotomy or will you have to resort to performing a gastro-intestinal resection and a retropubic prostratotomy?"

"For God's sake, nurse, he only has a hangover!"

"Oh! Well, we got that brand new operating room and I thought, as long as he's out cold, that we might as well . . ."

"Never mind! We'll give him the usual medication."

"But what if he doesn't like bourbon?"

"He probably got this way by drinking a mixture of Serno and benzine. He'll love bourbon. Who's next?"

"Let's see, now. Oh yes! That boy over there near the palm tree plant."

"What's he doing over there?"

"Well, he's a chem major and his little brother got a chemistry set for Christmas so he decided to show little brother how it's done."

"So?"

"Doctor, have you ever smelled carbon disulfide?"

"I see. Well, give him a bottle of Air Wick and hope for the best. Next?"

"The next boy is really the property of the mental health services."

"Then what's he doing here?"

"Who knows why any of them are here? I think that he thinks that they'll think he's crazy."

"Whatsamatter with'm?"

"I can't understand a word you're saying."

"It's awfully hard to talk with a thermometer in your mouth. An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure, you know."

"Oh! Well in that case. At any rate. Have you ever seen those little plastic airplanes that you're supposed to put together? Well, he got one of those and . . ."

"Never mind. I get the point. Well, there's nothing we can do for him, short of helping him build the thing."

"Don't! If you value your sanity, don't."

"How many more patients are there?"

"Let's see. There are about 372, not counting the rest of the staff that has come for treatment."

"If only the trustees had voted differently. Then we could dress the Med School students in doctors' uniforms and nobody would be the wiser."

"Beg pardon?"

"Oh, nothing! Just wishful thinking on my part. What time is it?"

"It's close to 10:30."

In Service To America—Christmas Away From Home

by DAVID REID

Very soon most all UMass students and faculty will be making their way home for the holidays. Not all Americans will be so fortunate.

It's always great to go home in December, the cold outside is so easily forgotten as reunions with relatives and friends make us warm inside. Home is a place to unwind and relax; a place of safety.

There have been times when the safety of our homes,

WRAPPING, WRITING AND RELAXING

by JOHN EARLE

"I think he spends his vacation thinking of harder exam questions."

This might be one of the comments by a student asked what he thought one of his teachers does during the Christmas holidays. Of course, this could be true. But of five faculty members interviewed at random for this story, none seems to plan much time for school or work.

Mrs. Robert Bancroft, member of the romance languages department, plans to spend a little time correcting papers but the Christmas chores will occupy her for the most part, she reports. Wrapping gifts, sending Christmas cards and other such matters will take the bulk of her time before Christmas. Her four children will take up the rest of Mrs. Bancroft's time, she says.

Outdoor activities that the Amherst area and New England offer in the winter are the main attractions for Gilbert Mottla, in the office of agricultural administration, who enjoys skating with his family at the Amherst College rink. When weather permits, he also likes to do a little skiing. Mottla says he lets his wife take care of most of the Christmas mailing list while he sends Christmas cards to a few personal friends.

Work on three different projects is in store for Dr. Robert Stanfield. An assistant professor of sociology, he will do research for one paper, hold consultations for another paper and work on a third paper.

Dr. David Porter of the English department says he would like to spend his vacation lying on a beach in Puerto Rico but he has decided to stay home, rest and finish writing a book.

What Dr. Porter would like to do is being done by Dr. Leon Barron of the same department. Dr. Barron will spend the holidays in Florida.

PEPSODENT, CANDLES, AND ASPIRIN

by HAROLD GUSHUE

It's Christmas time again. It's a time for good cheer and fellowship towards others; a time for lights, carols, cards and, of course, gifts.

Even though I have been busy at the North Pole all year, I have been able to keep in contact with UMass. Here are my gifts to UMass students, buildings, and the administration for the coming year.

Sincerely,
Santa Claus

To 'smiling' Dean Field—a year's supply of Pepsodent
To Dean Hopkins—a private edition of a Bennet Cerf joke book

To 'Red' Blasko—five more parking lots

To Yahoo—a guarantee to publish

To Dean Curtis—an automatic bed-checking system

To Senior Girls—no curfews and a Senior dorm

To UMass—a Big "Public Image"

To the 'Commons'—a year's supply of candles

To Mrs. Lederle—a rocking horse, guaranteed not to throw her

To campus musicians—a music room with a grand piano

To track coach Footrick—Johnny Bannister the second

To the boys—a co-ed dorm

To the Greeks—new houses in Hadley

To UMass Boston—best wishes for success from her elder sister

To the Infirmary—a year's supply of aspirin for the doctors and nurses

To Winter Carni Committee—snow for Winter Carni

To the dorms—all the money from their vending machines

To everyone—good cheer, best wishes for a merry Merry Christmas and a Happy and prosperous New Year

For Greeks: A Time To Share

by SUSAN BASCOM

This year the Greek organizations on campus celebrated the holiday season by giving to others, and encouraging the traditional Christmas gaiety.

As vacation drew near, elaborate plans were made by almost every fraternity and sorority to arrange several afternoon parties for underprivileged children. The children live in the surrounding area, and many are orphans, display mental retardation, or are otherwise deprived. They were greeted on their arrival at their designated fraternity by Greek members who were dressed in holiday finery. Smiles and laughter were heard as the children were led to a sparkling Christmas tree with gayly wrapped presents beneath it. Santa Claus then arrived and called the name of each child individually, so that they might sit on his knee to receive their gifts. After Santa Claus' departure, the children were entertained by cartoons and games, and refreshments were provided for them.

Many of the Greek sorority members also exchanged gifts within their respective houses. This is organized by a "Secret Santa" program. Each girl randomly draws the name of another sister, and purchases a small gift for her. These gifts are usually exchanged at a house gathering where all enjoy the surprise of acknowledging someone else's gift.

Each Greek organization planned an annual Christmas Party, for their own respective house. These parties varied from a get-together with house advisors, to a specified time for singing Christmas carols and exchanging gifts. Many houses had tree decorating parties, and holiday lights shone their warmth on all.

Just as surely as Christmas falls on December 25, the unique craftsmanship of Currier and Ives turns up every year on millions of Christmas cards. "Winter in the Country," the title of this famous Currier and Ives print, has long been a popular illustration for Christmas cards. One of the choicest winter scenes produced by the famous lithographers, this print was made in 1864 from a painting by George H. Durrie, a New England artist.

The Christmas season is steeped with rich traditions—caroling, gift-giving, nativity scenes, and others. One of the most popular customs is the sending of Christmas cards. Perennial favorites are Christmas cards with winter scenes like this one by the famed 19th century lithographers, Currier and Ives. This particular scene, entitled "Winter Pastime," was printed in 1870. A similar one with the same title also was printed by Currier and Ives in 1855. —Photo courtesy of Nationwide Mutual Insurance

St. Nick's History Revealed

by ELAINE KAGAN

There are a lot of facts about Santa Claus that are common knowledge—the fact that he lives in the North Pole, the fact that he rides around in a reindeer-drawn sleigh, the fact that he does not shave and has a passion for red. However, very little has been said about Santa Claus' romantic life—about how he met Mrs. Claus for example.

"Santi," as he was called by all his buddies, met the future Mrs. Claus while he was a student at U.N.P. (the University of North Pole). A rather shy, sensitive person, Santi was reluctant to go to such a large university where he felt he was just a number. During his freshman and sophomore years, he kept pretty much to himself, but during his junior year, Santi decided to join the "in crowd" and rush a house.

Santi became a pledge to Chi Mu Alpha Sigma fraternity (XMAS), which proved to be of great consequence to his later life. For example, XMAS always shaved the heads of its pledges; for that reason, after his baldy-haircut grew out, Santi always wore his hair long and also grew a long beard.

Another result of Santi's life as a fraternity man was that after graduation, he became a rather unconservative, flashy dresser. He became really wild over red, fur-trimmed clothes, high boots, tossed caps—the whole bit. A psychoanalyst might ascribe Santi's dressing habits as an unconscious rebellion against his years as a fraternity man during which time the dress was largely prescribed—blue jeans (with suit coats, of course), lots of madras, loafers (preferably Weejuns), plaid wool short-jackets etc.

The most important consequence of Santi's life as a brother of XMAS was it provided the impetus for him to go out and find dates. Santi felt a great deal of anxiety about dating. As everyone knows, a fraternity man (especially a pledge) must have a date for a Saturday night party. Before Santi had called girls a week ahead for dates, but stopped this habit when told by his brothers that the proper thing to do was to call a girl around 4 p.m. on Saturday for a date that night. Since this usually did not prove too successful, most of the time Santi had to go to the "Freeze" (U.N.P.'s equivalent of the "Hatch") to pick up dates.

There she was sitting in the back of the "Freeze" where the "beat" set sat. She was very pretty and Santi was afraid to approach her at first. However, he finally asked her if she would accompany him to a XMAS party. Liking to do things on the spur of the moment, she agreed to go. Her name, by the way, was Merry. They had a really great time together and found that they had a great deal in common.

They soon fell in love and decided to elope. Santi saved his beer money and bought a second-hand sleigh and an odd-looking reindeer with a red nose which provided their transportation to the outskirts of the North Pole. Here the Clauses would spend their time actualizing a mutual dream of making children happy at Christmas.

BEWARE... Profs Prepare

by LAURI SCHMIDT

The Collegian prints many surveys on important questions. I have decided that there is one question that should be found out immediately.

What do you think your professors do at Christmas time?

"Read the Encyclopedia Britannica."

"Teach calculus to their three-year-olds."

"Expound their latest theory which proves beyond a doubt that there is no Santa Claus."

"Throw darts at 'A' hour exams in their courses."

"Make up impossible questions for finals."

These are the type of sarcastically humorous answers one would expect to receive from students in regard to their professors. Indeed, I imagine even the professors themselves would not be too surprised at their students' attitudes toward them right before finals.

From my findings, I have come to the conclusion that professors, in general, are regarded not as friends, but as fiends—things which look like men but whose minds are twisted. Their students cannot conceive of them as doing anything "normal", especially during Christmas vacation when they are supposed to be sharpening their fangs for the "final" hill.

The most favorable response I received on the professors' side as to what they do around Christmas time was from a freshman who said:

"I don't know. Probably nothing."

This is a most discouraging discovery. The problem seems to be a mass generalization of all professors into the category of unfeeling machines who have no time for the fun of Christmas. However, I know for a fact that though they are engrossed in making their assemblies of "little known facts", many professors do set aside a certain amount of time on Christmas Eve or Christmas Day (sometimes both!) to spend with their relatives and friends.

As an added example, there is, on this campus, a psychology professor who, in spite of his professional beliefs, has not yet revealed the truth about Santa Claus. He says:

"While they are young, let them believe in it. When they get to be about four, they should be told."

Then there is the history professor who, instead of bedtime stories, reads chronological history to his children. He figures that unless he cuts down on the spread of Christianity, his son will be 18 before he gets to St. Nicholas.

It should be understood that many of the opinions used here were made facetiously and that all were in good fun. On the other hand, this apparent jesting seems to indicate that the student does not think the professor to be completely human.

One Amherst commuter confided to me that late one Christmas Eve, as he strolled by the window of a professor's house, he glimpsed a familiar figure dressed in red. The only difference between this Santa and those he was used to seeing was that the traditional "Ho-ho-ho" had now been replaced by "Heh-heh-heh".

Hampshire College Opens Fund Drive

By PAT PETOW
4-College Reporter

Charles R. Longworth, chairman of The Hampshire College Educational Trust, which received its charter as a college recently from Sec. of State Kevin White, said Monday that active fund raising will now start. With its charter, the liberal arts institution still in the stages of educational planning will be tax-exempt.

The experimental college with Four-College support was conceived seven years ago in The New College Plan and made possible by a six-million dollar pledge announced last summer from Amherst alumnus Harold F. Johnson. An initial freshman class is projected for some time after 1968.

AN ESSENTIAL FEATURE of the proposed institution is reduction of costs "without impairing quality" of education. To this end, land in the South

Amherst area has been purchased so that the fifth college might enjoy other Valley facilities.

From 12 to 20 million dollars, however, is being sought for getting Hampshire underway. Longworth described the trustees as always responsible for this function. "We are interested in the possibilities" he said of both public and private sources. Foundations have been exposed to the ideas of Hampshire're in the hopes of their interest.

Among other active internal activities Longworth reported, the trustees are "still searching for a president." No administrative or faculty appointments are expected until after a president is chosen.

The process of selecting architects has also begun although basic educational plans must be adopted before construction is undertaken.

Volpe Signs Med Bill

By PETER HENDRICKSON
Editor-in-Chief

The dirt roads and woods of Amherst are to be without the $40 million Med School as Gov. Volpe has signed Senate and House passed bills authorizing planning, developing and land-taking in Worcester.

The House passed the hotly contested measures Monday by a better than 3-to-1 vote for the third and final reading of the bill to float a $1.75 million bond issue for landtaking.

The Senate approved the bills late last night just before the midnight deadline in the hang-over General Court session.

Among the Western Mass opponents of the bill in the House was Rep. David Bartley, D-Holyoke, who listed counter arguments in an attempt to bring votes over to the Amherst, Mass. side. Among his points were:

- Cost of the Worcester location would be $50,000 more per year than if the school were located in Amherst.

- It would cost nearly $500,000 more to build the school in Worcester.

- That a state court decision on a petition headed by heart surgeon Dr. Paul Dudley White, which favors Amherst, should be forthcoming within two months.

- That operational figures for the Med School are unrealistically low — $6 million as opposed to the national average of $7½ million.

- That the Federal government is unlikely to pick up the suggested third construction cost of the school.

The Trustees met last Friday with the House Ways and Means Committee to determine what funds would be necessary, regardless of where the site might be.

Med School Dean Lamar Soutter outlined the timetable for the Med School:

- Two years for architectural planning.

- Petition the Federal Government for matching construction funds with six months to process the request.

- Two years for actual construction.

- One year to equip and recruit faculty for the teaching staff, bringing the date to around 1970.

He stated that the faculty to student ratio would be three to one and that there would be 100 students per class in the proposed 400 bed hospital.

COMMITTEE CHAIRMAN asked what steps would be taken asked what steps would be taken to keep the doctors in Massachusetts and Dr. Soutter said he hopes for low tuition and early introduction to community practice.

Legislators were also concerned about the possibility of the Worcester branch becoming a full-fledged University with "all the niceties".

President John Lederlee replied that it is possible but that is not being planned for now.

Investigation To Start For Graduate Housing

A recent announcement that the University of Massachusetts will tear down its County Circle dormitories to make way for a new road has focused attention on the housing needs of graduate students and married couples. The University has been investigating ways to provide suitable housing for its graduate and married students.

Dr. Edward C. Moore, Dean of the Graduate School, announced recently that 150 single dormitory rooms will be provided on campus next year for unmarried graduate students.

"In addition," he said, "we have been cooperating with a private builder who plans to have 200 apartments completed by next September for married students. These apartments will be within walking distance of the University.

"A typical apartment with two bedrooms will probably cost $90 a month. If these apartments are filled next September, and if there seems to be a demand, a similar number will be built next year."

According to the graduate dean, plans for the new development will be formulated by the builder in conjunction with the housing committee of the recently formed Graduate Student Senate.

Information concerning the builder and proposed site will be made available after the Graduate Student Senate has been briefed.

Bill Asks For An End To UMass Autonomy

Fiscal autonomy of UMass and the State colleges will be given a full airing before the joint legislative committee on Education after the next session begins on January 5, when proposals will be considered to extend autonomy as well as to repeal that fiscal independence granted to educational institutions of the Commonwealth in prior years.

Two legislators, Reps. John F. Melia (D-Boston) and Arthur L. Desrocher (R-Nantucket), are co-sponsors of a measure to repeal fiscal autonomy granted to UMass, the state colleges, and the community colleges. With fiscal autonomy, governing boards of the institutions can practically spend their Legislature-approved appropriations in any manner in which they deem fit to do so.

Also filed for consideration during the 1966 session is a bill sponsored by the Board of Education, which calls on the Legislature to grant fiscal autonomy to the State Department of Education, as a means of further implementing the Willis-Harrington Act to reorganize the educational system in the Commonwealth.

On another front, the next session will consider a resolve filed by Senate President Maurice A. Donahue of Holyoke, for an investigation of problems of urban schools, and establishment of a new form of regional school committee.

Drafty Here

UMass Students Classified 1-A

In the face of nearly 500 assignments to 1-A status, UMass students have been running to the placement office to file 109 forms to secure student deferments.

Those who did not file at the beginning of the semester were notified just before Christmas of the change in their draft status. Most will be able to continue at UMass if they remain in good standing but the following interview with Lieut. General John Hershey may cast fear into the hearts of some students.

The exclusive interview appeared this week in U. S. News and World Report and is reprinted here in part.

Q General Hershey, what is the draft outlook for 1966? Do you expect to have to draft some full-time college students?

A If calls for manpower by the Department of Defense continue at a relatively high level, we will have to replenish the pool of registrants available for service. Those now classified as students will, of course, be considered along with others, but how far we will have to go in taking students has not been decided. It depends on manpower needs.

Q What if draft calls go up again, from the present level of about 40,000 a month to, say, 60,000 a month?

A That would be approaching the levels we faced during the Korean War, and would put a much heavier strain on all sources of manpower. It could well mean the Defense Department would find it necessary to reduce the mental, physical and moral standards of acceptability. If that happened many now in class 1-Y would be called.

Congressional decisions as to states of "war or national emergency" will, obviously, have a tremendous effect on what we do in Selective Service.

Q Can you tell us how the rules for college students are likely to change in the months ahead?

A We might have to go back to some kind of sorting system.

I think we're being driven in that direction.

Q Will there be new rules by February?

A We're doing a lot of figuring. Here's one of the things you get up against: How many measurements do you know of to measure the capacity of a student? Now, mind you, we aren't talking about whether the guy is going to succeed later in life.

All we're trying to decide is who has the capacity to be a successful student, because there's no use deferring a boy to be an unsuccessful student, since he won't stay and finish his education. So how do you measure?

We have found two ways. I wish I knew more ways. One way is to have an examination, and another is to get the judgment of the colleges, as expressed in the boy's class standing.

Q You mean, report to draft boards the names of students who were in the lowest one-fourth of their class?

A Yes. Then the college man often says: "But we can't do that because you know we grade on the curve here; we draw a line like this. And there are 100 people who are right on the line, and we can't say who is over that line and who is not."

They hate to get into the business that we in Selective Service have to be in. But inevitably — and I've said it many times over — whether the colleges will tell us who the least promising students are, we'll have to go in by some means and find out ourselves. They won't like whatever we do. I can hear them now. I've been through this before.

Q Will you go back to some kind of examinations?

A No, I'm not planning to at this time. In the first place, an examination only has the appearance of being fair. It tends to get cocked over toward the mathematical, because it's easier to grade, for one thing.

You just can't make an examination that's fair in a specialized world. Somebody has said: "You ought to give a different examination to each specialty." Try that when you've got to authenticate the results of every single examination. The first time we give an examination, somewhere around a half million people took it.

Q General, do you have any advice for the average student in college now?

A Yes, Study. If you want to stay a student, be one.

Q Are many boys taking that advice already?

A I've told everybody for the last three months: "You people in school are going to see the best grades made this year that have been made in an awful long time."

Q If a boy leaves college now—

A Normally, those who get thrown out now — we've got them. Last year we didn't get them right away because we were inducting up in the average age of about 21 years and six or eight months. So a 19 or 20-year-old, if he was thrown out, had another year to get back into college, as a student in good standing, before we got to him. But we're down to age 19 this year. It's over the hill and out. I mean, he goes out of college, he's in service—unless he doesn't pass the Army's tests.

Nomination papers for senator-at-large from the Class of 1967 are now available in the RSO office of the Student Union. Papers must be returned to the RSO office by 5 p.m. Tuesday, January 11 with the signatures of at least 25 bona fide members of the Class of 1967.

Trustees...

"The trustees are thinking ahead but with population growth and desires for education it could certainly happen. We must provide for growth potential," he said.

DR. SOUTTER WOULD not back down on his preference of the Amherst site but said he thought Worcester was "a good site". A number of men referred to the Booz, Allen and Hamilton report that pointed to Amherst as a superior and less expensive site.

References to the consultants' report were consistently made by Western Mass legislators in both the Senate and the House battles but they were outnumbered by others from the central and eastern Mass.

A letter from Dr. Paul Dudley White said "A strong medical school should and can be developed sooner and with less confusion and less cost at Amherst." Rep. Thomas F. Farrell, D Worcester, said Friday, "I'm surprised Dr. White got sucked in on a political deal." Farrell doubted Friday that the necessary two thirds vote for the bond issue could be found.

INTENTIONS TO KILL the $1.75 million bill by filibuster in the House were defeated when House Speaker John F.X. Davoren, D. Milford, refused to recognize Western Mass. legislators.

Sen. Charles Bisbee, Jr., R-Chesterfield, said that he as "under no delusion that untold millions of dollars could be saved if the new school were built in Amherst near the campus."

Rep. Bartley said Monday that if the state did get a bargain it would be the first time. Sen. Hammond, R-Westfield, said he thought that about one-third of the trustees lived in the Boston-Worcester area and that the vote last summer to locate in Worcester was "a political one".

Drake's Village Inn Will Have Its License Renewed

Reprinted from Amherst Record

Bowing to the will of the state Alcoholic Beverages Commission, Amherst's Board of Selectmen voted to renew the Village Inn's liquor license. For all practical purposes their action settles the case, although further delays are legally possible.

In their letter to the Selectmen the Commissioners noted that the licensee is now doing business and has followed normal procedure in applying for renewal. This gives him a "prima facie right of renewal," they said, which stands as a "moral obligation upon the local licensing authorities" and "should be held inviolate."

The Commissioners pointed out that the Inn "was given a penalty which has been served" in a sales to minors case that came before the Selectmen in November. Since then no other violations have been reported to the Selectmen, the ABC said.

All was not lost for the Inn's irate neighbors, however, as the Selectmen placed two restrictions on the license: patrons will not be allowed to take bottles or cans from the premises, and the licensee must "use all reasonable means to maintain quiet and good order in and around the premises, particularly at closing time." Both restrictions were authorized by the ABCC after being suggested by Town Attorney William Welch.

The Selectmen indicated further legal action would mean more Town expense and lost time, with few prospects of success since the ABCC has made its position clear.

Since the Nov. 30 hearing the Inn's license has been one of the Town's leading conversation pieces. Fifty-three neighbors signed the original petition urging the denial of the license, and 15 of them spoke at the hearing. They detailed the offenses allegedly perpetrated by the Inn's student patrons, including loud and profane noise at night, vomiting and urinating on lawns and sidewalks, and repeated property damage.

University students were aroused by the Dec. 7 denial. A small group picketed Town Hall and the Chamber of Commerce the next Saturday, carrying signs as "Don't let the Drake be a sitting duck" and "Amherst, your brains are falling out."

The Collegian, maintained in an editorial that the Inn is a campus "institution" and suggested a meeting between students and Selectmen, while a letter in the same newspaper urged a boycott of Amherst business until the license would be renewed.

National SDS Convenes Meeting At Univ. of Illinois

About two hundred members of National Students for a Democratic Society met at the University of Illinois from Dec. 27-Jan. 2 for a Membership Conference followed by a National Council meeting.

Each morning and afternoon of the Conference three-hour workshops were held, giving students a chance to talk to each other and exchange views and opinions.

According to Peter Goodman, one of the five UMass representatives at the conference, the best word to describe the week was spontaneous. "Spontaneous workshops, not planned by SDS officers, were held at all hours. A conference newspaper was printed each day. The mimeograph machine was constantly turning out suggestions, proposals, and long reports, which were soon handed to and read by everyone."

The National Council, which is the voting body of SDS, made up of one chapter delegate per every twenty-five members, started meeting Sat., Dec. 31, with long discussions on policy toward the crisis in Vietnam.

The most important proposal, according to most of the delegates, was the Al Haber proposal on internal education. Under this, the National Office would assume the responsibility of education and communication — raising the sophistication level of its members on current political issues, and distributing any member's research papers throughout the entire organization.

Sidney Finehirsh, the president of UM Young Independents, an SDS chapter, discussed the Conference. He felt it had given all members there "A sense of feeling for the National Organization, a sense of purpose. I wish more people had been able to attend, to feel the spirit and the spontaneity. From throwing quarters at the Executive Secretary to raise money, to eating peanut butter sandwiches every day and sleeping on church pews at night, to spending many long and thoughtful hours discussing and planning, in raising proposals and constantly hitting controversial issues, the deep sincerity of all attending members showed through."

The next National Council will probably be in April.

Fall Issue Of Caesura Out

The Caesura staff announces that the Fall issue of the literary magazine, 63 pages containing 20 poems, 3 stories, and 8 pages of art, is now ready. Distribution to dormitories has begun. Commuters will be able to pick up their copies Wed., Jan 5 and Thurs., Jan. 6 in the afternoon, in the Student Union lobby.

The editorial staff is now prepared to accept material for the Spring issue. The deadline for submission of material is Feb. 11, 1966.

All manuscripts should be left in the Caesura office, the north-ernmost desk in the Franklin Room of the S.U. Manuscripts must be typed, with, in the case of poetry, one poem to a page. The author's name and address must be on a separate sheet of paper.

Authors whose work has been accepted for publication will be notified by mail. Work which is to be returned to the author must be accompanied by a self-addressed stamped envelope.

UM Prof President Of Scholarly Society

DR. HERMANN J. WEIGAND

Dr. Hermann J. Weigand, visiting professor of German at the University of Massachusetts, has been named president of one of the ranking scholarly societies in this country—the Modern Language Association.

A former Sterling professor and director of graduate studies at Yale University, Dr. Weigand came to UMass in 1961 after his retirement from Yale, primarily as an advisor in the establishment and development of University graduate programs in German.

He is generally considered one of the most eminent scholars in the field of German literature and is the author of over 80 publications in his field. He has written definitive volumes on Ibsen, Thomas Mann and Goethe, plus major essays and articles in American, British and German publications on virtually all phases of German literature.

Modern Language Association is an 85-year-old organization of college and university teachers of English and modern foreign languages. It maintains a research center in New York City on foreign language teaching at all levels of U.S. education, plus a center for applied linguistics in Washington, D.C., which serves as a clearing house for information on the teaching of English as a second language, particularly in Africa and Asia.

The former second vice president of MLA, Dr. Weigand was elected by vote of the membership at the annual meeting this week in Chicago and will take office Jan. 1 for a one-year term. He succeeds Dr. Howard Mumford Jones, professor emeritus in humanities at Harvard Univ.

Dr. Weigand was born in Philadelphia and received A.B., M.A., and Ph.D. degrees in Germanics at the University of Michigan. He was an instructor in German at Michigan, then an assistant professor of German at the University of Pennsylvania before going to Yale as Sterling professor in 1929.

His critical presentation on Ibsen, The Modern Ibsen, was published in 1925 and reissued as a paperback in 1959. His 1933 study of the Thomas Mann novel The Magic Mountain, is considered a model of literary interpretation and was praised by Mann himself.

Dr. Weigand is also the author of a widely-read volume on Goethe, Goethe's Wisdom and Experience, published in 1949, and of a scholarly investigation of a central theme of Medieval literature entitled Three Chapters on Courtly Love in Arthurian France and Germany, published in 1959.

Poverty Corps Grads Compete For Scholarships

Young Americans who have distinguished themselves by outstanding work in the War on Poverty will be able to compete for seven new overseas scholarships established by the Experiment in International Living, it was announced tonight by F. Gordon Boyce, President of the Experiment. The new program will be known as the Sargent Shriver Scholarships Program.

Participants in anti-poverty programs such as Upward Bound (OEO's pre-college program), VISTA Volunteers, Neighborhood Youth Corps or Job Corps who best "exemplify the spirit of self-help and community service so energetically supported by Mr.

Shriver both domestically and abroad" may qualify. Paid employees of poverty agencies are not eligible.

The seven Sargent Shriver Scholarships will be announced in the spring of 1966. The scholarships are designed to give the participants a unique opportunity to learn about community action in a foreign land. The seven winners, one from each of the seven OEO geographical regions, will go to different foreign countries for two months, where they will live with families and participate in the activities of Peace Corps volunteers wherever possible.

A joint selection board, representing the Office of Economic Opportunity and the Experiment in International Living, will meet in March to select the scholarship winners for the summer of 1966 from nominations submitted by anti-poverty project sponsors in the regions. Nominees will be between the ages of 18 and 30, come from disadvantaged backgrounds and have the ability and the maturity to benefit from the experience.

They will have a brief orientation at the Experiment's School for International Training in Brattleboro, Vermont, before going overseas in June.

The scholarships are fully financed by the Experiment, a non-profit, privately financed group working to promote mutual respect and understanding among the peoples of the world.

Roister Doisters To Cast For New Plays

Roister Doisters, the student drama organization, has announced the casts for its three plays to be produced in February. These plays will be directed by graduate student Ken Bordner, who recently directed The One Way Pendulum.

The Greek tragedy, Antigone, adapted by Cocteau, has the largest cast. Carole Willard will play the title role. Appearing with her will be Anne Ritchy, Wendy Mahon, William Sibley, Jim Sargent, Richard Guerra, and Tony Frances.

Also, Ted Buswick, Dana Briggs, Richard Bellerive, Kathleen Hynek, Judy James, Ruth Pannell, Chris Crowley, Greiv Hamill, Rick Eber, Robert Singer, Ronald Garner, Chuck Interlandi and Norma Hench. Norma is also assistant director.

An absurdist play, A Slight Ache, by Harold Pinter, will star Walt Mosher, Betty Corea and Tony Frances. Christine Gould is student director.

A comedy by French author Giraudoux, The Apollo of Bellac, is Roister Doister's third choice. The cast includes: Jane Hilman, Linda DeCost, Chuck Interlandi, Ted Buswick, Robert Singer, Jim Sargent, Dana Briggs, Ron Garner, Richard Guerra, Richard Bellexive, Pat Cooke and Rick Eber. Christine Ryan will be the student director.

These plays will be presented in Bowker Auditorium Feb. 3, 4 and 5.

Asian Topic At Amherst Lecture Fri.

Harry J. Benda, associate professor of history at Yale University and an authority on Southeast Asian affairs, will speak at Amherst College on "Aspects of Decolonization in Southeast Asia" Friday, Jan. 7 at 8:00 p.m. in Kirby Theater. The lecture is open to the public without charge.

Professor Benda joined the Yale faculty in 1959 as a part of the expansion of Yale's Southeast Asia Studies Program. He is currently director of its graduate studies and associate director of the Program. He is a member of the Association for Asian Studies, the Council on Foreign Relations, the American Historical Association, and consultant to publishers and to U. S. Government agencies.

A native of Czechoslovakia, Professor Benda went to Indonesia on an appointment to the staff of the Czech consulate. During World War II, the Japanese invaded the islands and he spent two years in prison camps.

MASSACHUSETTS COLLEGIAN FORUM

A UMass student teacher (former COLLEGIAN staffer) in a nearby community assigned the topic, "Why I Should Be A Good Boy in Class," to a "naughty" high school senior. His essay below indicates the apparent concern, even at that level, which students share for their impact on world (universe) affairs.

Why I Should Be a Good Boy in Class

I should be a good boy in class because if I'm not, it will upset poor Miss— and cause her to weep profusely and turn beet red. If I am a bad boy in class, I will get thrown out of class and have detention that night. Then I will skip detention and get even more detention. Then I will skip detention again and get kicked out of school. Then I will be forced to meander aimlessly about the streets, cause no one will want someone who's been evicted from school. I'll probably get arrested for vagrancy and be incarcerated. Then I'd get sprung and gun down a guard and be a wanted murderer. Then I'd have to leave the country and go to Russia. The Feds will follow me there and get arrested as spies. Then the government will get ticked off and invade Russia and start a nuclear war. The world will be virtually destroyed. Then some creatures from outer space will attack Earth for getting fallout in their atmosphere, and an all-out war will be started between Earth's allies and the other planets' allies. The whole universe will soon be destroyed and it'll be my fault because I wasn't a good boy in class.

Letters To The Editor

The Library Is...

To the Editor:

Is this University for the students or for the faculty? I was amazed to learn that the students get only cursory consideration at the Library in comparison with the faculty and professional staff.

The library here is disgraceful enough for an institution this size without having some of its material withheld from students.

Any faculty member may borrow a book for an unlimited length of time, and he need not return it until someone asks for it at the desk of the library. This sounds fine, but what about the students who need the book desperately only to find that it will not be available until a faculty member brings it back? Yet, no students have this prerogative. They may only borrow books until the second Monday after they take it out.

If the library is truly for the students, which every faculty at an Institution of Higher Learning should be, then why are they treated like second class citizens? Some works, like legal papers, may not be borrowed by undergraduates at all, while faculty and graduate students may take them out if they need them.

This is a disgraceful situation and should not be allowed to continue. All members of the academic community should be treated as equals by all University services; and if anyone should be given preference it should be the students. I am sure that the students parents, and the state legislature do not pay for these facilities so that they may be denied to the students of the University.

Joel Hartstone

To Cope With Drinking

Dear Sir:

Any editorial should make an attempt to follow a logical sequence. Some successfully present their point; others, as this one, fail.

By the use of strange pseudo-logic and a curious juxtaposition of ideas, it attempts to lead the reader to accept the fact that the university should not change its present policy. For what reason? The failure of the Twenty-first Amendment can hardly lead to the conclusion, in the next sentence, that "the big mistake" the University could make would be to crack down on drinking.

Drinking because of its prevalence is a problem, and one with which the University somehow has to cope. It hardly seems reasonable that regulation or "cracking down" would be a mistake, at least for any of the several reasons put forth in the article. Would the author advocate the elimination of regulation against speeding or stealing because with regulation there is a greater "challenge" to break the law and "beat the system"? Why not? for them we could have "above ground" speeding and larceny. (Neither of these acts will occur less frequently, I'm sure, if the attendant punishment is taken away.)

As an argument against further laws, we are told that underground drinking and more frequent breaking of the law will occur. Not only is this a specious argument, but it also contains a ridiculous error. If a new law is put into effect, it cannot possibly be broken more frequently than before it was promulgated—before it begins to exist as law, it obviously cannot be broken at all.

Concede that there will always be drinking, but let us not use this fact as an excuse to ignore the situation—a fair and reasonable statement. Why then call the University philosophy successful when only the most naive can assert that, in practices, it is not tantamount to ignoring the situation. Keeping students "honest," but at the same time keeping students drinking is what the article would aim for. An honesty based upon hypocrisy?

Finally, aside from any arguments concerning drinking or non-drinking, some comments on what perhaps is the main thought contained in this article. The writer professes sympathy to the plight of a poor individual who is occasionally "sacrificed," but then goes on saying it is better one than all. "Better one than all," is that what is meant or would it be more appropriate to say "better he than I." Remove any question of drinking, of effective or non-effective controls, and we have left a naked philosophy of the "I". In sum: "I want" so "I should have."

To say "I want" does not mean I should not have, but there should be valid reasons, removed from myself, that I can present before I say I should have. This "editorial" I say again has failed. It is nothing more than a rationalization of an argument which, if it had been presented as an argument instead of as a justification of selfish ideas, might well have succeeded in making its point.

Sincerely,
Charles C. Matteo
Graduate Student
Massachusetts Institute of Tech.

"A Financial Injustice"

For the past few years many students taking the Education Block have been suffering a financial injustice by the University. I am referring to those students who are required, through no desire of their own, to practice-teach in areas as far away from campus as Pittsfield, thus necessitating that they live in an apartment for the last eight weeks of a semester. The injustice lies in the fact that they are still required to pay for the room in the dormitory in which they are no longer living. This presents a special problem to women, for they are required to reside in a dormitory while on campus.

Living in an apartment for eight weeks is enough of a financial burden to most people, without having to pay rent to the University too. The current University policy is that only those men involuntarily drafted into the armed forces may receive a rent rebate. We feel that any student required to move off-campus in order to fulfill academic obligations, as set forth by the University, should not be penalized for doing so. For this reason, the Academic Affairs Committee of the Student Senate will propose a motion Wednesday, asking that the Senate as a body recommend to the Board of Trustees that they change their policy in order to correct this injustice. We hope that the motion will pass, and that the Board of Trustees will act on the recommendation in the best interests of the students involved.

Absentee Vacationers

To the Editor:

On December 17, the Friday before the Christmas vacation, 8 out of 25, or almost one-third of the students enrolled in my lab were absent. (Since this lab meets only once a week an absence invariably involves missing a lot of material.) Many other instructors, I understand, also had a high absentee rate on Friday. I am certain that up to ¼ of the absences were unnecessary—most of the students imbued with that just-before-a-long-vacation indifference and frivolity, decided simply to cut their Friday afternoon classes, and, instead, celebrate or take an early ride home. The trouble is that it is simple to cut a class before a vacation here at the University of Massachusetts. In other universities it is not. In some schools the cutting of any class for two days prior to, and one day after, any extended vacation (such as Thanksgiving or Christmas) results in the addition of ½ credit to the total credits needed, by the student, for graduation. Where this penalty is enforced it is found that the class meetings before and after a vacation are extremely well attended.

I would like to recommend that such a penalty for absences just before and after vacation time be instituted here at UMass.

HAVE A HEART

To the Editor:

I do understand that the I.B.M. machine plays such a vital role in the growth of this University, but for some reason it has lost all heart. Let me explain.

Last year when I was a freshmen I had to literally hang around to the last day of finals to take an English exam which could not be studied for. I guess I took it all in stride since freshmen usually get the brunt of blame around here anyway. Well, at the time, I just took it for granted that it couldn't be helped.

But I am now a sophomore—a so-called upperclassman. But has that really mattered to the almighty I.B.M. machine? No! Because this year, as was the case last year, I and the sophomore class have to "hang around" to the last day of finals. Why should this class be made to suffer two years in a row?

I have only one wish, and that is for the I.B.M. machine to reconsider our case. You always have to remember to be nice to it, or someday it may cancel your existence.

The National Interfraternity Conference, representing 2,200,000 social fraternity members in this country, has pledged its support to efforts by the United States Government to uphold freedom and oppose aggression in Viet Nam and other areas threatened by Communist take-overs.

The action as taken in a resolution passed unanimously by a record number of 1100 delegates who attended the recent N.I.C. 56th annual conference at the Washington Hilton Hotel in Washington, D.C. They represented active and alumni members of about 4,000 fraternity chapters in the nearly 500 colleges and universities with fraternities.

Other highlights of the four-day meeting were these:

The N.I.C.'s highest award—its Gold Medal—was presented to Supreme Court Justice Tom Clark for his "outstanding work for youth through the fraternity system." Justice Clark is national vice-president of Delta Tau Delta.

The University of Tennessee was announced as winner of the N.I.C.'s 1965 Iron Man Trophy. The award, a large bronze piece, was won by Tennessee's Interfraternity Council for carrying out the most constructive leadership, scholarship and community relations program among the hundreds of other schools with interfraternity councils.

A process now being perfected at the University of Massachusetts may have an important future role in one of the most vital areas of the U.S. space program—the investigation of life on other planets.

Scientists at the UMass College of Agriculture's food science and technology department have learned that space technicians are "very interested" in the possible adaptation of their metal food container sterilization research to spacecraft use, according to Prof. Charles R. Stumbo, who heads the research project.

of life on other planets, Prof. Stumbo said, is keeping those planets uncontaminated by earth organisms. Exploring spacecraft, therefore, must be sterilized inside and out.

At a recent National Aeronautics and Space Administration conference on spacecraft sterilization technology, NASA officials expressed great interest in the work being done at the University, Prof. Stumbo said.

The UMass process involves sterilization through the complementary action of heat and gas, a process called vapor-phase sterilization.

Prof. Stumbo and three graduate assistants are working on a project called "Kinetics and Mode of Vapor-Phase Sterilization" under a $23,520 grant to the University from the U. S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

Using ethylene oxide at a temperature of 100 centigrade for one minute, they have been able to achieve results equal to a three-hour liquid immersion at 135 degrees centigrade.

The shorter time and lower temperature of the new method appears to have wide application to spacecraft work, Prof. Stumbo said. Under present methods of sterilization with liquids, it is necessary to apply heat to a level at which plastic components in the spacecraft start to melt, he explained.

Although the process is being developed mainly for sterilization of metal and glass containers, Prof. Stumbo sees no major problems in adapting it to spacecraft.

"Sterilization is sterilization," he said. "A spacecraft is just a bigger tin can."

Paul describes them — Peter, Paul and Mary

By NANCY ABRAMS
Feature Staff

Peter was onstage leading the huge audience in a medley of protest songs. Mary was sitting in the dressing room discussing the trio's recent concert tour of Europe and Australia, as a tiny black poodle frolicked at her feet. In another part of the backstage suite, Paul was talking about the current trends in the folk music industry.

"I like folk-rock, and I'd like to do it. I used to play the electric guitar," he said.

PAUL WENT ON to talk about his friend Bob Dylan: "I think he's a genius, and there's nothing wrong with this trying new styles. Who knows? In a few years he might write a folk opera."

"We have a good recording contract," Paul said while discussing their new album. "We have full control of our records. We do our own editing as well as pick out photos and liner notes. We work sixteen hours a day when we're making an album, but it's worth it. I like to know that I can look my friends in the eye after an album of ours comes out."

Paul's biggest complaint is with their publishing house. "We don't write down our arrangements, although we can all read music laboriously," he explained.

The men who write out the arrangements for the books containing our songs don't know anything about folk music and do arrangements as they'd be done for orchestras. The only song book that has the correct chords for guitar is the 'In Concert' one. As for the rest of them, forget it."

PAUL EMPHASIZED that they only copyright their arrangements and not the folk songs themselves. He spoke of their copyright troubles with such songs as "Freight Train" and "Stewball" (are they public domain or not?)

"And then there's the song about Samson and Delilah," he added. "Everyone swore that the Reverend Gary Davis had written it, and then I found an old recording of the song by a bluesman named Willy Smith that preceded Davis by about twenty years."

Paul feels that the trio have an obligation to support causes because they are human beings, although he realizes that their being famous makes their opinions more than simply those of individuals.

"It works the other way, though, too," he said. "None of us has taken a public stand on Viet Nam because we don't agree. Mary thinks we should get out, Peter agrees with the present policy, and I'm in the middle."

As for Joan Baez, Paul thinks of her as a "kook."

"Life has been very good to me," he said as he gathered up his suit coat and guitar and returned to the stage, "and I haven't had to make many sacrifices. I feel the least I can do is pay my income taxes."

UMass Co-Ed To Hit Seventeen

Three Massachusetts college freshmen — a Weymouth girl who attends the University of Massachusetts and two Wellesley girls—are making their debuts as magazine fashion models on the pages of a national publication.

Maija Bergs, of 22 Christine Terrace, Weymouth, is featured in the January issue of Seventeen Magazine (on newsstands December 30). She is among 24 girls selected to personify the nation's most accomplished teens.

To find these girls, Seventeen's editors screened thousands of young women under twenty. The winners were brought to New York to pose for the 20th annual "You the Reader" issue, devoted to contributions of talented teens in every field.

Maija Bergs, who was on the Marsha Jordan fashion board, won fourth place in the Bobbie Brooks National Scholarship Competition. She plans a career in fashion, working in a large store.

Maija Bergs, a UMass freshman, models a knee-length madras shirt for the January Seventeen Magazine.

Today, U.S. Rubber is involved in many fields including atomic research, oceanography and space research. One of our representatives will be visiting your school soon. Check with your placement office for the exact date and time.

Intramural Report

By DAVE JARNES

The Baker Bruins used their superior height to full advantage in pulling away from the previously unbeaten Webster Rams in the second half to triumph 48-32. Ohlson and Meehan, the Bruins' two big men, combined for 35 points.

In another key East league battle, the Chadbourne Maroons, who are the defending dorm champs, suffered their second one-point overtime loss at the hands of the Baker Baracudas 46-45. Ron Chase with 13 points paced a balanced Baracuda attack.

The Baker Buffaloes, who have only lost to the Rams, rolled over the Greenough Garfields 47-22 as league leading scorer Webster tallied 21 points. As a result of Monday's action the Baracudas lead the league with an unblemished record while the Rams, Bruins, and Buffaloes are close behind with one setback apiece.

The Mighty Untouchables set a record for field goals (55) and points scored while whomping the Gunners 119-40. Big Franz Von Brodsky with 33 points and Al Garsys with 28 paced the attack.

Gus Peabody with 17 points led the Courtesy Taxis to a 57-41 triumph over the Capitalists. The Moody Blues clobbered the Midgets 73-42 as football players Stevens and Harrigan combined for 41 points. Rounding out the independent slate, the Frosh Bombers defeated the College St. A.C. 62-39 as Vaccaro hooped 24 points.

Form prevailed in the fraternities as ZN continued to roll along by beating SPE 49-25. In other games KS repelled a strong effort from BKP in winning 43-36, LCA annihilated SAM 84-28 as Steve Shea scored 26, TEP bombed PSD 68-33 with Rich Erickson leading the way with 22 points, AEP toppled PMD 41-21, and TC edged QTV 42-30.

In bowling QTV and PSD took 6 of 8 points from LCA and TEP while KS and AEP swept ATG and PSK. BKP split with ASP 4-4, and PMD took 7 of 8 points from TKE as Dick Pinto's 526 was high for the night. The second game of the PMD-TKE match ended in a rare tie, 551-551.

Rifle Team Drops Close Match to Maine

The UMass rifle team lost to Maine at Amherst, 1270-1258 in its most recent contest. Unfortunately, the Redmen were below their usual strength due to the loss of senior Howard Burbank earlier in the week. Nevertheless, the team fired its best match to date and came within just 13 points of beating Maine, defending Yankee Conference champions.

Although the Maine team carried only two seniors they were characterized by excellent depth. The Maine coach reported that over 80 students, compared with 15 for UMass went out for their rifle team, and they were still in the process of cutting down to the best 10.

However, the UM top five, led by team captain Homer Davis and followed by Maurice Case, John Gallagher, Al Medeiros and John Bergs came very close to upsetting the powerful Maine team. The Redmen actually held a 7 point edge going into the standing, the last position, when the Maine team overcame the deficit and went on to win.

The rifle team has improved steadily since the beginning of the season. With their two toughest matches over with, the team is ready to post some victories.

Gymnasts Defeat S. Conn.

By AL RICE

The varsity gymnastics team kept its home record clean by beating Southern Connecticut State College 136.4-114.0 shortly before the vacation started. The UMass girl's team opened their season the same night against the same team and also came out on top.

Southern Connecticut managed to win three of the seven events in the varsity competition, but UMass won side horse, trampoline, high bar, and parallel bar all by large margins over the visitors.

SCSC put on its best performance in floor exercises, the first event of the meet. Harold Hauben scored an 8.1 to beat out UM's Dave Lizotte, who failed to reach the eight point level. Wayne Weissman of the visitors took third to aid in the 22.10 team score for the event. UM took the lead after the side horse when Bob Leclair won with an 8.55 for a sparkling routine. Southern Connecticut placed Hauben third, but their overall event scores were very low, and UM went seven points up.

Lizotte won the trampoline, and though he was the only one on the UM team that recorded a respectable score, the Redmen took the first three places. Al Carver and Toby Kasavana showed improved routines that could score highly their first time, as would be expected, but as the season progresses each likely will be bringing home higher marks from the judges.

Steve Brown and Dick Pecorella both scored in the fives on the horizontal bar when the Redmen edged Southern Conn by less than a point. They lost by about the same margin on the long horse, however, when Hauben registered an 8.9 and Weissman recorded an 8.45. UM more than made up for it on the parallel bars with a total of 24.15. Hauben tied Steve Brown for first place but none of the other SCSC scores came close to their 8.4. High scores by Jack Bradbury and Rich Booth boosted the UM total to 120.1 with only the rings remaining.

With Jim Dusenbury sitting out the event, UM lost by 10 on the rings. Mike Sadoski of Southern Conn was high man with a 7.80. He had a good edge over Pete Grosso and Bob Pajak, the two highest UM finishers. The 16.40 that Southern Connecticut won in the event boosted their final score to 114.00. They had beaten Queens College 136-116 in their first meet.

The University's girls team opened their season with a good win over the same team, 85.15 to 77.60. The meet featured Marianne Davis' return to competition after a serious accident last summer. She was the big gun in the scoring with an average of 8.24 in the four events, three of which she won. The only event she didn't win was the uneven parallel bars in which teammate Sue Clancy staged a terrific performance to score an 8.7 victory. Others on the UM team who had a good night against Southern Connecticut were Maryanne Gawlinski on the balance beam and Marion Smith in the vaulting event.

Saturday both teams return to action with home meets at the Boyden Auxiliary Gym. The girls play host to the Western Massachusetts high schools' leading gymnasts in a 1 p.m. meet, and at 7 p.m. the varsity men's team engages national champion Penn State in an Eastern Gymnastics League meet.

Redmen Impressive In Southern Tour

By HOWIE DAVIS

On December 17 the University of Massachusetts pulled into Blacksburg, Virginia, after a 17 hour bus ride, and nearly drove the favored Virginia Tech Gobblers off the basketball court. The Redmen were a ten point underdog but fought gamely all night while coming out on the short end 91-88.

The Redmen started a team which had Billy Tindall (6'5") at center. The front court for the Gobblers had big Bob King (6'11") at center and two forwards who went 6'8" and 6'6". Believe it or not the top three rebounders in the game were Tindall (12), a remarkable Frank Stewart (10) and Jim Babyak (9).

Except for the opening minutes of the first half the Redmen led throughout the first 20 minutes. Their margin was up to 10 points at one time and they led at halftime 52-46.

The second half was a bit different. King managed some nifty tip-ins off rebounds, and there was nothing the undersized Redmen could do about it. Clarence Hill, with 14 points in the first half, couldn't find the bucket in the second half. It was the exact opposite for Babyack. The forward hit 15 of his 19 points in the last stanza.

Tindall led the Redmen in scoring with 26 points. Only King was higher in the game with 28. The only difference was that Tindall's shots were from the outside while King did not sink one outside of three feet.

Head coach John Orr and assistant coach Jack Leaman had nothing to be ashamed of. Their men showed the fans a well-coached ballclub. Nearly every southern sportswriter had nothing but praise for the Redmen.

The secret of the game for UMass was hustle on offense and the press on defense. The big play of the game was a three-on-one break that the Redmen couldn't negotiate. The score was 86-86 at the time and Tech took the lead from there.

It was the first time in the history of Virginia Tech that Negro ballplayers played in a Varsity ballgame.

Saturday night UMass took on Alabama, losers to Clemson in the opening game Friday. Alabama lacked the great height of Tech but made up for it on the beef. Once again UM was to drop a close one, 79-73.

The Alabama game started off slowly and the Redmen held a slim 6-5 lead with five minutes gone in the first half. The lead switched hands 11 times in the first stanza with UMass holding a halftime lead of 39-38.

The second half saw the Crimson Tide take advantage of many UM mistakes and pull away to an 11 point, 69-58, lead with only ten minutes remaining. The Redmen fought back gamely and narrowed the margin to two, 75-73 with 44 seconds left. UMass had the opportunities in those closing seconds but couldn't cash in. 'Bama picked up two buckets on easy layups to close out the scoring at 79-73.

Clarence Hill was selected on the AA Tournament team along with the tourney's MVP, John Wetzel from Tech, Harry Hammonds from 'Bama and Randy Mahaffey and Jim Sutherland from runnerup Clemson.

Virginia Tech won their own tournament for the first time by defeating Clemson 72-62. UMass had the top two scorers in Hill with 43 and Babyak with 40.

Once again the Redmen had nothing to be ashamed of. They gave it all they had. The fans adapted the Redmen as their home team against Alabama.

Sunday morning the Redmen embarked for New Brunswick, New Jersey, to take on Rutgers Monday night. Rutgers had just knocked off Boston University and were early season conquerors of mighty Princeton. It was a ten hour ride from Virginia to New Jersey and the Redmen were finally to show the results of thirty hours on the road.

Once again the Redmen led at the half, this time by five points. In the second half, however, UMass faught in a state of exhaustion. Bob Lloyd, the Rutgers high-scoring guard, popped in 37 points as the Scarlet Knights pulled away from the Redmen and won 101-88.

This game was marked by the most questionable officiating of the trip. In the second half, Frank Stewart, driving toward the bucket, was seemingly fouled by his Rutgers defender. Instead, Stewart was charged with an offensive foul. This has to be the turning point of the game. UMass was only down by five at this point.

Hill was outstanding again, scoring 37 points to match Lloyd. Most of his buckets came in the waning moments of the game when the final result was clear.

The final game of the trip took place against Fairfield University, the team which had beaten Boston College. The score was tied 41-41 at the half, and the Redmen took a five point lead at the opening of the last stanza.

However, with the score tied 70-70 Fairfield pumped in 14 straight points, 10 within a minute and eight seconds. UMass shot 56% from the floor, but once again lost the battle of the boards. Hill was high with 26 points. Tindall was next with 21. Fairfield had four men in double figures, three with more than 20 points.

In one sentence: UMass played good basketball against much bigger and heavier teams.

Redmen Win Easily Over AIC

By JERRY RADDING

of the Springfield Union
University of Massachusetts went like the wind Tuesday night as it swept American International, 98-81, before 2,000 fans in Butova Gym.

Using their pressing, ballhawking defense and fast-breaking offense to easy advantage, the Redmen streaked in front in the first half and made it a runaway early in the second half.

THE VICTORY broke a four-game losing streak and evened the UM record at 5-5. AIC, which had won five straight with a climaxing decision over Springfield in the holiday tourney last week, now stands 5-4 for the season.

The Yellow Jackets zone defense gave the Redmen brief troubles. At the 10-minute mark the home team was on top, 17-15 and a little later AIC held its last lead at 22-19.

Then, UM went into its press and a 12-point string started the visitors on their way.

BILLY TINDALL, the big man, and Clarence Hill, the little man, had themselves a ball under the boards. Their layup binge was simply unstoppable.

Tindall tossed 33 points and had 20 in the first half while the Redmen were rolling to a 45-32 bulge at the rest period. Hill used his silky touch for 32 points. With that kind of two-man support, the visitors didn't need much more.

If there was any hope of AIC making up the 13-point halftime deficit, it all went out the window soon after the second half started.

THE REDMEN came out running once again and Hill and Tindall made it a rout. By the midway station of the second half, AIC was buried under a 71-46 avalanche.

Frank Stronczek finished with 31 points and 24 rebounds, but he was no match for Tindall under the hoop. A lot of the Moose's points came late in the game when the UM subs were on the floor.

Jim Calhoun had 14 points and Henry Payne 11 for AIC.

FREE THROWS—The Redmen, considered small in their own league, looked pretty big Tuesday night. Jim Babyak scored only eight points, somewhat under his 21-point average, but the Easthampton lad worked hard on the boards and also was a handy assist man. Payne came through with a dozen assists, but had a bad shooting night. Tindall was 13 for 18 and Hill 15 for 27 from the floor. The 6'5" sophomore fouled out with five minutes to play. . . UM plays host to Providence, the Holiday Festival champion, on Thursday night. . . AIC is at home to Colby on Friday night. . . In the preliminary the UM frosh trimmed the AIC yearlings, 91-58, with Joe DiSarcina scoring 18 for the winners. . . Jim White had 17 for AIC. . . Summaries.

Dining Commons Raise Still Being Discussed

by MARYANN BROWN
Staff Reporter

A petition by the student workers of the Dining Commons to raise their wages from $1 an hour to $1.25 an hour is still pending a decision by Mr. Gerald Grady, President Lederle, Mr. Morrissey, and Mr. Martin.

The issue was raised in October when student workers attempted a strike for a $30 meal (the price paid by the full time employees). As the students do the same type of work as the regular employees and more often are relegated to the dish-rooms where working conditions are not as pleasant, they felt that they were entitled to the same price on meals. Another bone of contention was the fact that the regular employees were earning at least a minimum wage ($1.35 in this state) while students were paid only $1. The attempted strike proved ineffectual.

Following the strike, one of the student workers, Miss Victoria Cincotti, met with Mr. Grady, Business Manager at the University, to discuss the student's grievances. Mr. Grady explained that giving student help a $30 meal would entail changing their status from student help to that of a regular University employee. This would involve taking out taxes, Blue Cross - Blue Shield benefits, and insurance. The student would have to work a set number of hours and there would not be the leniency shown for exams or studies which now is practised. Since some of the workers are undergraduates, who are paying for meals at the Dining Commons, the $30 meal would not be fair to them. Mr. Grady felt that going for a higher wage would be of greater benefit to all concerned. He stressed that this be done responsibly, and agreed that a petition would be a responsible means.

A petition was drawn up and circulated among the student workers of both the North and South Dining Commons. By December 8, 145 signatures were obtained.

The backing of the Student Senate was sought and received through the Student Senate Services Committee. They unanimously voted to back the bill. On December 8, at 10:00 P.M., Senator Kevin Downs asked that the bill be brought to the floor out of turn, as the petition was to be handed in the following Friday and he felt it should have Senate support. He presented the bill and there followed a lively debate, with Senator Lou Lucens and Senator Betty Chambers arguing that the Senate give its support. The bill was passed with one dissenting vote.

It is understood that the funds for this student advance would come from a trust fund, which it was found does have a surplus for "amortization and future improvements." There are $60,000 now allotted for student wages at the Dining Commons. The raise in pay would involve $6,700. It was assured that no taxes would be deducted from the $1.25. The University has an agreement with the Internal Revenue Service that no taxes will be deducted from any student wage.

On Friday, December 10, Miss Cincotti handed the petition to Mr. Martin, Director of Food Services.

Student employment is a type of scholarship on campus. Whereas other departments on campus are paying $1.25-$1.50 for student help, and considering the nature of the work at the Dining Commons, the petition for $1.25 is a valid one. Since most students do not have transportation for off-campus jobs, they are restricted mainly to what the campus offers. An increase in the cost of living affects the student as well as everyone. Since the student workers at the Commons are doing the same work as the regular employees, the discrepancy in the wage to each shows an injustice to the student because he is a student.

PAST SENATE DUTIES VARIED IN 1965

Due to Student Senate actions this semester Yahoo has been allowed to publish, the classes will budget their funds, and the men's dossiers, in their current form, have been abolished.

Most Senate work is being done in committees. Both the standing and ad hoc committees have expanded in scope this semester.

President Dacy in connection with his program to revamp the Senate has outlined current as well as newly proposed duties of the nine standing committees. (Budgets, Finance, Services, Public Relations, Academic Affairs, Men Affairs, Women's Affairs, Student Government Affairs, and Publish Board).

Among the newly formed ad hoc committees are those concerning the JFK Memorial Library on campus and the one investigating the married housing situation. A joint committee was also set up in connection with the Faculty Senate to discuss Fine Arts.

In connection with the Grading System at UMass a report was submitted in which a large number of schools were contacted in reference to grading. This report has been turned over to the administration for further action.

Within the Senate itself much has been done to expedite the inner working of the group.

Question and answer periods prior to each regular meeting are held to cut down the amount of discussion concerning bills as they are brought to the floor.

President Dacey has also initiated a policy whereby each committee is to hand in written reports, available to all senators so that they can be up to date on all actions and issues.

The senate also voted passage of a President's Council within the Senate. Thus enabling the President to have qualified permanent assistants at his disposal.

"Broadway Premiere" For Winter Carni '66

The excitement of Broadway will pervade the UMass campus Feb. 14-20. Against a guaranteed backdrop of snow, Winter Carni 1966, will introduce its theme, Broadway Premiere, 1966, to the entire campus community.

The week begins to the tune of My Fair Lady with our fair ladies modeling the newest fashions. This will be immediately followed by an off-broadway premiere, Tales of Terror, a film trilogy of Poe's short stories.

Half time at Thursday night's basketball game against the University of New Hampshire will feature a special program. Our own Band and Cheerleaders will perform and noisemakers will be distributed.

Winter Carni Ball continues the Broadway Premiere with its theme "Wonderful Town," preceded by a reception for Government Volpe and other state officials.

For sports enthusiasts Saturday will include a ski-trip, toboggan run, and the annual Winter Olympics. Also in store are a awaited snow sculpture competition, pancake breakfast and the long tradition, Festivities continue into the evening with a Rock and Roll Concert featuring The Four Seasons followed by fireworks to light the way to various parties or to the Stockbridge Snow Ball.

The final production of our Broadway Premiere will be the Sunday afternoon concert including such entertainers as Glen Yarbrough.

Snow is guaranteed to usher in and remain throughout Winter Carni Week. The guarantee is underwritten by the Class of '67. BEWARE of Ice Palaces and have a "snow-ball."

Colleges to Report to Boards Lowest Quarter of Class

Editors note: The following is the continuation of questions and answers concerning the draft.

Q What about part-time students?

A The law didn't give them much. The only way a part-time student has a chance now is to convince his local board that he should be deferred. The local board has the power.

We can't tell a local board what "full time" is for a student. The educational institutions don't have anything approaching an agreement on what constitutes "full time."

Q How about graduate students?

A I had registrars coming to me in the late part of last summer who said, "You're getting too many graduate students. A flock of undergraduates are left. Why pick on graduate students?"

Q Do you plan to put a limit on the number of years of graduate work that will be accepted for draft deferment?

A No, I'm not planning that. Q Will graduate students have to make certain grades?

A You're forgetting all the time it's the local board that makes these decisions.

Q What about a boy who demonstrates in some way against the Vietnam war, or the draft, or anything?

A You are joining things there that I don't like to have joined, because you're talking about demonstrating against Vietnam or against the draft. Right there is where the line is.

The boy that was out in front of our building—we had him out there two or three weeks ago, tramping up and down. He was around a day or two—I suspect he was against the war. I don't know what he was carrying because he could carry anything he wanted to.

Q Was this a boy picketing in front of Selective Service headquarters in Washington?

A Yes, we've had several. Whether they are registrants for the draft or not—I presume they were, but we didn't pay any attention to that, because nobody was violating the law.

Now, had they come into my office and prevented me from working, or somebody else's office—that would be interfering. The law says that nobody, by force or otherwise, shall obstruct the operation of this law.

Q Did the director of Selective Service in Michigan then order the induction of those demonstrators?

A No, it's not that simple. He talked with us about it, and I told him to notify every State that had a registrant in the group. They knew who these people were because the police had their records. Six were women, a couple were college professors, and around a dozen others were registered for the draft, including several deferred to go to school.

I suspect some of the others were 4-F—rejected by the armed forces for some reason—there generally are some of these in that kind of group—and some were over age. Some might be veterans. If they were veterans we couldn't reclassify them. The only thing you can do is report them to the Justice Department.

APO-GSS Book Exchange

Once again next semester the APO-GSS Book Exchange will provide an opportunity for students to save money by buying and selling used text books. The Book Exchange will be held in the Middlesex room of the Student Union from Jan. 31-Feb. 11.

HOW IT WORKS: The Book Exchange allows the seller to set his own price for his books. He is then given a receipt, and the book is placed on sale. By placing his books on sale at the Exchange, the seller saves himself the trouble of finding buyers for books that are not usually in great demand in a smaller market, for example a dormitory. When the book is sold the receipt number is posted, and the seller may claim his money.

Prospective buyers are advised to attend their first classes before buying books, but the Book Exchange will start receiving books at 10 a.m. on Registration Day. Don't forget to bring your used books back after intersession, and take advantage of the time and money saving services offered by the Book Exchange.

SENATOR ASKS CHECK ON B. A. REQUIREMENTS

Due to a current misconception, Ed Hakesky of the Academic Affairs Committee of the Student Senate has an investigation concerning requirements for the B.A. degree.

It seems that some students and advisors think that there has been a recent change in the required math and science courses.

A check with the college of Arts and Sciences revealed that students are still required to take the following: one year of biological science, one year of natural science, and one year of math.

Baker Hosts Dean To Debate Change

Baker house, one of eleven dorms whose residency would be changed by an administration proposal, hosted speakers from Housing, and the Deans of Men and Students Tuesday night.

A crowd estimated at 250 by Baker Senator Richard Homan listened to Dean of Students William F. Field and Director of housing John C. Welles explain the administration stand on the proposal.

Robert Brooks of the Dean of Students office and James Burke of the Dean of Men's office were present to answer additional questions.

OTHER DORMS ARE hopping on the "lets save our dorm" effort and Dean Field said Johnson and Hills Houses have also invited him to address their students.

The remaining dorms to be affected by the proposal include Leach, Crabtree, Greenough, and Butterfield.

Lewis will be closed for renovations and Brooks will become an experimental all senior women's dorm. Stockbridge's County Circle dorms are being razed for a new road.

AT BAKER, DEAN Field emphasized the plan is just a proposal and "nothing, absolutely is final."

Welles said Baker students may be allowed to take over one or possibly two dorms in the quad if enough interest is shown in staying together. He said "we are not going to force you into a high rise dorm."

Baker House president George Scheurer presented Dean Field a 236 signature petition to protest the transfer of Baker residents. Burt Freedman, the other dorm Senator, listed spirit and participation as reasons the dorm should remain intact.

Draft Questions

But the real issue—and we haven't got over to the public—is that a deferment is a particular privilege, with certain rules that go with it, and when you violate the rules that go with it, you don't have the privilege.

The point we haven't sold to the public is the fact that the Congress in this draft law said everybody is in 1-A until by local-board action they get out of it.

Your natural habitat is in 1-A. The Congress said everybody has got to go, and the President shall decide when.

Christian Science Talk, 'Life Unafraid,' Tonight

WILLIAM HENRY ALTON

"Life Unafraid", a lecture sponsored by the Christian Science Organization at UMass, will be presented this evening in the S.U. Colonial Lounge. The speaker will be William Henry Alton.

The purpose of the lecture as described by the organization's president Bruce Elmer is to show that "because God is infinite good and all powerful there can be no reality to an opposing power called evil, in any form."

Alton, a former businessman, has devoted his life to the Christian Science religion as a teacher and Practitioner and is a noted lecturer and spokesman for Christian Science.

Affiliated with the Campus Religious Council, the Christian Science Organization provides an opportunity for campus Christian Scientists and interested parties to increase their understanding of the religion.

Soviet Press Quizzes Brigitte Bardot

Reprinted from MOSCOW NEWS

G.S. You are very popular in the Soviet Union after our filmgoers had a chance of seeing your films.

B.B. Which ones?

G.S. Babette Goes to War (B. B. — "Good"). Babette-Brigitte Bardot was a great hit. Soviet audiences have also seen La Verite.

B.B. Oh yes! I like that film even more.

G.S. In the Soviet Union I was showered with questions about you, with respect to your latest film — Viva Maria.

B.B. I hope Viva Maria will be shown in Moscow. That would be wonderful!

G.S. People in the Soviet Union would like to get to know you at closer quarters.

B.B. I'd love to show them Viva Maria at the first opportunity. I really think it's a good film. It would give your filmfans a good laugh. It's crazy.

G.S. Do you know Soviet cinema?

B.B. I've seen several films and I think Soviet cinema is splendid.

G.S. Which films have you seen lately?

B.B. I can't remember the titles. There was one about a soldier coming back from his leave. Oh yes — The Ballad of a Soldier.

Terrific! Then I saw The Crying Horse at a small cinema in the Latin Quarter. It's a very beautiful and poetic film. I think it is rather old. It is about a horse that the peasants are trying to sell; every time it is sold it comes back to its stables because it likes home so much.

I think that Soviet films are very poetic, but not silly, you understand. An amazing beauty of feeling. Great force and drive. In short—they're outstanding.

G.S. What would you like to see in the Soviet Union?

B.B. I think I'd like to see everything—the architecture and all the things so unusual for me. I'd like to just roam about, but I don't know if I'll have a chance. I'd like to see the countryside. I am absolutely mad about the countryside — cottages, villages...

G.S. To meet the people?

B.B. Of course. I'd like to meet the people very much, to learn how they live, what they like and dislike. I find that kind of thing marvellous. But I don't mix with people much.

* A film by Mark Donskoi.

TALK TO FOLLOW BERGMAN FILM

The talents of Ingmar Bergman can again be seen when the Student Union Movie Committee presents THROUGH A GLASS DARKLY Sunday, January 9 at 7 P.M. in the Student Union Ballroom.

The first in Bergman's trilogy examining man's relationship to God, this film describes 24 hours in the life of a family on an isolated island in the Baltic: a young woman, her father, her husband, her younger brother.

The young woman is a latent schizophrenic, changing swiftly and without warning from apparent sanity to madness, yet aware of her prostration before the dark forces compelling her to degrade herself. Her father is frightened at his own detachment from her terrible disintegration. Her husband, a doctor, is helpless to prevent her relapse. To her brother, a 17-year-old burdened with problems of adolescence, she represents the female sex with all its mysteries, provoking now repugnance, now attraction, even lust.

Following the showing of the film a discussion, led by Richard Stromgren of the UMass Speech Dept., will be held in the Colonial Lounge.

UMass Chess Team At Intercollegiate Championships

Fordham Univ. was the scene during Christmas vacation of the U.S. Intercollegiate Chess Championships. UMass was well represented by the following 8 members: Dave Palmer, Ed Kotski, Vaughn Sigouin, Gil Daniels, Tony Abate, Bill Szymanski, Roger French and Kim Sargent.

In the tournament, which brought together 40 schools from all parts of the country including Canada, Mexico and Puerto Rico, the UMass team finished among the top 15. Palmer, a freshman, was top scorer of the team, and Kotski managed an excellent game against the top-ranking master from Yale, Gould. Kotski, in an adjourned position held the master to a draw when play was resumed.

Palmer and Kotski both figured high in the Pittsfield chess circles and Kotski is presently UMass champion and one time holder of the Western Mass. title. Sigouin has been both champion of the Lowell Chess Club and the Northeastern league. Daniels has previously tied for 1st place in the amateur division at the Greater Boston Open.

The chess club will sponsor a tournament during second semester which will be open to any faculty or full time graduate or undergraduate student. The tournament will be U.S.C.F. rated and many prizes and trophies will be awarded. For further information or for pre-registration contact either Gil Daniels, 316 Wheeler; or Vaughn Sigouin, 319 Plymouth.

Should There Be Finals?

Yes!

It's that time again — the end of the semester, and we are again faced with that semi-annual shock — finals!

To many the eight days of scheduled exams mean nothing more than mental and physical torture where the word 'all-nighter' is muttered with an awesome confidence. But why should this week, or some would rather think of it as a one hundred and ninety-two hour visit to hell, be such a crisis? For the sorrowful reason that to many the outcome of a semester's work is determined by the outcome of a week of finals. In short, many find themselves in a situation where "it is all up to finals". Due to this crisis then, any means possible are usually used to accomplish a one desired end — a good grade.

However, looking at finals in a critical light; what real good are they? Do they have any value other than in getting a grade? Well, one obvious answer is that they at least force the student to review what material he had had over the semester. In this way he has the opportunity to tie the ends of a particular course together into a more concise picture. One result of this is that he would gain a better understanding of the material. Another result would be that he would undoubtedly retain much of what he had learned. Isn't this really the desired end of an education — to remember what one has learned so that it can be applied in the future.

Therefore, finals do have some value — a value found far beyond the superficial one of obtaining a satisfactory grade. However, it is unfortunate that the superficial side is always stressed. If it were not, then, maybe the eight days of finals would not be such a period of crisis—particularly to freshmen who have not experienced them. The point to be made is that finals should not be thought of as an end in themselves, but rather as a means to an end — the acquiring of knowledge.

Jerome S. Horvitz
Associate Chairman

No!

Now is the time when all good students should have a supply of aspirin, tranquilizers, and pep pills on hand. The value of final exams is open to question when the expectations of professors and the reactions of students are examined.

It has become an acknowledged fact that finals have the power to either "make or break" a student. Consistent with the fact that these exams cover both previously tested and new material, a final commonly accounts for forty to fifty percent of the total grade received. In languages, at the introductory level, the examination is often the total reflection of the semester grade. Surely, the work of one and a half weeks, executed under poor conditions, cannot be evaluated in terms that equalize it with the work of the entire semester.

The anxiety and tension that accompanies the emphasis placed on these exams often leads to frustration in the efforts of the students. During exams a student often reaches a state of anxiety in which he worries to the point where he cannot attack his studies calmly and with an optimum concentration.

When so much is demanded of a student in such a short period of time he tends to enter his exams with a certain amount of ambition. However, after about three exams either his strength or his spirit dwindles and his effort tapers off. As a result, his subjects suffer, merely due to the order of their scheduling.

Lack of sleep, coupled with anxiety, time, and the amount of material covered, all contribute to a harrowing experience for the student. All of these factors, which the student has little control over in practice, compound to make final exams a poor reflection of individual efforts and knowledge.

One More Seat for #3,201

By JACK DEAN, EDITORIAL STAFF

Will complaints never cease?! Basketball season is now well underway and already several students have discovered a point with which they've decided to take issue.

"It's unfair," they grumble, "that the Department of Public Safety has limited student seating in Curry Hicks to 3,200. After all, every undergraduate student pays $15 per semester for the privilege of attending these games. What happens to student # 3,201?"

Goodness!! This sounds like a crusade in the making! But is this sound reasoning?

In the first place, any reasonable person will recognize the dangers of overcrowding. The student seats on the floor cannot possibly hold more than 3,200 safely, nor can the reserve seats in the balcony hold more than 1,000.

Secondly, some students seem to have the idea that the University couldn't care less about such problems—a misconception which sometimes leads to misunderstandings. The fact is that the Athletic Department has even considered closed circuit television as a possible solution to the seating shortage. However, a lack of equipment and facilities has made such a course of action impossible this year.

Right now, the department is using the only plan possible. Once the 3,200 student seats have been filled, reserve sales will be halted, and students will be allowed to fill the unsold reserve seats.

Finally, we completely demolish any rumblings with this question: How many games will draw more than 3,200 students? The Connecticut and Providence home games are usually sell-outs, but if the disappointing turnout at our opener against B.U. (1,446 out of 9,500 who pay athletic fees) is any indication of UMass enthusiasm, then some people might be in for a surprise. However, if these people have any solutions...

GOOD LUCK ON FINALS!

Letters To The Editor

"WE'LL COME"

Is it a Professor's duty to take attendance in his classes? Is a student under any obligation to attend every one of his professor's lectures? The answer to both these questions is "no". Marvin Saines in his letter, Jan. 5, suggests that a penalty be enforced for absences just before and after vacation time. Does the University have the right to impose this penalty? I think not.

A professor has the obligation to be at class (he's paid for it), to give the class information pertinent to the course, and give exams to test their knowledge on the material. If a student wishes to cut a class before or after a vacation (or at any other time, for that matter) it's his decision and responsibility. In what is called a democratic society each of us has the right to decide whether or not to attend a class. I'll agree that cutting classes is not a good idea, but after all, who's wasting who's time and money? We are paying a good sum of money and spending four years of our lives trying to get an education. If anyone wants to waste his money and time I think that's his business (and if he wastes enough time he'll soon flunk out anyway.)

If a professor has poor attendance at his classes maybe he should take a look at himself and consider what kind of a teacher he is. In all probability, if a teacher holds an interesting and stimulating class he won't have to worry about class attendance. We'll come! If a student knows that important material is being given in each class, even those before and after a vacation, he'll be there.

Possible alternatives to penalties for absences could be:

1. teachers who know their subject, who enjoy teaching, and are able to KEEP THEIR STUDENTS INTERESTED.
2. ending classes at noon on the last day before a vacation, which would enable students living at a distance to reach home at a reasonable hour. This is a big reason why so many classes are cut; students cannot get rides at late hours.

IN RESPONSE TO MR. SAINES' LETTER

To the editor:

This letter is in response to Mr. Saines' of Jan. 5 recommending the addition of one-half credit to a student's graduation requirement as a penalty for cutting a class on days adjacent to a vacation. I want to argue that such a measure would be 1) unfair, 2) unnecessary 3) degrading, and 4) would generate more problems than it would solve.

1) First, each class hour is fifty minutes in length, and I see no reason why one particular class (or lab) time interval should be considered sacred simply because it occurs next to a vacation. Fifty minutes is fifty minutes, and three hours is three hours. By Mr. Saines' suggestion, a student who cut just one class might face a penalty much greater than a student who cut ten times.

2) If an instructor wishes to assess special value to a near-vacation class, he has all the means he needs at his disposal already. He may, as some do, assign a nexam of whatever value he wishes—there is no call for the added threat of enlarging a student's graduation requirements.

3) THE VALUE of a class is primarily to the student himself; he, and not the instructor stands to lose by missing a class or lab. I consider the proposed penalty an affront to the student's own personal judgment. By placing so high a price on these classes the rule in effect says that the student is not qualified to decide for himself whether a certain class is too valuable to miss. While such a policy may make a student irate, it does little to improve his judgment.

4) In the last analysis, the enforcement of such a regulation rests in the hands of the individual faculty. Not all instructors are as concerned as Mr. Saines about pre-vacation cuts. The rule places these teachers in the awkward position of having to enforce a regulation which neither they nor (I assume) their students favor. And I cannot see how the rule could be either fair or valuable unless it were enforced all over campus.

ENFORCEMENT of the rule would mean more work for an already heavily burdened Registrar's Office, due to new variations in graduation requirements. Presumably, these variations would have to be indicated on one's academic record. I am not quite sure what the reaction of a graduate school admissions officer would be to a transcript which boldly indicated the number of times a certain UMass senior had cut class near vacations. I rather doubt if this would enhance his appraisal of either the University or its students.

Mr. Saines indicates that the students who cut are "imbued with that just-before-a-long-vacation indifference and frivolity." I presume that, as a humanitarian, Mr. Saines intends his proposal to "save" the students from their own "indifference and frivolity" — that seems to be the spirit of his letter. But I have pointed out that the weight of enforcing the rule rests on the faculty and administration. These people would effectively be penalized by having to force the students to take advantage of what is already before them to accept or reject at their own consequences.

It is my suspicion that Mr. Saines is "imbued with that I don't-enjoy-talking-to - empty - chairs feeling and he need not be upset by it.

The New School Song

By SAM SPARC

Alright, Collegiates, let's sing along with the bouncing ball; sing even if it hurts. You all know the tune—it's to Paul Anka's (the original greasy kid) big hit, Diana. The syllables upon which the beats fall are in boldface. The UMass title is Manure Down the Sewer or Are They Trying to Make This Place into a Respectable College or Have they Just Flipped? Everyone sing together now, one, two, three (and for our Math department that last bit is advanced calculus).

(First verse sung by an echo in the halls of Stockbridge Hall)

I'm so old; you're but a lass
Just since '47 you've been called UMass.
In my time no homework was done:
Just lookin' at cows and a havin' fun.
All we had to know was horse manure;
But those great days are now down the sewer.
Oh Please remember me;
I'm Mass Aggie

(Following verses sung by disillusioned student, answering echo)

President Lederle's takin' that away:
He's snapping it up just like a vulture.
"A liberal education" is a what he say;
What was wrong with plain old agriculture?
You and I are going bizerk,
We never expected to do any work.
Oh, please, return to me;
Mass Aggie
Hours of hard work every single night
It's past two a.m. before I get to bed
It's got to stop, we have got to fight
Y.I.'s please picket; get us UNaccredited.
New high standard profs from schools of repute
They think we're good students—do they have fruit?
Oh, please, return to me;
Mass Aggie
It's about time that we let off steam:
Who the hell needs a bowl football team?
Who wants Herman Melville or David Grayson?
Who cares about the new School of Business Administration?
I want a gay life, not a silly education;
Let's go to Dacy for some POWER legislation!
Oh, please, return to me;
Mass Aggie
(Sung one week later)

Time moves on—there's no stopping that,
Like liquor flowing from every frat.
I guess Mass is rising, there is no doubt;
Cause I just discovered that I flunked out.
Where does my kind go from here, I ask you?
Well, I guess there'll always be that gut B.U.
But I'll always remember thee;
Mass Aggie
Oh, oh, Mass Aggie

LIKES LIBRARY

To the Editor:

The University Library is a fine institution that promotes standards of higher education without underprivileging student, graduate student, or faculty member. It is an institution that respects the achievement of the individual in an academic field recognizing that this accomplishment merits certain attentions. Should one really feel so bitter toward the University Library because of its respect for individuals who have attained higher goals in a cultural atmosphere? Why should faculty members not be given this respect and be permitted to keep books indefinitely? I'm quite sure that any human person would return a book upon request to a desperate student. Besides, a student may approach a professor personally and ask him if he may borrow a certain book. After all, professors are human and considerate too — or didn't you know?!

Prize Biography

Prof Publishes Book

Dr. William E. A. Bernhard

A prize-winning biography of Fisher Ames, brilliant Federalist orator from Dedham, has been published by Dr. Winfield E. A. Bernhard, associate professor of history at the University of Massachusetts.

"Fisher Ames, Federalist and Statesman," was given the $1000 Manuscript Award for 1964 by the Institute of Early American History and Culture at Williamsburg, Va. The book was published recently by the University of North Carolina Press for the institute, which is sponsored jointly by William and Mary College and Colonial Williamsburg.

Dr. Bernhard was graduated from Phillips Academy and Harvard University and holds M.A. and Ph.D. degrees from Columbia University. He has taught at Columbia and Duke Universities and is currently at work under a UMass Faculty Research Council grant editing and completing diaries of Dr. Nathaniel Ames, Fisher Ames' brother.

Dr. Bernhard's life of Ames is the first full-scale biography of the Federalist statesman.

A child prodigy who entered Harvard College at the age of 21, Ames became a leading scholar before he was 20, then turned to law as a career at the age of 23. He soon entered politics and served in local and state offices before being elected to the Massachusetts ratification convention with adopted the federal Constitution.

At the age of 30 he was elected to the First Congress, defeating the veteran Boston leader Samuel Adams. Re-elected to the next three Congresses, he became the outstanding congressional orator in an age accustomed to oratory.

JOINT PRAYER TO BE HELD

A first among the Christian Community in the University will take place the evenings of January 18th and 19th. Two joint services, the first at Newman Hall and the second in the S.U. Ballroom will be conducted by Roman Catholic and Protestant students. Short addresses will be made by Monsignor Powers and Chaplain Scott.

The joint meetings are in observance of the Week of Prayer for Christian Unity sponsored by the National Council of Churches and the Roman Catholic Bishops Commission for Ecumenical Affairs. Similar meetings will take place throughout the world.

The Week of Prayer has been observed for several years, but this is the first time in history that it has been jointly sponsored by all Christian churches.

The Service, which is of a half-hour's duration, includes hymns, Common Prayer, scripture, The Apostles Creed, the Lord's Prayer and a Blessing.

All faculty, staff and students are invited to take part in this significant first. Sponsorship in the University community is by the Newman Club and the Protestant Christian Council.

Job Openings for
R.O.T.C. Graduates

WASHINGTON, D.C.—The U.S. Armed Forces have many openings in science, technology, research, administration and other specialized fields for qualified R.O.T.C. graduates, delegates to the 56th National Interfraternity Conference were told by the Army's top expert on the reserves.

The three-day meeting, attended by a record-breaking number of 1100 delegates representing 2,200,000 active and alumni members of 61 national social fraternities, closed here last week.

Brig. General Thomas A. Kenan, USA, a graduate of The Citadel, stressed that the Army, for instance, is well aware that today "a more intense and more dedicated spirit pervades the college campus". For that reason, he added, the Army is "now working on a revised curriculum to improve the R.O.T.C. program".

General Kenan, who is Acting Chief, Office of Reserve Components, Department of the Army, also emphasized that although many R.O.T.C. graduates are assigned to duty with troops, many others are given duties which, he explained, bear little, if any, resemblance to troop duty.

As examples, he cited officers assigned to budget duties for the Department of Defense, who handle logistics and the procurement of vast quantities of equipment and supplies; who are assigned to personnel management, international politico-military, and other specialized duties.

Regardless of the duties to which the R.O.T.C. graduate is assigned, "the Service", General Kenan added, "will offer him an opportunity which he may never have again to develop experience and ability in leadership and administration". These are qualities, he pointed out, that are usually indispensable to a successful business executive, engineer, lawyer, doctor, teacher or other professional man.

About 45% of the 100,000 officers now serving in the Army are R.O.T.C. graduates, the general said. The R.O.T.C., he continued, is now the "primary source of Army officers, which is the reason why we must have a successful R.O.T.C. program".

Trustees Announce Sabbaticals For Twenty-Nine Faculty Members

The University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees recently approved sabbatical leaves for 29 faculty members for the 1966-67 academic year.

By academic tradition the sabbatical is a period set aside for faculty study, research and writing, which may or may not involve travel.

FOUR OF THE 29 sabbaticals granted are to members of the English department. Jules Charnetzky, Assoc. Prof., will work for a year in Belgrade, Yugoslavia, to complete a book on the literary work of Abraham Cahan. Audrey R. Duckert, Assoc. Prof., will do field work for her "Linguistic Atlas of New England" for a year.

Prof. Joseph Langland will spend a year in Europe writing poetry and making background studies; Melvin H. Holf, Asst. Prof., will edit the unpublished plays of William Percy and work at the British Museum in England for a year.

Ronald Hauser, Asst. Prof. of German, will take a half-year to study the "Gruppe 47" literary movement in Berlin. John H. Fenton, commonwealth Prof. of government, will spend a year either in the Netherlands, studying government organization and operation, or studying politics in the industrial areas of the northeastern U. S.

Howard O. Quint, head of the history department, will spend a semester in Spain and Greece, studying American intellectual and modern political history, and working on a biography of Gaylord Wilshire.

Clarence Shute, head of the department of philosophy, will spend a semester in Europe, working on a book on the philosophy of religion.

Ernest Dzendolet, Asst. Prof. of psychology, will spend a year in Amherst, writing a book on sensory psychophysiology. C. Wendell King, sociology Prof., will do research for a year on social changes in Greece or the United Arab Republic.

Henry N. Little, Prof. of chemistry, has been granted a year to conduct biochemical research at the University of London and another member of the chemistry department, Robert L. Rowell, Asst. Prof., will spend a year in celloid chemistry research at Clarkson College of Technology.

IN THE ZOOLOGY department, Harold Rauch, Prof., will study the biochemistry of gene action at City of Hope Medical Center in Duarte, Cal.; while John L. Roberts, Assoc. Prof., will spend a year at the University of Bristol, England, conducting research in comparative physiology.

Catherine Hanifan, Asst. Prof. of speech, will spend a year at the University of Florida working on a doctorate in speech pathology.

Sidney Schoeffler, Prof. of economics, will spend a year in New York and Amherst preparing a book on microeconomic studies.

A STUDY of standards used by arbitrators in labor disputes will be made by John T. Conlon, Assoc. Prof. of management, who will spend a semester in Amherst, New York and Detroit on the study.

Harold E. Hardy, Prof. of marketing, will study quantitative, behavioral and theoretical developments in marketing for a year in several parts of the U. S.

John W. Anderson, Prof. of accounting, and Robert N. Lentillon, Assoc. Prof. of accounting,

UMass Prof Gets Ph.D.

William W. Metcalfe, University of Massachusetts assistant professor and assistant state 4-H Club leader for the UMass Extension Division of 4-H and Youth Work, has been awarded a Ph.D. in education by the University of Chicago.

Dr. Metcalfe spent a two-year study leave at the University of Chicago from 1961 to 1963 working on the degree and completed his dissertation this year.

His dissertation subject was "Concepts of Education Held by Informal Adult Educator," based on studies he made of county extension workers in Indiana and Illinois.

A Springfield native, Dr. Metcalfe holds a B.S. degree from the University of New Hampshire and an M.S. from UMass. He became Hampshire County extension agent in 4-H Club work in 1950, left a year later for Army service that included command of an infantry company in the Far East, and returned to the Hampshire County post to serve from 1953 to 1958, when he assumed his present post.

Final's Recipe

by SALLY DOLGIN
Feature Staff

Line the baking pans with quiet and isolation. Spread the studying utensils over the waiting work counter, and turn the oven on to Concentration 100%. You are now ready to make your "Finals' Success Cake."

Opening the recipe schedule book, you can find the order of the ingredients.

Foremost on the list is French 107. One teaspoon of proper nouns, two cups of intransitive verbs, and a half pint of L'Etranger are sufficient for the first beating.

Now you must sift the dry ingredients: statistics, entomology, and calculus.

One and one-half cups of physical education sugar will sweeten the mixture, but it takes very little time to prepare.

Before adding the history eggs, you must be sure to separate the yoke facts from the white philosophy.

A couple days of intensive beating should bring the mixture to the right consistency, but beware

Can a stranger tell at a glance what your personality traits are; how good you are at keeping secrets or meeting deadlines? Is there a way you can establish what kind of a personality your professors have when they write comments and grades on your final exams? Yes, say Graphoanalysts — experts who make a scientific study of handwriting.

Members of the International Graphoanalysis Society are becoming increasingly enthusiastic as their day-by-day experiences substantiate their findings. Here are some.

of over-mixing, which will make the dough too thick and hard to digest.

The cake is now ready to be poured into the little blue exam pan, where it will cook for two hours per ingredient. No turning back is allowed; if you have forgotten anything, it was due to your poor planning.

Five thirty Thursday afternoon the baking is completed, but the cook is ready to collapse from fatigue and nervous apprehension. Will your "Finals' Cake" be a success?

Angels Promote Better Relations

Have you ever noticed the navy blue skirts and white blazers being worn around campus? These outfits and the girl wearing them belong to Angel Flight, an organization affiliated with the Arnold Air Society of the Air Force ROTC Program.

The national organization of Angel Flight was founded in 1952 with the UMass John P. Granville Squadron forming in 1963.

Since its formation, Angel Flight has helped promote better understanding of the Air Force and its relation to community and university life.

For instance, last year Angel Flight helped Amherst put up its Christmas decorations, distributed information concerning the Air Force at the Amherst Fair and the Eastern States Exposition, and decorated and sold tickets for the Military Ball.

Homecoming Weekend and Legislative Day saw the Angels hosting for the attending legislative leaders.

Among Angel Flight's many social services are the area old-age homes and recently the Belcher-town State School. Present projects for the State School are plans for a Valentine's Day party and a program of individual attention for each student. Both projects also involve Arnold Air Society.

All of the ideas used in the past and those to be used are discussed and exchanged among representatives of all the Flights in the U.S. in a joint conclave with Arnold Air Societies, held this year in Dallas, Texas.

Angel Flight's projects may not be particularly earthshaking, but they make people happy. Its latest plans are to hold a dormitory cookie sale on Jan. 10.

Renaissance of Polish Graphic Art Expected Here

The gouge, the burin or the lithographer's crayon were tools frequently used by many Polish artists who cannot be called exclusively engravers or print-makers. The rich tradition of that branch of art includes, since the XVIII century, many creative efforts of men who were primarily painters.

Polish graphic art attained a wider appreciation in the thirties due to the activities of the Warsaw artists' group "Ryt", whose members, seeking to confirm the "independence" of graphic art, turned their attention to it. These media helped them to stress the probity of their craft and to propagate their rather rigorous esthetics.

In the post-war search for a new style in graphic arts, again an important role was played by painters. Graphic arts confronted with the experiences of the painter's studio, attained a greater boldness, and enriched their forms of expression. In recent years we witness a new stage of development in the graphic arts liberated from the bonds of two narrow esthetic limits, enriched through the contact with other branches of art and, at the same time, upholding a technical mastery.

Contemporary Polish prints are far removed from naturalistic representation but they are not too often purely abstract. The majority of artists experiment with the object, exploiting a wide range of approaches—up to the limits of semantic allusions and poetical metaphors.

Within this broad framework arise many genuine personalities. Most of the artists work individually—they do not organize workshops or support common artistic programs.

JERZY PANEK perhaps shows best the new style in woodcut: all the virtuosity so cherished some time ago and all the minute effects of texture are gone! The artist demonstrates with all sincerity and authority a convincing simplicity of means, avoiding every mark of brilliant artistry.

With somewhat similar means, STANISLAW WOJCIWICZ laureate of the Ljubljana Graphic Arts Biennale, creates an entirely different world of his own. He is attracted by the elusive shapes of dreams, and his imagination, stimulated by Italian or Yugoslav landscapes, construes—according to his own poetic rules—plastic symbols of a wanderer's itinerary.

Diametrically different are the subtle, ephemeral works of JOSEF GIELNIAK, who attains

See-Through Toilets for Girl Smokers

DUBLIN — Girls at an underwear factory here went on strike recently after employers put a transparent door on their powder room.

A plastic door was put on the room after their employers said that the 150 workers were spending too much time in there.

Smoking is banned on the factory floor and the employers claimed that the girls were taking time off in the toilet for a quiet puff.

The battle of the door began several weeks ago. Officials of the company—Eve of Dublin, Ltd.—got the wooden door taken down and replaced with a curtain in an effort to hurry up the girls.

The girls protested. The employers then took the curtain down and replaced it with a plastic door.

"But now people can see in," the girls said, and stopped work. Talks were not fruitful and a strike notice was served on the firm. This expired and the 150 girls stopped work.

effects of incredible virtuosity with the help of a mere piece of linoleum and a single burin. The linocuts of that practically self-taught artist grow slowly, ripen through months of work accomplished in the seclusion of a sanatorium.

They reflect on their vibrating surfaces the inner anxieties of that young artist and his mature thoughts about things final.

Another recent Polish prize awardee at the Ljubljana, MIŁCZYSLAW WEJMAN, Professor at the Academy of Fine Arts in Cracow, in equal parts a painter and an engraver. He knows all the mysteries of graphic technicalities and eagerly seeks new possibilities based on a painter's experiences.

From purely linear etchings, he goes to synthetic, compact forms of woodcuts. Recently he obtained effects of pictorial softness in his linocuts by the mechanical texture of metal plates. His odd, tattered "Curtains" acquire an almost organic life.

Painter practicing printmaking frequently use the medium of lithography. Nevertheless, they do it with a less categorical "graphism". JAN TARASIN's lithos are black and white or almost monochromatic transpositions of his canvases, based on unreal relations of objects in space. Their lithographic versions concentrate on the problems of light and movement within that space.

Lithos by TADEUSZ LAPINSKI, laureate of the last Cincinnati Museum Biennale, are near to the effect of his paintings. Their concise forms together with refined and intense colors add a sense of scale to the lyricism of his "Landscape arrangements".

A high degree of skill and a richness of imagination—avoiding the noisy ostentation of some surrealist works—are traits of LUCJAN MIANOWSKI's lithos. Upon the primary vision of the Paris cathedral he superimposes hieratic portraits of kings, remembrances of oriental icons, reflections of the Middle Ages and a classical antiquity. Enclosed in the contour of a stone, their surfaces live by an intense play of lights and metallic colors.

ANDRZEJ JURKIEWICZ, author of an excellent technical handbook of graphic arts and professor at the Warsaw Academy of Fine Arts treats the traditional media of etching and aquatint with his great knowledge achieving a supreme lightness and flexibility of line and a balanced harmony of tonalities.

Among interesting technical experiments one should point to the electrotyps by STANISLAW RZEPA. This medium permits the artist to obtain shades and hues impossible to achieve in traditional aquatints.

The work of another Ljubljana laureate, Stefan Suberliak, derives its stimuli out of different contents taken from country life. The peasant, the nobility of his hard labor, and people's characters fashioned by this kind of life—those are the only themes that interest the artist. The monumental, condensed form of his black and white linocuts and lithos, devoid of the ambitions of technical experimenting, contain a richness of poetical climate, a boldness of new and vivid concepts.

"Our Boys" Get Christmas Cards

Throughout this past week the men and women of Hamlin and Wheeler Dormitories have been swamped with letters of appreciation pouring in from every rank of the military from South Viet Nam for their efforts to brighten the Christmas holidays in the jungles.

The students autographed sheets which were run off and attached to more than a hundred Christmas cards. These in turn were addressed to every military unit now stationed in Viet Nam.

Many students have received personal letters. One young lady from Hamlin received a letter from a Lieutenant Colonel who graduated from Mass State in 1933. He happened to recognize her name as being one of a co-ed he dated here. He wondered if there might be any relation. There is!

The Wheeler-Hamlin project was part of a Christmas week-end planned by the two dorms. Voluntary collections were taken up for the Viet Nam project and to buy presents for underprivileged children who were treated to a party at Wheeler House on Sunday, December 12. A mixer was held in each house on this week-end also.

Co-ordinators of the program have praised the generosity and spirit of the students in both dormitories. Dean William Field said of the project: "I was extremely pleased . . . the concept was a sound one, and the co-operation a first."

Mrs. Emily Raymond, head of Residence at Wheeler, called the project the "best thing that ever happened to Wheeler." Mrs. Elsie Rich, head of Residence at Hamlin House said, "It was just great."

Students Send Greetings To Andersen Combat Men

Andersen combat men received a package of Christmas cards this week from students at the University of Massachusetts extending the spirit of Christmas beyond their New England campus.

The cards, signed by more than 200 students of Hamlin House and Wheeler House (University of Massachusetts dormitories) were delivered to combat units.

Charles Bradshaw, social chairman of Wheeler House, said in Ouida Baraglia, social chairman of Hamlin House, said that their accompanying letter that they " . . . hope that these cards will extend the spirit of Christmas beyond our campus to the brave young men in South Vietnam."

The units receiving the cards on Andersen, although not in Vietnam, are almost daily flying B-52 combat bombing missions over South Vietnam in support of United States and Republic of Vietnam forces there. The B-52 air crews and many of the support personnel are on Guam in a temporary duty status (TDY) having recently been deployed from Strategic Air Command bases on the mainland. Their units, the 454th Bombardment Wing, Bombardment Wing, AFB, Miss., and 320th Bombardment Wing, Mather AFB, Calif., arrived on Guam in December, replacing the 7th Bombardment Wing, Carwell AFB, Tex.

The cards from the Massachusetts students were the first of this type received by the base and the 454th Bomb Wing. Col. William T. Cunikey, 454th Bomb Wing commander, and Col. Van R. Parker, vice commander, distributed the cards to the men of their unit.

Colonel Cunikey said, "This Christmas wish from Massachusetts means a lot to the men here. TDY since this year they will be away from their home and families at Christmas time."

"The separation is not really anything new however," said the Colonel, "because SAC personnel have been separated from their families on Christmas before—detering war by being alert and ready to counter aggression anywhere on the globe."

"The motto of SAC—Peace is Our Profession—takes on a special meaning for SAC men during this holiday season. The everyday efforts of these men," said Colonel Cunikey, "are dedicated to living this motto of preserving the peace."

Redmen Fall To Powerful Providence, 87-73

By RICK CURWIN

Last night at Curry Hicks Cage, UMass hosted the sixth ranked Friars from Providence College. The Redmen fought gamely and the contest wasn't decided until late in the game when the Friars held on to their 10 point lead. The final score was Providence 87, UMass 73.

The Redmen showed that their ratings at the beginning of the game. UMass opened a four to nothing lead. They held the Friars scoreless for four minutes, but were not awed by the Friars press Michael Riordan scored and the Friars were underway. Riordan who played a great game for Providence, was high scorer and rebounder. Long shots by Jim Babyak and Billy Tindall matched shots but Riordan, Blair, and Jim Walker. The lead seasawed back and forth until about three minutes were left in the half. Providence then opened an 8 point half-time lead, on a spectacular tap in by Jim Walker and free throws were not awed by the Friars press, by Bill Blair.

The first half was played slowly and carefully, although both teams made some serious mistakes. Bill Blair, the 6'3 senior forward picked up his fourth foul late in the half. Bill Tindall had 13 points in the first half and tied Riordan for the lead.

The biggest trouble for the Redmen was the great pressing three two defense of PC. UMass just couldn't penetrate for the good shot. The usually good percentage shooter Clarence Hill was only 2 for 9, and Jim Babyak was 3 for 10. Even so, UMass still had a higher shooting percentage than the Friars. The greatest difference was in the rebounding department where Providence had the edge, 32-20.

The second half pace was much faster as both teams got hot and started shooting quickly. Hill came back along with Babyak to regain the touch and hit in clutch situation. Walker, Benedict and, Riordan didn't miss either as clubs traded baskets. Then at the fifteen minute mark, UMass got a big break when Bill Blair fouled out. He left the game with 14 points and 6 rebounds. The Redmen failed to capitalize because of the great balance of the Friars.

With the lead remaining at about ten points, Walker showed why he is one of the best college players in the country. He shot with great accuracy and handled the ball like it was part of him, while making amazing passes from all angles. It looked like UMass might come back, cutting the lead to seven, but the depth of the Friars was too much.

A lot of credit must be given to the Redmen who fought hard until the buzzer. The biggest difference was in the rebounding and great defense of Providence. The shooting percentages were very close. High scorer for The Redmen was sophomore Bill Tindall, who has been very impressive in his last few games. Bill has lost some of the sophomore jitters and has begun to shoot with confidence.

Clarence Hill wound up with 20 points despite the Providence press. Gary Gasperack covered Jim Walker one on one the whole game and did a creditable job. He also got 8 rebounds.

The next home game is against the defending Yankee Conference champions, UConn, Feb. 2.

6'5" Gary Gasperack had the task of guarding Providence great Jim Walker last night and performed admirably.

Intramural Report

By DAVE JARNES

The final week of activity before finals was highlighted by several overtime games as well as some head on collisions amongst league contenders.

Defending dorm champion Chadbourne Maroons, who have had their problems this year with two overtime losses, upset the Baker Bruins 55-47 as four men hit double figures while holding Bruins' star Mike Ohlson to just 11 points. Meanwhile the Webster Rams remained in contention for the East league title as they got back on the winning track with a 67-49 verdict over the Grants. Burt Cady paced 4 men in double figures with 23 points while Pete Gavrilin was high for the losers with 22 markers. In the only other dorm game on Wednesday the Eagles topped the Garfields 32-24.

ZN continued to roll along with a 58-37 victory over a hustling TEP team as Brian Lajoie had 23 points for the victors. LCA had an easy time with SPE as they won 59-39. Steve Shea was high man with 30 points while Al Sagesse led Sig Ep with 18.

KS jumped on ATG 70-31 as Bob Detore and Bob Goglick combined for 40 points. Four men hit double figures as TC bombed SAM 77-40. In other games AEPi topped BKP 42-31, and QTV beat PSD 44-30.

The Untouchables, who are threatening to break all team offensive records, had little trouble in defending the College St. A.C. 86-23. John Yates headed four men in double figures with 16 points. The Shlubs tipped the Midgets 46-41 and the Zeros upended the Phantoms 44-30.

In Tuesday's independent games the Innkeepers remained unbeaten by wholopping the Land Architecture 63-37. The Philosophers beat the AIEE 59-34, and the Banshees edged the Forestry Club 45-38.

Mark Widdiss scored 22 points in leading the unbeaten Maples to a 56-37 triumph over the Hoovers. John Allison had 19 points for the losers. Steve Whalen's 22 points were instrumental in the Hickories' near upset of the Oaks, but the Oaks kept their slate clean with a thrilling 56-54 overtime decision.

In the south league, the two southwest dorm entries, the Colt 45's and the Commanches remained unbeaten with impressive victories. The Colt 45's topped the previously unbeaten Birch 35-31, as Economakus and Ferry combined for 28 points. Rick Levy's 20 points enabled the Commanches to cruise past the Limes 49-27.

The backcourt pressing tactics of Jack Thomas and Tom Rossi helped the Aces to topple their bigger adversaries, the Webster Hawks, 56-54. Chet Zabek and Ed Rist combined for 34 points in a losing cause. Ray Stanelis came through with 43 points in leading the Patriots to a 77-25 killing of the Hemlocks.

In other games the Flaming A's romped 57 to 30 over Phallics as Steve Brown hooped 24 points. The Black Bears defeated the Cherrys 43-35.

Pucksters Drop Three In Overtime

By DAVE HANSON

The Redmen hockey team, enduring a poor run of luck, finished last in two small college hockey tournaments over the Christmas vacation. In the Amherst Invitational Christmas Tournament, held at newly completed Walter S. Orr Rink at Amherst College, The Redmen dropped three squeakers to local competition.

In the opening round, the pucksters drew Amherst College. First period action saw Greg Stone, Umie star Sophomore, convert for a lone tally on a breakaway at 4:02. The second period saw a bit more action with each team tallying twice. In the third stanza the two teams traded early goals, and Amherst tied the score at 7:02. Eight minutes of action filled hockey followed with the Redmen failing to score on two power plays during back to back charging penalties on the Jeffs. At 15:24, Jeff Goff beat UMass goaltender Bob Eddy on a pass across the crease, to boost our cross-town rivals into a 5-4 lead. The Redmen came alive at this point and pounded Jeff netminder Stu Johnson with 10 shots in the next three minutes. On a picture play goal, Sophomore John McShane tied the score on a perfect pass from high-scoring Junior Ed Polchlopek to force the game into a sudden death overtime. The Redmen couldn't seem to click in the clutch and could muster only one shot on goal before Jeff Willius netted the winning tally at 7:02 to defeat the Redmen 6 to 5, in one of the best matches of the tourney.

Opening the second day of competition, the Redmen faced Hamilton College which had succumbed to Williams on the previous evening. First period action developed into a defensive battle with neither team succeeding in netting a score. Hamilton hit the scoreboard early in the second period, but Coach Steve Kosakowski's pucksters went out in front on tallies by Polchlopek and Feldhoff midway through the period. Hamilton came back to tie the score late in the period and as the buzzer went off it was tied up at 2-2. In the third period Hamilton came alive and Sophomore Bob Eddy saved the day by turning back 19 shots in a hard hitting battle. Once again, the game ended deadlocked and the Redmen faced their second overtime in as many games. Hamilton center Jim Goodfellow slid into the net behind the puck for the winning score only 42 seconds after the period began.

In the battle for eight place in this first Christmas Tournament ever held in Amherst, The Redmen met Yankee Conference rival Connecticut. In a cleanly contested rink display — only three penalties were called — the Huskies hit for two quickies in the first period within ten seconds and added a third early in the second period. The Redmen, obviously not at their best after two overtime losses made two in the third period off the sticks of Juniors Ed Graney and Ed Polchlopek but Connecticut scored again as the Redmen dropped their sixth in a row 4-2.

Following a break for Christmas the pucksters journeyed to the University of New Hampshire for the third annual Yankee Conference Tournament. In the first game of the evening Vermont edged out Connecticut by a score of 6-5 to gain a berth in the final. The Redmen completely outclassed by a strong UNH sextet and performing before a completely partisan crowd succumbed to an onslaught of Wildcat tallies, going down in defeat 14-1. The Redmen never gave up the battle and performed admirably through the entire game. Junior Bill Skowrya accounted for the lone UM tally midway through the third period on a setup from Ed Polchlopek and Capt. Ed Quimby.

In the consolation game, it was UMass vs. UConn again and this time the game was rough and hard-hitting. UMass Sophomore Greg Stone opened the scoring at 12:45 of the first period on a tip-in from linemate Bill Gammell. UConn came back with two quick ones, the second

Little Redmen Triumph

By TOM FITZGERALD

Rally for 15 points out of the last 17 down the home stretch, the Mass Freshmen took the measure of Providence's Frosh last night at the Cage, 87-72. Coach Charlie Kingston's charges, whose play seems to depend on the caliber of their opponents, shot well, rebounded strongly, and hustled throughout the game in nailing down their fourth in six starts.

With the Friars threatening, 60-56, on a basket and a pair of free throws by Bill Judkins, the Little Redmen came to life with nine minutes left. Mike Gemei started it off with a hoop from outside. Then Joe DiSarcina, who played his usual steady game, sunk a foul shot and assisted on a nifty lay-up by sub Eddie Griffith. Griffith was fouled on the play and dropped in a free toss.

Griffith threw in a 30-footer, and after Al Hayes had hit for Providence, Ron Nowakowski scored two straight, the latter on a real show-stopper from underneath. Griffith bucketed both ends of a double technical foul charged against Providence, after the Friars had only four men on the court, and finished off the deluge with a swisher from the corner.

After UMass had taken a 77-58 lead, Providence fought back to make the final 15-point spread. The Redmen held leads a 22-16, at the first 10-minute mark, 43-34, at halftime, and 60-52, after the third quarter of play.

Mike Gemei paced all scorers with 24 points, many on his patented half-hook-half-jump shot from in close. Ron Nowakowski, showing the soft touch on nine field goals, scored 20. DiSarcina totalled 17, while Griffith came off the bench to pop 13. Judkins led the Friars with 23 markers.

Mountaineers Conquer Mt. Washington

By PAT ANDREW

Mt. Washington, New Hampshire is the ideal place for a post-Christmas vacation—that is, if you happen to be a mountaineer. Three members of UMass Outing Club—Tom Lyman, Sally Peters and Frank Singleton — are just that.

Anyone interested in winter climbing or hiking should check the Outing Club Bulletin Board on the second floor of the Union, near the elevators.

on a power play, to round out first period scoring action. The scoring was reversed in the second stanza with Junior Third-liner Dave Eaton and John McShane scoring for the Redmen and Defenseman Frank Burke tallying for the Huskies. The UMies scored two goals early in the third period off the sticks of Ed Polchlopek and Bill Skowrya to give them a 5-3 lead. The defense faltered, however, and Connecticut netted two to end the game in a 5-5 deadlock, necessitating another sudden-death overtime. Once again the Redmen couldn't score when the chips were down and the decision went to the Huskies at 5:28 off the stick of the crowd's favorite, Frank Capizzo.

Special mention must be made to UMass's Sophomore goaltender, Bob Eddy who turned back 222 shots over the tournament schedule, including 63 against New Hampshire for an average of 44.5 per game and a stop percentage of .867.

The Redmen met Army at West Point yesterday and finish out their first semester schedule at home against the University of Pennsylvania in what promises to be an interesting game

Lederle Reflects On Growing Campus

By JIM FOU DY,
News Editor

In his office in South College overlooking the campus, President John Lederle reflected on the growing University now stretching from Amherst to Worcester and on into Boston.

The problems of the President expand with the changing institute and with the growing rate of UMass some plans need revision almost as soon as they are affected. This is the case with UMass-Boston which, despite its short existence, is already being marked by the President for drastic change.

"The gas building will satisfy our needs for three years," President Lederle said. "We may move into surrounding buildings but it is not necessarily going to be the permanent site... we hope to have a decision on a permanent site within a year."

UMASS-BOSTON will remain a commuter college, but the question, as President Lederle explained, is whether the location should be in the heart of the city or—because of the concept of a University—be on the outskirts with a lot of room.

Concerning the latest addition to the University, the President commented that "Worcester is a good site for the Med. School." President Lederle also feels that the taxpayers suit over the decision to locate the Med. School in Worcester has no future.

"The legislature has made the decision," he noted. "The only thing the suit will do is raise bad feelings in Worcester toward the University."

COMMENTING ON his open office hours held before Christmas, President Lederle said that he received some "new slants on some campus issues."

"I always learn from student contacts," he admitted and reflected with a smile that the issues bothering students on campus are the same as when he was in college.

However, from his talks with

If there had been a theme to last night's Special Freshmen Convocation it would have centered around the concept of student individualism and activity and that the University environment is not the "depersonalizing" factor that many hold it to be.

After being welcomed back to the campus by Maroon Key President Bob Tobin, the 200 swing-shifters in attendance heard President John Lederle call the University a "dynamic institution" and offer to them the opportunity to become "a part of our growing environment."

President Lederle explained that the "swing-shift" program is the University's most recent attempt to accept the maximum number of students that the campus can handle.

The President warned the students that they would find the campus "a little busier than in the summer" but assured them that everyone at the University "really wants you to get through."

"We are interested in you as individuals," he continued. "We want to help you solve problems but we can't do this if you don't ask."

President Lederle told the returning freshmen that despite the rapid growth of the campus, faculty and administrators are still "concerned" about their welfare.

The convocation was then addressed by Class of '69 president Gary LeBeau.

LeBeau pointed out the "unique situation" which the swing-shifters have been presented with and warned that the students should begin now to "establish oneself as an individual part of the University."

After explaining the functions of the Class Executive Council, LeBeau once again welcomed the "special freshmen" and expressed a final hope that they would "take advantage of all campus opportunities."

Next to address the convocation was Student Senate President Richard Dacey who explained the workings of Student Government on campus and stressed what he considers its most important aspect—"an effective organization to bring the will of the students to the administrators."

In the same vein, Dacey pointed out that the Student Government is the spokesman of the students. "If there is something you don't like or if there is something you do like, I would appreciate hearing about it," he added.

Dacey then asked the swing-shifters to do him a favor: "If you can't become a senator or take an active part then at least take a passive part in Student government."

Here Dacey suggested that the students keep up to date of the affairs on campus and that they make their opinions known to their elected officers. Concluding the convocation was the keynote speaker, Dr. William Field, Dean of Students, who stressed that the conception of depersonalization at UMass was only a "myth."

Speaking very informally, Dean Field correlated his experiences with "small colleges and Big cities" to conditions at the University.

Refuting the cherished concept of a little, red, one-room school house as being "phony," Dean Field pointed out that although you "know everyone" at a small college "it fails to teach the need for independent decision."

The Dean noted the University's "incredible collection of capable brilliant professors" and he feels that it is from a school of this size that one "learns to profit from them."

Looking beyond just the academic years, Dean Field pointed out that no matter where a person settles down—San Francisco or Youngstown, Ohio

Orchard Hill's "Decisions"

Foreign Policy Program Opens Tues.

By JIM FOUDY,
News Editor

"Great Decisions", a nationally organized program for the study and discussion of foreign policy issues, will be offered for the first time in the Amherst area this year. The series, being presented at Noah Webster House, begins Tues. Feb. 8 and will continue for eight successive Tuesdays.

THE PROGRAM will present eight topics on issue of current importance in national affairs with four discussions open to the general public and four restricted to members of the program.

"Great Decisions" is a 12-year old program sponsored by the Foreign Policy Association. In co-ordination with the FPA, United Press International offers a weekly article to newspapers on "Great Decisions" topics and the National Television Network produces eight programs oriented to the weekly topics. Members are also provided with a 100 page Fact Sheet Kit with background and up-to-date information on the various issues to be discussed.

HEADING UP the area program is Dr. Luther Allen, faculty resident at Webster House. Dr. Allen feels that the program is one of "public extra-curricular education on related to issues that concern all citizens."

Dr. Allen explained that membership in the program is being restricted to 25 but that four of the programs will be held in the main lounge of Webster open to anyone in the Amherst community. The four closed sessions will be held in Dr. Allen's apartment at Webster House. All of the sessions will have a faculty guests whose field of interest relates to the given topic.

Dr. Allen feels that the program "fits in well with the programs being offered at Orchard Hill this year."

THE PURPOSE of the residential college is to broaden and deepen relationships between the community of faculty and students," he commented and noted that the program is suited to this concept as well as providing an opportunity for those unfamiliar with the Orchard Hill program to see it in operation.

The programs which will be held every Tues. at 7:30 beginning on Feb. 8 are as follows: (starred programs are open to the public)

- * Struggle for Vietnam—Feb. 8
- * Israel in the Arab world Feb. 15
- * Western Europe and the U.S.—Feb. 22
- * Sub-Saharan Africa—March 1
- * Russia After Khrushchev—March 8
- * Japan Resurgent—March 15
- * Latin America and the U.S.—March 29
- * Making Foreign Policy in a Nuclear Age—April 5

Among the guest speakers scheduled for "Great Decisions" are: Prof. of History Milton Cantor and Prof. of Govt. Dr. Luther Allen (Vietnam); Prof.

Karl Loewenstein, (William Nelson Cromwell Professor of Jurisprudence and Political Science, Emeritus, of Amherst College) and Lt. Col. Henry Tragle, U.S. Army, Retired (Western Europe and DeGaulle); Dr. Thomas Dilkes, Asst. Prof. of History (Russia After Khrushchev); Dr. H. Leland Varley, Prof. of English (Japan), Prof. of Govt. Edward Feit (Africa); and Prof. Wie.

The program is presently open for membership and the $1.00 subscriptions are being taken in the Webster House Library. Dr. Allen expects the 25 openings for regular membership to be quickly filled and hopes that people interested in the open sessions will also register as soon as possible since space in Webster lounge is limited.

U.M. Alumnae Honored In National Publication

Six UMass. alumnae have been chosen among "the nation's outstanding young women for 1965," and will be cited for their accomplishments in a book to be published early this year by the Leaders of Women's Organizations.

Sponsored by a committee comprising the national leadership of several prominent women's groups, the Leaders of Women's Organizations accepted for inclusion in the book all six entries submitted for consideration by the University.

Named as outstanding young women are:

MISS ELEANOR DANCEWICZ of Boston, a graduate of the University's class of 1960. Miss Danciewicz was recently appointed bank examiner for the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, an appointment which distinguishes her as the first woman bank examiner in New England and only the second in the nation.

MRS. GAIL T. MOSKOW graduated from the University in 1959. Mrs. Moskow was an IBM Systems engineer specializing in college and university administration for five and a half years. She is a member of the board of directors of the UMass Associate Alumni.

MRS. PAUL A. GAGNON, the former Mona Harrington, was graduated from UMass in the class of 1957. She has since received LL.B. and Ph.D. degrees in international law from Harvard, and has served as a legal counsel for the U.S. Department of State. She lives in Cambridge with her husband, Paul, also a UMass graduate (class of '50), who is chairman of humanities at UMass-Boston.

MRS. JAMES B. MCQUILLEN, the former Eleanor Nicolai, class of '56, is a physician now completing her residency in pathology at Robert Packer Hospital in Sayre, Pa. Dr. McQuillen received an M.D. degree from Boston University's School of Medicine, and completed two years of residency at Boston City Hospital's Malory Institute of Pathology. The McQuillens have four children.

MRS. MARTIN E. GORMLEY, the former Nancy Howes, is a graduate in the class of 1953. She received an LL.B. degree from Harvard, and is distinguishing herself in a New York City law practice with the firm of Kramer, Marx, Greenlee, and Backus. The Gormleys have one daughter.

MISS MARILYN GAULL, is a faculty member at UMass and an alumna, class of 1968. Miss Gaull is a lecturer in the department of English. She received her Ph.D. degree in English from Indiana University, and was a member of the faculty of William and Mary College prior to coming to UMass.

Harmful Drugs

Two Students Charged

Two University students denied charges of possession of harmful drugs January 14 in Northampton district court.

One pleaded innocent to charges of possession of and selling harmful drugs. The other pleaded innocent to having possession of harmful drugs. They are both represented by an Amherst attorney.

Police said that tranquilizers and pep pills, Dexidrine and Bliphetimine, were the drugs involved. The men were picked up by University Police. Amherst police and State Trooper Joseph Jagadowski aided in the investigation based on information supplied by University officials.

The case was continued to January 21 and was then further continued to March 25.

students the President has noted this paradox: "Students are always complaining about the size of the University but a majority of them fail to take advantage of faculty office hours."

President Lederle believes that the majority of the faculty are quite willing to talk to the students and he pointed out that this is the best way to breakdown concept of an impersonal university. Also with this concept of better student-faculty relationships, President Lederle discussed the latest idea in student living—the residential college.

Student residence halls are self-liquidating," the president explained and the construction of classrooms in a dorm means that the students are paying for their own academic facilities.

"I do not want students paying for classrooms which the state won't build," he said.

PRESIDENT LEDERLE sees as a solution the separation of academic and living facilities both within the area of a residential complex—a proposal which could possibly be initiated in the proposed northwest complex.

Also of concern to the President is the area of student publications and in particular the proposed student publications board, which he feels should "aid rather than censor" the student press.

"Student publications are getting to be big business," he noted and believes that a publications board would "help tighten up the organizations and make their experience an educational experience."

Standard Brands To Interview Here

$700 million food firm needs graduates for plant management, engineering, food research and development

NEW YORK: Standard Brands Inc., a giant in the nation's booming food field, today announced that their college recruiting program has been expanded extensively. Interviews are scheduled to take place here shortly.

With a whopping sales increase last year of 13% over the previous one, Standard Brands ranks as one of the fastest growing food processors in the country. Its products are a line of blue chip brands that include Chase & Sanborn Coffees, Planters Nuts, Baby Ruth and Butterfinger Candy Bars, Fleischmann's and Blue Bonnet Margarines, Royal Desserts, Tender Leaf Teas, Fleischmann's Yeast and a long list of bulk products sold to volume users such as bakeries, hotels and restaurants.

In discussing the college recruitment program, officials of Standard Brands stressed the immediate need for mechanical, chemical and industrial engineers with a Bachelor's degree. Also needed are chemists and food technologists, some with Bachelor's, others with advanced degrees.

Comprehensive training programs that are individually tailored and that include on-the-job training, are designed to fill positions in engineering, plant management and research and development.

Opportunities for rapid advancement to supervisory level in engineering and in plant management, and to project leader in research and development were said to be excellent. Salary increases are commensurate. A long list of new products, currently in development, point to enormous future company growth and increased job security.

Those selected for training by Standard Brands will receive full fringe benefits that include retirement plans, comprehensive group insurance and paid vacations and holidays.

Company officials urged graduates who are interested in a career with an unlimited future to sign up now for Standard Brands' schedule. Complete information about opportunities, training programs, and the Company is available in the Placement Office.

The Company's Technical Representative will visit your campus on Feb. 9.

Politella Is Chairman For NCCPA In N.E.

Dr. Dario Politella, associate professor of journalistic studies at UMass, has been appointed a special New England district chairman for the National Council of College Publications Advisors.

The appointment was announced by Tim Reilly, Jr., of the University of Southern California in Los Angeles, NCCPA district coordinator. It is the first New England district chairmanship in the 11-year history of the organization.

NCCPA is an association of faculty advisors to student publications on more than 200 college campuses in the United States and Canada. Besides meeting for workshops once a year in conjunction with the Associated Collegiate Press — the association of student editors—NCCPA is active in seven districts with local meetings to discuss mutual problems.

First meeting of the New England District will be held on the UMass campus in March, according to Dr. Politella. Invited to participate in workshop sessions on freedom of the college press, functions of faculty advisors and publications board relationships will be publications advisors of the more than 400 institutions of higher learning in the six-state area.

Dr. Politella is a charter member of NCCPA and was on the original steering committee established at Detroit in 1953 to form NCCPA. In 1954, he was named national vice-chairman. He has been advisor to student publications at Kent State University in Ohio, Syracuse University and Ball State University in Indiana. At UMass, he is yearbook advisor.

Picture-hanging Ceremony Honors Captain Dickinson

Mr. and Mrs. Mason Dickinson of 243 Amity Street, Amherst, Mass. were guests of the Department of Military and Air Science recently for a ceremony to hang the picture of Walter Mason Dickinson in Dickinson Hall at the UMass.

The ROTC building constructed in 1957 was named after Captain Walter Mason Dickinson and a portrait of him was recently made available for display. Captain Dickinson, a regular Army officer and native of Amherst, attended Massachusetts Agricultural College before entering West Point in 1876.

A Veteran of the Indian Wars, Captain Dickinson was Professor of Military Science at Mass Aggie from 1892 to 1896. After leaving Amherst he was assigned to the 17th Infantry, fought in the Cuban War and was killed in action at El Caney on 2 July 1898.

Third Faculty Recital To Feature Clarinet Music

The UMass department of music will present the third in a series of faculty recitals on Wednesday, Feb. 2 at 8 p.m. in Bartlett Auditorium. Joseph Contino, associate professor of music, will perform a program of clarinet music of the 19th and 20th centuries. His accompanist will be Dorothy Ornest, also a member of the music faculty. The program will include the Saint-Seans Sonata, Op. 167, Premiere Rhapsodie by Debussy, Honegger's Sonatine, Stravinsky's Three Pieces for Solo Clarinet, and Brahms' Sonata, Op. 120, No. 1.

Prof. Contino is active as performer, clinician, guest conductor, and consultant. He recently appeared as recitalist and clinician at Hebron, Conn. His work at UMass centers around the performance and teaching of woodwind instruments, particularly clarinet and flute. He also teaches courses in woodwind techniques and conducting. Because of his extensive experience in teaching and conducting school and community groups, he was recently assigned to conduct the newly-formed University Youth Orchestra, a group established in response to local need for supplemental activity in this area of performance.

Mr. Contino is a graduate of Oberlin Conservatory of Music and Columbia University Teachers College and he attended Ohio State University.

The recital is open to the public without charge.

The Antiquity of Finals

by JEROME S. HORVITZ, Associate Chairman

If some of you haven't noticed, it is now the beginning of a new semester, and we should now utilize this time to critically examine finals.

Let's face the proposition that finals are as much a part of this university as the existence of Old Chapel. In fact they'll probably outlast the old structure. However, because of their establishment in our educational process, finals should not be thought of as an unalterable ritual that cannot be improved upon. Inequities and injustices do exist. They should be corrected.

Finals offer very few alternatives particularly to the better student who has nothing to gain from them but the satisfaction of keeping a good grade. But, on the other hand, the poorer student finds that finals give him a last chance to "pull it out". Then why not this correction: a final should not be made compulsory to the student who has a 'B' going into it. In other words, the choice should be left up to the student if he desires to "risk" his grade and try for the 'A' or forget about the final altogether and settle with a 'B'. What an incentive this would be for all students to attain. For the prof. there would be fewer exams, and for scheduling purposes there would be less room, space and time to be set aside.

One final improvement should at least benefit the failing student. What if, with God's aid, he is capable of pulling the gigantic effort of obtaining a 'C' on his final. Isn't he deserving of a passing grade?

These improvements are believed to be quite reasonable. At least some of the inequities and injustice would be washed away if they were installed. But for some reason administration and student alike has made very little effort in clearing away much of the antiquity that surrounds this institution called finals.

Bah, on B.A. Requirements

by NANCY LEIBOVITZ, Editorial Staff

At UMass a student is compelled to complete two years of science and one year of mathematics in order to fulfill the B.A. requirements in the college of liberal arts. This practice is unfair because a student whose interests bend more toward the social sciences and humanities must spend precious time studying subjects which do not interest him nor enhance his skill in his major field.

If only one year of science were required, as is the case at such high-ranking schools as Tufts University and Smith College, an individual would have the opportunity to take electives that truly sparked his enthusiasm and brought out his own creative thought. Courses that, at present, simply cannot fit into the science-laden freshman and sophomore years, and courses which are too-time-consuming once specialization begins in the junior and senior years.

Opportunity for You

Professor Arthur Musgrave, in a recent journalism class, quoted some comments about news-writing that the Collegian believes may interest students who wish to acquire more skill at writing—a skill that is useful to anyone no matter what profession he enters.

These comments were made by Burges Johnson, former head of the College English Association, a former teacher of English at Amherst College, and the author of several books. He wrote:

"It cannot be merely coincidental that newspapers have trained so many writers who have distinguished themselves outside of the field of newspaper journalism. Their names are legend and range from imaginative writers such as Barrie and Kipling to essayists, biographers, and historians and writers of good verse.

"This record supports the contention that practice in any kind of good writing trains for any other kind of good writing.

"This training of the reporter has in the past emphasized certain techniques that tend to develop skilled writing in any field.

FIRST, there is the recognition of a sharp distinction between news and editorial, fact and opinion. Writing practice with this distinction in mind... is as good discipline for the imaginative writer as for the reporter of news events.

"SECOND, is an intensified consciousness of audience: an ability to imagine one's reader while writing, and to adapt word and style to the readers' understanding.

"THIRD, the acquired habit of getting to the point or purpose of the piece of writing as promptly as possible.

"FOURTH, the acquired ability to discover the element of human interest in dry fact, and then to emphasize that interest element without distortion of the truth.

"FIFTH, newspaper writing requires all possible evidence that assertions of fact have been verified... by a frequent use of direct quotation as well as by the frequent citation of authority.

If a student likes science, after one year he can continue to elect such courses, but those interested in the arts should not have to sacrifice their desires just because society is obsessed with a zeal for technological study!

One also should consider why a year of math is required for all liberal arts students. If a student is good at math he can elect it, but if he has no aptitude for it, all it will do is pull down his average and cause him to shy away from math courses forever. Subjects such as calculus and trigonometry lose their value if they are not practiced and in the working world they are not used enough to make them essential for a successful career.

Though all courses increase a person's knowledge, it is better to have students with a thorough interest and understanding of a few subjects rather than a spotty and inadequate understanding of many!

"If these several elements which enter into the training of the newspaper-writer explain his success in other fields of writing, there is no reason why they should not be utilized to some extent in all classroom composition writing."

Although the process of writing is the same whether the product is a news story, magazine article, short story, or editorial, news writing has the advantage of giving students training in the discipline of objectivity. In news writing, facts should be presented fairly and accurately after first-hand observation.

As Professor Musgrave pointed out, much of the writing done by college students is based on reading words in books and articles rather than on accurate observation of the flux of reality. Reporting for the Collegian offers you an opportunity to acquire a sharper sense of form about writing, and to learn many things about your campus community as well.

This year an unusual opportunity exists for students who have a professional interest in writing. The University has provided students on the Collegian with the tutorial services of a professional newspaperman, Mr. Alvin Oickle, an editor of the Greenfield Recorder-Gazette. Although his teaching services are primarily for the journalism students on the Collegian, he has been willing to provide professional advice to any student on the newspaper. He is available to any Collegian member, and he is glad to teach professional writing and editing methods to students who wish to write better.

(Editor's note: The above article appeared in The Collegian on Dec. 1, 1964, but the opportunity for you to learn to write better by joining The Collegian exists today as then. In fact, since this article first appeared, Mr. Oickle has become the Collegian's official Technical Consultant, and his teaching services are officially available to non-journalism as well as journalism students. Reporters are the basis of a newspaper, and the Collegian needs you.)

Letters To The Editor

Make Finals Optional

To the Editor:

Why not make the finals optional for the students? This is a feasible plan and will benefit all involved. The diligent student, who has kept up with his work and obtained good grades, would be able to avoid putting these good grades into jeopardy by taking finals. This should be his prerogative. The poorer student has the possibility of raising his grades by doing well on the finals, if he so chooses. This system would leave the choice up to the student.

This choice should be the student's responsibility. The "A" and "B" students, at least, should be given this choice, because they have shown that they are responsible academically and are capable of making correct judgements concerning their studies. These people have earned the right to circumvent their finals.

Those responsible for the existence of finals at UMass should do some thinking along these lines.

Bill Rhodes

THE INACCURATE 4.0

To the Editor:

The 4.0 marking system is not outdated—it is merely inaccurate. The merits that make a marking system practical are that it is easy to use, understand, and mark (in our case, to run through the IBM) and accurate. Whatever merits the 4.0 system carries with it, accuracy is not one of them.

Take for example the case of three brothers. Aloysa, Ivan and Dmitri took the same courses and matched grades except in freshman math, in which Aloysa earned an 80 average, Ivan a 79, and Dmitri scraped through a C with a 70. Consequently Aloysa had a B whereas his two brothers got C's. Ivan went to see his prof and complained, "Look, the purpose of a marking system is to classify people according to their respective achievements so others can judge by the records. Yet why am I grouped with my brother Dmitri, over whose average I have nine points, when I am but one point from my brother Aloysa? Do you really think your system so accurate that one point in my average in one subject should lower my grade a 0.2? Your course is graded in three tests, you know, and those three miserable points out of three hundred are going to keep me two tenths of a point away from my brother. Can't you even give me a 2.9 or a 2.8?" Of course he was destined to hear, in a voice reminiscent of the one that says, "this is a recording" that "the IBM can't average two-digit numbers." Ivan was indignant and eventually wound up at Bennington.

Another case in point is the student with an even number of courses, in half of which the student has a seventy-five, in the other half an eighty-five; his average is a straight eighty, or a 3.0; the tendency of this system to pull down grades shows up when we see this person getting a 2.5.

We don't usually measure feet in terms of fractions of yards but in inches. The same should apply to our marking system. I am still open to better systems, but I feel a twelve point or similar system to be far superior to the 4.0 presently used; it would make room for more intermediate marks that would more effectively represent a person's achievements. Ivan's 79 would be worth a B—, or a 6 on the IBM card.

Certainly there will be people who will "just miss" that B, but at least instead of dropping all the way to a C, they will earn a B—; and certainly there will be complaints, but far fewer than with the 4.0 system.

The 4.0 has one merit to which I have as yet given no attention—that is the mark "passing but unsatisfactory," or specifically a D. The twelve point system also has this merit.

So the twelve-point system has all of the merits of the 4.0 system and one of its own—accuracy! This is not a cure, it is merely an amelioration of a system that has potential as a very good way to measure marks. I think it deserves a long hard look.

International Club Bids "Sayonara" to Departing Members

By M. AARIF GHAYYUR

The UMass International Club will hold a special coffee hour this Wednesday, Feb. 2, at 5:30 p.m. in the Governor's Lounge, S.U.

The purpose of the meeting is to bid "sayonara" to its members who are leaving Amherst this semester and to wish "selamat datang" to its newcomers. All members and friends are invited to attend.

TALK ON NIGERIA

Mr. Ibrahim, a UMass student from Nigeria, will deliver a talk on the "political situation in Nigeria" with special reference to the recent military takeover of the government of his country.

The talk will be held on Wed., Feb. 9 at 5:30 p.m. in the Governor's Lounge, S. U. All are cordially invited.

ON PAKISTAN

Mr. M. Abdul Qayyum, a civil engineering student at U Mass from Pakistan, will talk on his country.

Three short movies about Pakistan dances, Lahore, and some other cultural aspects on Wed., Feb. 16, at 5:30 p.m. in the Governor's Lounge, S.U.

Pakistan is the fifth largest country (population-wise) of the world, left behind only by Mainland China, India, USSR, and the USA.

All are cordially invited to attend.

NEW CABINET MEMBER

Mr. Abdulsalmi Matazu, a U-Mass student from Nigeria has been elected as the new Member of the Executive Committee of the International Club in place of Mr. Yonji Shindo (Japan) who has resigned recently.

CONTEST HERE

The Collegian will be featuring a winter fashion spread next week. The clothes to be shown will be chosen from the Salt Box in Amherst, and they would look much better on U-Mass coeds than on hangers—don't you agree?

We challenge YOU to come to the Collegian office Thursday at either 11:00 a.m. or 7:00 p.m. and audition to be the girl in the "poor boy" sweater and skirt outfit in the Collegian fashion spread.

Representatives will be waiting in the office then to interview you. Will you be there?

Chorus Plans Spring Concert

The University of Massachusetts Chorus welcomes students, faculty members and wives to the group for the Spring Semester. Although the Chorus is a one-credit course for students, other members of the University community are welcome to participate.

Rehearsals are held on Tuesday evening from 7 to 9 in Old Chapel. New members are invited to attend the next rehearsal if they are interested in joining this sixty-voice Chorus.

It is a good opportunity for untrained as well as more experienced voices to sing larger choral works, both traditional and contemporary.

The very successful Winter Concert, held December 12 in Bartlett Auditorium, was sung by the Chorus and Chorale totalling 115 voices. Peter Mennin's contemporary Cantata, "The Christmas Story" was performed with brass, organ and tympani.

"Their performance was characterized by the easy grace that comes from paying attention to melodic blend and melodic continuity," said the Springfield Union.

The Greenfield Recorder-Gazette also praised the group: "Du Bois has developed an organization capable of the most delicate tones, as well as magnificent power. In addition, his singers are individually well-trained and vocally secure. The numbers which they gave are a credit to their artistry."

Tentative plans for the Spring Concert are for Bruckner's Mass in E minor, to be held in Bowker Auditorium in May.

Further information may be obtained by calling Dr. du Bois at 545-2657, or by seeing him in mobile classroom unit C.

Campus Group Sponsors Drive To Establish Hebrew as Course

In recent years, more and more universities in the U.S. have instituted Hebrew as an accredited language in their curriculum.

Among the more noteworthy throughout the nation are Harvard, Boston University, N.Y.U., C.C.N.Y., Columbia, Hunter, Brooklyn, Chicago, Toronto, U.S.C., and U.C.L.A.

A group of interested students on campus have been trying to accomplish the same thing this year and they feel that the time is fast approaching when a student can take Hebrew as a part of his college education.

Their goal here is to have an accredited independent course or language department (incorporating Hebrew) that would satisfy the language requirements for graduation.

To the question, "Why Hebrew?", the group responds with three answers:

First is due to the increased recognition of Hebrew as a conversational language since the establishment of the State of Israel.

Secondly, Hebrew is a vital link to the study of ancient history, Mediterranean cultures, of archaeology, the scriptures and the Bible.

Last, there is a need for learning Hebrew as an important source of scientific information with the developing technology and use of Hebrew in journals and papers.

This week, the group has instituted a "Hebrew Table" in the S.U. Lobby so that students can fill out questionnaires to help determine the general consensus regarding Hebrew.

They have met with what they term "excellent support" from both the student body and the faculty as well as the Student Senate's Committee on Academic Affairs.

A Little Late

After the birth of his eighth child, a friend of mine received a letter of congratulations from the local Planned Parenthood association—along with a card he was to return if he desired professional help in the future. My friend sent back the card with this notation: "Where were you when I needed you?"

SOPHOMORE MEN ONLY HAVE GOLDEN OPPORTUNITY

An iron-clad draft deferment, money in the bank, academic credits, and a free vacation all can be yours if you act now.

The two-year Army ROTC Program, in its second year, is accepting applications from among the class of 1968. If accepted, you are given an all-expense-paid vacation to lovely Fort Knox (site of Goldfinger) for six weeks next summer. In good fellowship, with college men from all over the country, you will receive on-the-job training in one of the largest and most rapidly expanding career fields in the country.

On return to the University next fall you will receive $40.00 per month and two college credits per semester for continued professional training in this field. In addition, you will be given a full set of clothing in the latest fashion and in style being worn by more and more people these days. As if this were not enough, to insure peace of mind you will be awarded a 1-D military deferment which will free you of possible hazards in the I-S student deferment.

Not everyone is eligible, but if you think you may qualify, see Captain Parker in Room 105, Dickinson Hall. (That's Dickinson Hall, not Emily Dickinson House).

Corsages, Expulsion, And Bingo In College

By F. D. Bodeus

The University of Kentucky is holding a Gold Diggers Ball patterned after Sadie Hawkins Day in which there is a corsage contest for the man with the most original looking corsage.

University of Maine is trying a new laissez faire policy of class attendance allowing the instructor to determine the number of class absences permissible for his course.

Also at Maine—Camp counselor placement day introduces Maine students to summer opportunities in the state.

University of Minnesota bingo enthusiasts exercise their luck at student union while a resolution is passed stating students are able to place hold on records of their membership in campus organizations; this hold would prevent any release of this information by the office of the dean of students without the student's permission.

University of Texas set up a Faculty fitness room for pooped profs.

Middlebury College — a new honor system for exams. Faculty members are present at the beginning and end of exams; students are provided with complete freedom of action, provided they don't "interfere with the work of others".

And at Antioch—Sexual intercourse is punishable by expulsion from college...

CONVOCACTION...

—he is always "surrounded by large groups of people." In preparation of this future environment, the Dean feels that the University provides "a privileged opportunity to operate as an individual in a large community."

Dean Field concluded his address by asking the students to "take the initiation of being an active, seeking, searching person at the University."

Also on the platform with the guest speakers was: Dean of Women Helen Curtis, Dr. Mark Noffsinger, Coordinator of Student Activities, Dr. Joseph Southworth, Director of Guidance and Counseling, Mr. David Lawrence, Asst. Dean of Admissions and Maroon Key advisor and Dr. William Venman of the Provost's Office.

Following the formal program students were given an opportunity to meet with representatives of various campus organizations.

Penn State Gymnasts Whomp UMass Varsity

Penn State's gymnasts showed the University of Massachusetts why they were number one in the country last season as they rolled up a 184.05 to 148.05 win at Boyden Gym a few days before the final exam period.

State had three men with scores over nine on the long horse, an event won by UMass' Al Cohen on the last jump of the competition. They also had two men with nines in four other events. The trampoline was the only event Penn State didn't roll up the score in. Marty DeSantis won that with an 8.35.

The Nittany Lions' great Steve Cohen gave a clue to his performance for the coming events with a 9.25 score for an extremely difficult floor exercise routine. Cohen went on to place first in three more events and also notched a second and third. Ed Isabelle's 9.1 finished second and State also had a man in the mid eights.

Bob Leclair tied Cohen for second on the side horse with a strong performance that gave the standing room only crowd its first opportunity to cheer for the home team. Dennis Paoletti of the visitors placed first with a 9.2. The Lions took the first three spots on the tramp, but none of the scores for either team compared with those of the other events. DeSantis won and was followed by teammates Gene Scofield and Dave Coggeshall.

Penn State scored 27 points on the high bar with Cohen's 9.55, Isabelle's 9.30, and Mark Runyan's 8.15. Steve Brown was high man in the event for the Redmen. The Nittany Lions scored even higher in the next event, but first place escaped them as Al Cohen nosed out Doug Collins for first. Collins was State's second man up, and his hecht from the far end produced a score that led the rest of the way until Cohen came through. Al scored an 8.6 on his first vault and it was up to his last try to pull out a win. The judges gave him three 9.4's and a 9.2 that was enough to do it.

The Nittany Lions picked up two more nines on the parallel bars for a 29 point lead going into the final event. Steve Cohen won the event with Isabelle second for the third time of the right. Steve Brown and Lizotte both scored in the eights for UMass but their ace on the bars, Jack Bradbury, was off beam with a 7.85. The rings were another tower of strength for Penn State with two men in the mid nines. Cohen won again with a 9.45 to barely edge teammate Gary Williams' 9.40 in the closest contest of the night. Jim Dusenbury had a good 8.5 for a third place Massachusetts finish, but over 27 points for State pushed their final total to 184.05.

Mass returns to action Saturday against Temple University in Philadelphia and will be out to improve their Penn score by a large margin. The loss of Carver hurt in three events, and the virus he suffered also hit several other team members enough to affect their performances. The team has been working out throughout the vacation, so a return to scores in the 150's is likely, with even more improvement possible.

Roekel Awarded Title of Emeritus

The University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees has conferred the title of professor emeritus on Dr. Henry Van Roekel, who retired recently as Commonwealth professor of veterinary science after nearly 37 years of UMass service.

An internationally-known expert on avian pathology, Dr. Van Roekel was among the first at UMass to be awarded a Commonwealth professorship, given to faculty who distinguish themselves by outstanding professional achievement in teaching, research and publication.

A native of Sioux Center, Iowa, Dr. Van Roekel received a D.V.M. and B.S. degree from Iowa State College and an M.S. degree from Virginia Polytechnic Institute. In 1934 he received his Ph.D. degree from Yale University.

He first came to UMass in 1926, left after two years to take a position as pathologist with the California Fish and Game Department and returned to the University in 1929.

He was appointed to the post of research professor in 1945 and was named Commonwealth professor in 1960.

He has contributed to the books, "Diseases of Poultry" and "Advances in Veterinary Science," and has published many articles in both scholarly and popular journals. He has been recognized as a world authority on the bacterial and viral diseases of chickens.

Dr. Van Roekel was the first to develop and use a vaccination process for immunization against Newcastle disease and bronchitis in poultry.

He adapted the avian encephalomyelitis virus to make it possible to test and develop a vaccine for that disease; and throughout his long career has been an international leader in efforts to eradicate pullorum as a poultry disease.

He was the first to demonstrate the commercial feasibility of developing and maintaining flocks free of chronic respiratory diseases.

He was given the Tom Newman Award, an international prize, for his outstanding contributions to poultry husbandry research in 1953.

He is a member of the American Association, the Poultry Science Association, the Poultry Science Association, the New York Academy of Sciences, the U.S. Livestock Sanitary Association, the Conference of Research Workers on Animal Diseases, the American Association for the Advancement of Science and the Northeast Conference on Avian Diseases.

He is listed in Who's Who in American Men of Science and is a member of the academic honorary societies Sigma Xi and Phi Kappa Phi.

Redmen Conquer Colgate, Succumb to Syracuse

By RICK CURWIN

The Massachusetts Redmen basketball team traveled to Colgate and Syracuse during inter-session and came out with a split after playing one of their best and one of their worst games of the season. At Colgate the visitors stunned the large crowd with great shooting and rebounding to win by a score of 107-77. Four UMass players scored twenty points or more. Clarence Hill had the highest output with 27, followed by Tindall and Babyak, each with 21. Frank Stewart had 20.

The team could do no wrong throughout the game as they fast broke with precision and moved the ball through Colgate's defense with very little trouble. In the rebounding department UMass grabbed off 67 bounds against only 47 for Colgate. Tindall lead all rebounders with 19. Sophomore Gary Gasperack improving as a starter in every game had 9 rebounds along with 6 assists and 9 points.

For the losers Dalzell had 23 points and Vigars had 15.

The second game of the road trip was the exact opposite, the Orangemen of Syracuse showed the visitors little hospitality in their beautiful new field house and handed the Redmen a 114 to 72 defeat. The biggest weapons Syracuse used were aggression and All-American Dave Bing. Although the home team did not shoot well they dominated the boards with a fantastic 88 rebounds. This factor along with a full court zone press was enough to ruin the Redmen. The Orangemen pressed for three quarters of the game on every play and forced UMass to lose the ball 20 times in the first period alone.

The only bright spot in the first half was Hill's 17 points. Losing by twenty at the end of the half, the Redmen had trouble scoring after intermission. Syracuse pushed their lead out of sight and put in their second and third teams.

The loss of board control came as no surprise. The home team had great overall height with starters at 6' 9", 6' 6", and the smallest man was Bing at 6' 3". Vaughn Harner, playing his first game after a layoff, led all rebounders with 15, followed by Bing with 14, and Dean with 11. For UMass, Tindall had 11 and Stewart and Babyak each had 7.

Dave Bing showed why he is an All-American by scoring 32 points with 8 assists. He leads Syracuse in just about every department. He is the second highest scorer in the nation with over 30 points a game.

Clarence Hill and Jim Babyak each had 23 points and Tindall had 13.

The next game is tonight and it is a big one. The defending YanCon champions will be at the cage for a key conference battle, lead by Wes Bialosuknia, the Huskies will be tough.

UConn TONITE CAGE

IM Review

By DAVE JONES

As the intramural basketball season rounds the far turn and comes into the home stretch, the scramble for the coveted league titles continues.

Although neither team has clinched its respective divisional title, it appears that KS and surprising ZN will meet for the fraternity championship.

The Untouchables, who are the current leaders of the International League, have averaged over 90 points per game and appear to be the team to beat for the campus championship.

The Moody Blues are the class of the National League but the Zeros are close behind.

The dorm leagues are unusually well balanced this year and it may take some playoff games to determine the league champions.

Entries for the squash tournament must be in by February 7.

Collin Garstang of the UMass ski team finishes his victorious run in the slalom at Middlebury, January 29.

Skiers Impressive

The UMass Varsity ski team spent the intersession period in its second winter camp at Killington Basin in Vermont. Five days were spent in rigorous training followed by two New England Intercollegiate Ski Conference ski races at the Middlebury Snow Bowl. A usual training day consisted of six to ten miles of downhill running in the downhill tuck at speeds of up to fifty miles per hour, followed by three hours of intensive work on slalom or giant slalom courses on a trail reserved by Killington for that purpose. Two more hours were spent each day on racing technique practice.

Collin Garstang '68 tied for first place with Bill Toof of B.C. in the AIC-sponsored two run dual slalom at Middlebury Snow Bowl on Saturday, Feb. 29. Other UMass finishes were Fred Foster '67, 10th; Tom Pittendreich '67, 20th; Pete Plastringer '66, 27th; Don Piezza '66, 30th; and Mike Zanolli '68, in the first race of his life, finished 43rd. Ninety-one college racers from eleven colleges participated. The order of college team finishes were 1. New England College, 2. Keene State College, 3. BU, 4. UMass, 5. Amherst, 6. Northeastern, 7. Tufts, 8. AIC, 9. BC, 10. Princeton and 11. Brown.

With seven wins three losses and one first place medal under its belt, the UMass slat slides were confronted with six inches of new snow and a blizzard with winds up to 50 miles per hour for the Sunday Boston College Giant Slalom Race at the Snow Bowl. Garstang, first in the UMass running order, had a brilliant run of 79.4 seconds which eventually won the varsity gold medal for the weekend. Pittendreich placed 10th and Foster 12th with exceptionally good runs in the blinding snow storm.

With rapidly dropping temperatures and stronger winds, the second half of the UMass running order had a tougher time, but Plastringer finished 31st, Piezza 33rd, and Mike Zanolli 40th.

These solid performances gave the UMass team a second place among the same eleven colleges. The season record improved and now stands at seventeen wins and four losses.

Pucksters Whip Penn, 5-3

By DAVE HANSON

The Redmen pucksters snapped a nine game losing streak with a 5-3 decision over a strong University of Pennsylvania sextet on Sat., Jan. 6.

Penn scored late in the first period on a loose puck in front of the net which was tucked in by Pierce. UMass came right back in the second period with two quickies off the stick of leading scorer Ed Polchlopek at the 2:22 and 3:00 minute marks. Bill Skowyrza picked up two assists and Dave Eaton one of the tallies.

Penn tied the score at 8:52 but Ed Graney put the Redmen out in front to stay only 38 seconds later on a picture play goal assisted by Ed Kinsella and Matt Connolly. Capt. Ed Quimby netted the winning goal and his first of the season by taking the puck from behind his goal all the way up ice and tucking it away in the net.

Junior Bill Skowyrza netted an insurance score midway through the third period and Ed Samuels of UPenn rounded out the scoring at 18:40. Netminder Bob Eddy registered 36 saves against 33 for Penn goaltender Bill Smith. Eddy performed admirably during the first half of the season with 39.3 saves a game.

The Redmen face Connecticut on Wed., Feb. 9 in what promises to be an exciting contest. The UMass sextet has lost two close decisions to the Huskies this season including a 6-5 overtime decision in the second round of the Yankee Conference Tourney.

FOUR-COLLEGE STUDENTS PROTEST RESUMED BOMBING

By ALAN GRIGSBY, Police Reporter

Amid cries of, "Burn some draft cards" and chords of the National Anthem, 162 well organized marchers, primarily from the four colleges, protested against the resumption of the bombing in North Vietnam.

The march started on the steps of Green Hall at Smith College where representatives of Students for a Democratic Society (SDS) directed the marchers to walk in pairs, give way to other pedestrians, and protect themselves from bodily injury in case of attack.

The column was led by Dory Fliegel, '67 of Amherst College, head of SDS, Amherst Professor Gordon Levine, Smith Professor Philip Green, and the Rev. Frank Danforth of the First Methodist Church, Northampton.

As the march moved towards the center of Northampton, Anthony Sager '67 Amherst College, the press representative, declared that the march was the result of an informal meeting Tuesday evening, February 1, in Davis Lounge at Smith. The march, he said, was not connected with the recent loss of passports to three professors who visited Hanoi and Peking, but about the bombing alone.

As the march passed opposite the Town Hall and entered the downtown district the head of the column was met by Northampton Police Chief George Bernier and told to disperse.

Fliegel then displayed a permit allowing them to march in an orderly fashion from Green Hall at Smith down Main Street Park. The Chief again asked if they would disperse and Fliegel cited city ordinance c-33 section six stating that such marches were permitted as long as they did not interfere with pedestrians and were under the 200 person limit.

At this point Attorney Stephen Kaplan from the American Civil Liberties Union, which protects rights in the First Amendment, said that although the marchers may have a legal right to march, vindication at the District Court level would be difficult. Kaplan added that the court costs would be high for an acquittal in a higher court and such costs would have to be paid by parents.

Fliegel was warned by Kaplan that if the marchers continued each would have to do so with clear moral conviction. Fliegel said they would continue and asked the Chief for any instructions to the marchers so that they would not break the law.

As the march progressed down Main Street Park it was heckled by an opposing group from Amherst College and other spectators. The Amherst group carried placards stating, "Bomb the Yellow Communists" and "Bomb Vietnam" in opposition to those carried by the marchers saying, "Build, Don't Bomb" and "Negotiate with NCF."

When the march crossed the street and headed towards the Town Hall, where it had been rumored there would be speeches given by the two professors and discussion open to all, two lines formed on opposite sides of the side walk singing "Pop goes the Bomb" to the tune of "Pop Goes the Weasel".

Fraternal Park Committee Considers Possible Sites

by PETE HENDRICKSON
Editor-in-Chief

The dream of a fraternal park came a bit closer to earth January 11 when UMass fraternity and sorority representatives selected a steering committee to hasten and formalize the search for possible sites.

A MEETING OF University officials with local and national sorority and fraternity representatives was called to review site selection work done thus far. The steering committee draws on Greek advisors, undergraduates and chapter officials to proceed in selecting the best possible site.

Robert Hopkins, dean of men, chaired the meeting and stated that he hoped the steering body would "make a formal, legal commitment to proceed" with a plan to bring the residential park into existence. Actual site selection will begin only after the body has studied all the proposals, he said.

NEWLY ELECTED Chairman Robert Gailey of the Fraternity Advisor's Association said that the committee would meet to discuss plans for incorporation so that the group could act as the legal representatives of all the fraternities and sororities.

He indicated yesterday that the steering committee will meet Feb. 10 with Atty. William Dwyer to work out the legal aspect of forming a corporation.

A FORMAL REPORT and recommendation to the entire master committee of all the Fraternities and Sororities will be presented at the Thursday meeting. The steering committee's choice of sites will be included in the report which is now being drafted.

Another meeting is slated about 10 days after the Feb. 10 meeting to concentrate efforts on the chosen site. Gailey said that about 10 fraternities have informally committed themselves to the project and that another seven Greek houses have shown interest.

Several possible arrangements are under consideration for financing the park, but none have been definitely chosen.

THE NEED FOR such a park has come to a head because of an inability to expand or improve because appropriate land is not available within the present "center" of campus.

Slides were shown and a fact sheet distributed to brief the representatives on the current sites under consideration.

THE HADLEY SITE, on Rocky Hill Road near the abandoned

Snow Sculptures To Be Campus Wide

This year's Winter Carnival theme is BRIGHT LIGHTS ON BROADWAY. Each fraternity, sorority, and dormitory (including commuters) is asked to build a sculpture based on some Broadway production or based, in some way, on Broadway life.

If there is no snow by 5:00 p.m. on Thursday, February 17, no sculptures need be built.

Specific Rules

Colored snow may be used either on the surface or throughout the entire snow sculpture.

No visible framework, with the exception of wires for suspended figures may be used.

Any type of lighting may be used.

Moving parts and sound effects may be used.

No manufactured ice or snow may be used.

Sculptures must be completed by 1:00 o'clock a.m. on Feb. 19. Judging will begin at 9:00 the morning of Feb. 19.

Three awards will be given in each of the four divisions.
1. Fraternity 2. Sorority
3. Men's Dorms 4. Women's Dorms.

All sculptures should have the title of the display and the name of the organization either on the sculpture or near it.

All the work must be done by the members of the organization represented.

The criteria the judges will use are: Originality, craftsmanship (details etc.), pertinence to the theme, general appearance (no dirty snow, etc.), and adherence to the rules.

Student Union 'Open House' Will Feature Free Bands, Food, Films and Candy

The Program Council will sponsor an OPEN HOUSE in the Student Union on February 5. This is to mark the ninth year of operation of the Student Union. All special attractions will operate without charge from 7:00 p.m. to 11:00 p.m.

The Colonial Lounge will be decorated as an old time movie house. Of course, old time movies like Charlie Chaplin will be shown continuously with a 5 minute intermission between showings. Entertainment will be provided during the breaks by comedian Michael Healey.

Two bands, The Urge, U of Mass, and The Continentals, Boston Area, will alternately play in the ballroom. As a special treat FREE COFFEE and CAKE will be served in the lobby to celebrate this ninth year of operation. A very special attraction will take place in the Cape Cod Lounge so be there to see it. WMUA will also be broadcasting from the Hatch.

Along with the Student Union OPEI HOUSE an ALL CAM-

PUS TOURNAMENT IN BILLIARDS and TABLE TENNIS will be held in the games area on Friday Feb. 4 from 3:30 p.m. and on Saturday Feb. 5 from 10:00 a.m. This tournament is sponsored by the Student Union Recreation Activities Committee. The campus champions will represent the University of Massachusetts at the Association of College Unions - International Region 1 Games Tournament at the University of New Hampshire on Feb. 11 and 12.

Allen Elected Treas.; Senate Revives F.A.C.

By KAREN ROSE,
Senate Editor

Commuter Senator Jim Allen was elected treasurer of the Student Senate at Wednesday's meeting.

It is Allen's hope that more coordination between the financial areas and the other areas of the Senate will now evolve.

Two resignations were also announced at the meeting, that of Richard Moriarty ('68 at large) and Sharon Lovins (Crabtree).

Three new senators were announced at the meeting. Richard Zletz and Frank Verock have been elected commuter senators and Herb Lach has been elected fraternity senator.

Much of the discussion at Wednesday's meeting centered around Fine Arts. President Dacey announced that the finding of the joint Faculty-Student Senate study committee will be presented to the Faculty Senate this week and then to the Student Senate at its next meeting.

A short time later a bill was brought to the floor by Senator Bette Chambers (Van Meter South) moving that the Fine Arts Constitution of 1961-62 be reinstated. The purpose of this move was to reactivate the Fine Arts Council formed in the Constitution.

Senator Gary Bombardier (Gorman) then rose to point out that this council never has been legally dead, in spite of the fact that other committees have been formed concerning Fine Arts.

The reason that this council has been inoperative, said Bombardier, is because the faculty seats on the council have been vacant.

Thus, after much haggling and confusion, Senator Chambers withdrew her bill in hopes that the finding of the joint study committee will clear the air on Fine Arts.

Two appropriations were made at the meeting. Index received a total of $275 for advertising and telephones. The Judo Club received $400 for expenses incurred in intercollegiate competition.

The Senate also agreed to accept the budget of the Engineering Journal, but only after stipulations regarding the number of pages and the number of annual issues were explained and debated.

Under new business Senator Rick Cass brought up a bill moving that no consideration be given to religious holidays by the scheduling office and that "scheduling problems in regard to religion be left to the individual's preference."

Senator Cass' bill evolved as a direct result of the bill brought up in December calling for an investigation as to the advisability of cancelling or cutting classes on Good Friday and Holy Saturday.

Cass' bill passed after much discussion and a suggestion from Senator Jerry Benezra (Fraternalities) that possibly a new type of dean's excuse could be created to take care of this situation.

Finally the Senate unanimously passed a bill to continue the Fine Arts Council with the appointment of the necessary faculty members.

Primary Papers Due Thurs.

Primaries will be held in two weeks time to fill Senate vacancies for the Class of 1967 and the Class of 1968. Nomination papers for spaces on the primary ballot are now available in the RSO office of the Student Union and must be returned with the required number of valid signatures no later than Thursday, Feb. 10.

A vacancy also exists from Crabtree House and nomination papers can be obtained as outlined above.

Is L.S.D. Poppycock?

Dr. Sidney Malitz, associate professor of clinical psychiatry, Columbia University College of Physicians and Surgeons, will speak at Amherst College on "LSD-25 and Other Hallucinogens: Panacea or Poppycock?" The lecture is scheduled for Friday, Feb. 4 at 8:00 p.m. in the Geology Lecture Room and is open to the public without charge.

Dr. Malitz has worked extensively with LSD-25, Mescaline, Psilocybin, and other hallucinogens over the last 15 years, conducting research with both patients and volunteers.

A dining commons for 750 students opened Monday (Jan. 31) at the Southwest Residence Area of the University of Massachusetts. A portion of the ultramodern two-story building is visible at lower left, with two of the Southwest Area's 22-story tower residences rising behind it. In the right foreground is one of the four low-rise dormitories that opened last September. The new dining commons, first such facility in the Southwest Area, will feed the students of the four low-rise dorms—Emerson, James, Melville and Thoreau Houses. When fully completed in 1968, the $36 million complex will include 20 dining and residence buildings for 5300 students.

"Shameless" Caesura Sets February Deadline

Once again, a shameless Caesura staff is openly soliciting—manuscripts and art, that is. Under a new constitution and with a radically new format, the literary magazine, and its staff, is preparing to publish the Spring issue. Of course, to do it is necessary that you, the interested student, submit work which may be considered for publication. The deadline for the coming issue is February 11, 1966.

Technically, all manuscripts should be typed, double spaced.

Poems must be submitted only one to a page. For consideration, the author's name and address should be on a separate sheet. Material should be left on the Caesura office, the northernmost desk in the Franklin Room, S. U.

Those who wish their material returned by mail should include a self-addressed, stamped envelope with it. Authors whose work is selected will be notified by mail. All others will be able to pick up their work at the office at times to be specified at a later date.

FRATERNAL PARK

doned slaughter house, is now held in option by Alpha Epsilon Pi fraternity. Spokesman Gilbert Holland of Springfield said the fraternity plans to buy the 38 acres and sell developed 1 1/2 acre sites to individual houses for $21,000 apiece. The land is valued at $204,000 and would provide 19 lots plus a four acre recreation area.

The East Pleasant St. site option is held in the name of George Rogers, chairman of the Fraternity manager's Association, for Tau Kappa Epsilon fraternity. The 55 acres are valued at $168,000 which includes two houses owned by the Richard Nelson family. Raw land cost for the site would come to $5,910 for each of the 23 1/2 acre lots, including a four acre recreation area.

THE LAND IS currently zoned residentially but Paul Procopio, chairman of the Amherst Town Planning Board, said the board has recommended it be re-zoned campus residential. He will bring the proposal to the town meeting March 7 for their approval. "There are only two abutters and the area is virtually surrounded by U-Mass property. It's a logical site," he said.

Informed sources have indicated that the East Pleasant site is the most likely choice for Fraternity Park. It is expected that it will appear as the first choice of the steering committee in their report next week.

THE MEADOW ST. site in North Amherst comprises 15 acres and is under option by Raymond Fontaine of Fontaine Bros. Inc., Chicopee general contractors. The land is valued at $150,000 and would yield 10 developed sites at $12-13,000 each, without a recreation area.

THE FOURTH SITE, 20 acres on the east side of newly built University Drive, is valued at $160,000 and is held by the Fred Kentfield family. Nine lots would be available at $17,777 apiece with a four-acre recreation area. This is the only site that has no room for expansion as it is bounded by roads on all sides. However it has sewer and water available as does the North Amherst site. The other sites would require a pumping station, sewer extension and water extension.

Gayley mentioned a fifth site adjacent to the Meadow Street site on farm land currently owned by the Swartz family in North Amherst. Data is not available at this time on this latest site possibility.

Sam Armstrong, president of the Intra-Fraternity Council, called for all the Greeks to participate in the formation of the park. "This will open up chances for new houses and put some life back into the system," he said.

Students Protest Resumed Bombing...

When asked why the march was allowed to go this far, Attorney Kaplan said the good-will of the community had allowed it. Kaplan noted that he did not know what would happen if the marchers stopped in front of the Town Hall and blocked the sidewalk. The problem was solved, however, as the Chief said it would be permissible to use the nearby Unitarian Church's yard.

Here the two professors declared that present U.S. policy is detrimental to the self-interests of the United States and amounts to a denial of these principles of freedom and self-determination for which we fought the American Revolution. They called for a cessation of bombing in Laos and Vietnam, recognition of the National Liberation Front (Vietcong), and reduction of U.S. military engagements to defensive operations.

They pointed out that President Johnson's so-called Peace Offensive had such firm terms that it asked for conditional surrender of the Vietcong and was doomed to failure, usable only to further the war as U.S. material was built up at the same time. No nation likes to give in to threats and this holds, they said, for the Vietcong who represent the majority of the South Vietnamese people.

Along the route many people looked on with interest and when asked what they had to say about the march all asked were in disagreement with the marchers and about three quarters said protesting was in agreement with letting the other guy have his opinion.

Comments from a soldier fresh from Vietnam ran, "Only too bad they don't drop atomic bombs on that place... Let them protest... they are yellow bellied scum who don't want to take their weapon in and... they ought to give these professors one way tickets to Hanoi and leave them there."

One couple who has a son in Vietnam were against protests and wanted the marchers "put in boxcars and left over there."

A merchant yelled, "Do any of these ***** have any guts?" Along with a few comments like these were the more ordered replies of the Amherst counter-protest group.

Carrying signs and heckling during the march they declared in an interview before the march that they were going to defend the bombing policy which furthers the interest of the men fighting over there, furthers our defense of allies against aggressors, protects our shipping, and may prevent a Yellow River boundary as in the Korean war.

They also cited that the Geneva accord was signed in 1954 by the French and North Vietnamese, not the South Vietnamese and the U.S., leaving the U.S. with the ability to act.

One of their number ended saying "If I'm drafted I want to know that all is done that can be possibly done for me."

O.T.S. Interviews Feb. 14 and 15 at S.U.

On Feb. 14 and 15 the United States Air Force Officer Selection Team will be at the Student Union Building, in the lobby, to interview interested men and women, who wish to apply for the Air Force Officer Training School. Qualifications required to apply for the Officer Training School are:

1. Age 20 1/2 thru 29 1/2 inclusive
2. Seniors may apply 210 days prior to graduation
3. U.S. citizen by birth
4. Must be of good moral character
5. Must qualify on the "Air Force Officer Quality Test"

6. Must pass an Air Force physical (men only). Women will be given physicals by Air Force assigned civilian doctors.

Upon selection to the Air Force Officer Training School, the applicant will receive written notice of the class starting date, that he or she is to attend.

On a given date, the man or woman will be administered the oath of office and depart for Officer Training School at Lackland Air Force Base in San Antonio, Texas.

WMUA Adds Features "Livens Up" Program

Station WMUA will fill the Student Union with the sounds of popular older Saturday night, Feb. 5, from 7 - 11:30. Station manager Mike Duggan will be broadcasting from the Hatch with recordings of 1951-62 vintage, filling requests and giving away popular albums throughout the evening.

As part of the Student Union Open House, the program will begin at 9 o'clock Saturday morning, when Fred Steves and Ron Engle will broadcast from the Student Union lobby until 4 p.m. WMUA made similar live broadcasts from the Student Union on Sunday and Monday evenings this week.

A new feature has been added to the station's program this semester. Following nightly news at 6:15 and sports at 6:30 will be "Lighter Side," a comedy spot of taped cuts from the albums of Bill Cosby, Bob Newhart, Stan Freeberg and other popular comedians. The "Lighter Side" will be initiated Mon., Feb. 7, at 6:45 p.m.

Dorm Changes?

On Thursday, Feb. 10, at 8 p.m. the Men's and Women's Affairs Committees of the Student Senate will hold an open meeting to explain and discuss the proposed dorm changes for the fall semester.

Since the announcement published by the Dean of Students office stating that many of the dorms would be closed or changed many protest petitions have been received by the deans and the senators.

Because of the obvious disapproval concerning some of the proposed plans the Means and Womens Affairs Committees have arranged for the Dean of Men, the Dean of Women, Dean of Students, and representatives from the housing office to come to the council chambers on Thursday, the 10th to discuss the plans with all interested students.

Each petitioning dorm should appoint a person familiar with their complaints to represent them at this meeting as each will have a chance to present his case.

INTEGRATE STOCKBRIDGE?

Last December 13, a series of proposed changes of the University's residence hall policy, issued by the Dean of Student's office, appeared on page 10 of the Collegian. According to these changes, effective fall 1966, many senior women and graduate students will have their own dormitories, men will be integrated into the women's quad on the south end of the campus, and women will be integrated into the Hills House area in the north. It was thought, and not unjustifiably so, that such integration would keep the old residence halls apace with the ever-new, ever-developing, and ever-expanding Orchard Hill and Southwest-Tower areas.

However, in this spirit of integration and consolidation, one very important minority of the University population has been overlooked—the Stockbridge students. In moving as a unit from the County Circle dorms at the edge of the campus to Greenough and Baker on the hill, Stockbridge men will not be integrated. This proposed "geographical integration" cannot solve the problem that has injured Stockbridge's reputation in the past. This problem, in essence, is one of isolation. How well are students in other schools at the University acquainted with Stockbridge students? Not very well at all, and if Stockbridge moves as a unit its reputation and ostracism from the mainstream of campus life will remain the same. The answer, therefore, seems to be the complete integration of Stockbridge students into the various dormitories throughout the campus.

The ramifications of complete integration would be enormous. An undoubtedly large measure of any college student's education is the experience of meeting other people. Certainly, humanities people would not like to live in a dormitory composed 100% of other humanities majors. A liberal education does not mean engineers with engineers, nurses with nurses, and so on. The time has come to recognize Stockbridge students as University students, which they are. It is true that they are here for only two years, but their schedule of vacations and finals are the same, they attend classes as everyone else, and they use the same facilities and services that the rest of the University students use.

To a large extent, because their curriculum differs, Stockbridge students are a unique segment of the University population. Nevertheless, their identity would not be lost with integration into the dormitories. They would have the same clubs, activities and meeting places to unite them. More importantly, they would be accepted completely by the entire campus. In a poll recently held last semester in the Student Union lobby, and sponsored by the Stockbridge Service Organization, approximately 80% of those interviewed (University and Stockbridge students) favored integration of Stockbridge men into the residence halls. (Only one Stockbridge student of approximately one hundred interviewed was against integration into the dorms). It is now time for Stockbridge students to weigh the advantages and disadvantages of integration, the results of which may very well change the complexion of the UMass of the future.

"A Great Sea Of Life"

by NANCY LEIBOVITZ, Editorial Staff

It is often thought that the college campus is the great sea of life into which a student is thrown to sink or swim. An individual beginning his academic career frequently believes that he has finally entered the "real" world, or in other terms, the adult world. Yet it would seem that a university like UMass does not represent the first step into the world at large, but actually a carefully guided preliminary to that step.

This is the time when a person begins to expand his horizons. He faces new worlds of knowledge, new kinds of people, new philosophies of life. However, by the very nature of the university itself, the campus limits become a buffer zone between the student and the world. His room and board are secured, his fees are paid, his safety is ardently protected by administration policies, and he finds himself hazily floating along on an intellectual cloud nine.

Too often the student may come to believe that all the outside world will be waiting to cater to him just as the university does. Upon graduation there may come that surprising shock to find that the "real" world still lies ahead of him. This is a world where the must learn to cooperate creatively not only with his fellow college-mates, but also with the thousands of other people with backgrounds and ideas not influenced by four years of living in a student society.

Therefore it is important to remember that what we learn and what we do at the University must be evaluated in terms of the outside world and not just the campus society.

— LOST FREEDOM —

(ACP)

For all practical purposes, the members of the U.S. population under 21 have lost their freedom, says the Colorado State College Mirror, Greeley.

The Mirror, defines freedom as Salado De Madariage defined it: "He is free who knows how to keep in his own hands the power to decide at each step, the course of his life and who lives in a society which does not block the exercise of that power."

Are the U.S. government and the mass media, inspired by the chauvinistic tensions of the American people, sacrificing the freedom of a huge portion of the younger generation? We think so. Last year the Berkeley protestors (Free Speech Movement) were given fines and sentences for exercising civil disobedience.

The peace march on Washington in December, made up mostly of students, was labeled by the mass media, carte blanche, as "fringe radicals" and "inkos."

The burning of draft cards, a symbolic gesture of disagreement with the administration's policy in Viet Nam, can now be punished by five years in prison and a $10,000 fine.

The teach-in movement was effectively stifled by government charges of communist infiltration and manipulation.

A young Texas airman was sentenced to two years at hard labor by a military tribunal for participating in a peace march, even though he was off duty and in civilian clothes.

Reader's Digest, Look and Life magazines have efficiently assured the American patriot that the whole Viet Nam protest movement is controlled by Communist agents.

The whole American ideal confirmed the right of the individual to speak his mind and pursue his own reality, as long as he was not threatening someone else's right to do the same. What has happened to the ideal?

We are free as long as we keep our mouths shut, stay in step and join a few clubs.

Bah on Miss Leibovitz!

To the Editor:

"A University of Massachusetts student is compelled to complete two years of a science and one year of mathematics in order to fulfill the B.A. requirements in the college of liberal arts."

A University of Massachusetts student is compelled to complete 4 years of social sciences and humanities in order to fulfill the B.S. requirements in the school of engineering.

Why?

Because the University of Massachusetts student should be well versed in all aspects of knowledge.

Sound familiar?

This is the answer engineers receive from the college of liberal arts when we question the importance of 4 years of social science and humanities. Your case is no different.

Dating Revolution

(ACP)

From the University of Miami comes news which may revolutionize the dating habits in America, says the Daily Reveille, Louisiana State University.

Dental researchers there have discovered that tooth decay is a highly contagious disease rather than a hereditary defect.

At first, this may seem insignificant. However, upon closer examination, who would knowingly destroy his ivory smile or earn himself a premature set of false teeth simply because he had been kissing the wrong girl?

Dr. Doran D. Zinner, one of the researchers, confirmed that tooth decay was caused by certain types of mouth bacteria. The dental-microbiologist asserts that these bacteria are transmitted by direct contact, using case histories of rats, hamsters and humans to prove it.

A person will now need to check a prospective date's dental history as well as other vital statistics. The question arises of how this may be done without arousing suspicion.

Zinner announced that the best tooth decay protection comes from the use of flourides. Here is a positive area for discrimination. Once a person knows where his date is from, he need merely check his pocket guide of flouridated water supplies in the United States. If the local water supply is flouridated, then he can be sure by subtly plying her with water.

Another method which might prove helpful calls for a bit of sleuthing. By staking out in the drugstore, one could take note of what kind of toothpaste she buys.

With this social problem exposed, one can with proper precaution be sure before saying "Pucker up."

Draft — Democratic?

by STEVE SHEEHY, Editorial Staff

The government has recently announced its intention of increasing the number of young men eligible for the draft by including those college students who are in the bottom quarter of their class. Since this is a matter which is near and dear to the hearts of us all, let us take a closer look at the nation's draft policy.

First of all, it isn't really the federal government that drafts people. The government simply assigns a quota to be filled for each local draft board. It is entirely up to the local board how this quota is filled. It is this free-handed policy which has led to a great degree of difficulty. What it boils down to is that one man has control over who will be drafted from his district. This has led to the ridiculous and probably illegal drafting of college students who took part in anti-Vietnam demonstrations. Some heads of local draft boards have said that they will draft college students last, others have said that students will be among the next group to be drafted. This has made it entirely unfair to everyone. As the situation stands now, whether a young man will be drafted may very well depend on where he lives, rather than his marital or educational status. Surely this situation can and must be remedied for the good of all concerned.

Another peculiarity in the draft policy has been the granting of medical deferments to certain professional athletes. The most famous case, of course, is that of Joe Namath, a pro football player, who was classified 4-F. With the announcement of his classification a rather detailed explanation of the reasons for his deferment was also released. Basically, it said that Namath, when engaged in sports, would always have a doctor around in case of injury to his knee. In the battlefield he wouldn't necessarily have this medical aid available. Since the lives of other men might depend upon his physical well-being, he was given a medical deferment. This statement, issued by the Department of the Army, completely evaded the issue. While Namath may be unfit for battle, there are thousands of jobs which he could do with no strain on his knee whatsoever. Here again the government has created an unfair situation with regards to who gets drafted and who doesn't.

Sam Sparc Speaks

Joe Jets To Draft Test

Our boy, Joe Namath, ran down the street at a torrid pace. He had already run three miles in just under 13.5. You see, Joe was late for his Selective Service test, which he was required to take on this day.

"Foolish to even bother with the damn thing at all," he thought, as he sprinted the rest of the way to the building numbered 1964 Teivman Avenue—the home of Joe's local draft board. Taking a deep breath at the doorway, Joe suddenly and strangely felt his index toe buckle; oh, it buckled terribly. Our boy Joe limped into the test room, winced in pain as he passed the examiner, then found an empty desk. His muscles were taut from running. But he was not tired, for Joe was 238 pounds of muscular beauty. That body had helped him to win twelve letters in high school, and he was sure to duplicate this feat in college—providing he could get through college uninterrupted. Joe was a bit worried, because his cum for three years came to a 1.46. But then he kicked his index toe with his left heel and was reassured. Soon, Joe heard a shuffling of feet, and he recognized his buddy coming through the door and taking a seat along the windowsill; it was Clement Z. Kadidolhedda, fullback for good ol' U of Alabama. But Joe's attention was quickly diverted from Clem, for the examiner now moved to the front of the room and began to give instructions. And this is what he said.

"Good afternoon, gentlemen. My name is Mr. Yoind. Before you is a copy of the U. S. Selective Service Examination, prepared by the U. S. Government in cooperation with John Nestle and George Wallace. A good score on this test will not necessarily exempt you from the draft, but rather will be taken into consideration along with your age, marital status, college status, and class position. This test by itself will have little influence, unless you do exceptionally poorly. However, it is your duty to Uncle Sam and Cassius Clay to do your best, answering all the questions honestly."

"Put your name and draft number at the top of the page. Use a number 2 pencil (you'll try harder). The results of this exam, along with your army physical appointment date, will be forwarded to you in twelve months, due to the unpleasant fact that our workers are all civil service employees."

Clem, our boy from Alabama, sat staring mystically for three hours at the front wall. After a while, the perceptive Mr. Yoind noticed Clem's inactivity, walked over to him, and queried: "Clement, why haven't you begun the test?", to which Clem replied that he was still waiting for Mr. Yoind to say "GO!" Mr. Yoind became very frustrated. It is interesting to note here that once Clem finally got started, he did miraculously well, getting 19 out of 79 correct—and more than passed the minimum mental requirement. In fact, because he scored above average, Clem was drafted immediately and placed in the Intelligence Corps.

In the next Collegian, you will have a chance to take the U. S. Army's Minimum Draft Intelligence Test—Sam Sparc version. Also, you will be provided with an answer key with all wrong answers, which, in our boy Joe's case, were all the right answers. See if you can compare with Joe Namath's I.Q. See you then.

Cap the bottle on four years of college with a swinging week-long launching ceremony at SENIOR WEEK '66

Senior Class members and their guests have for the first time in University history the opportunity to enjoy a full-scale senior week in the full sense of the term.

The LAURELS country club and resort in New York state is a plush, swinging establishment which will provide for all seniors and their guests:

- luxury rooms
- all meals
- a myriad of activities (indoor and outdoor pools, golf, tennis, dancing, etc.)
- free PARTIES with legal beverages served.

In order to reserve a place for you and your guest at this once in a lifetime affair, June 6-12, bring a twenty-five dollar deposit to the RSO Office now. Total cost for the entire week will be only sixty dollars. A fabulous buy and a fabulous opportunity to say goodbye to UMass in the kind of style you like.

However, you must act now as places are rapidly becoming filled. After the payment of your deposit, only thirty five dollars more must be paid it between now and June for the greatest week of your life.

Roister Doisters'

Plays Cover Comedy Spectrum

By NANCY ABRAMS

This weekend the Roister Doister Dramatic Society is presenting three one-act plays. They are The Apollo of Bellac by Jean Giraudoux, Antigone by Jean Cocteau, and A Slight Ache by Harold Pinter.

Directed by Kenneth Bordner, the evening provides an interesting sample of non-commercially-oriented theater.

The Apollo of Bellac is a comedy with a deeper message. The Man from Bellac teaches Agnes, a timid young woman, the secret of getting along with men: tell them they are handsome.

She ends up improving the morale of several men as well as saving a marriage. Also, she finds that it is the woman who raises the self-esteem of a man that is considered beautiful by men.

This version of Antigone keeps the plot of the ancient Greek tragedy as well as the use of a chorus. The most unusual aspect of the production is the costuming.

The problem of the individual against the government is shown to be a universal one by having the actors dressed in costumes representing all periods of history and all age groups.

Antigone is a modern campus rebel complete with long, straight hair, tight pants, and high boots. Creon is a prohibition-era gangster, his son is clothed in a simple tunic and sandals, one guard is a Nazi and the other a Roman soldier.

A Slight Ache is absurdist drama. It begins with Flora and Edward enjoying breakfast, heightened by the crisis of the wasp in the marmelade. Edward sees a matchseller through the hedge and, being afraid of him, orders his wife to bring the matchseller into the house.

A completely passive hunchback who never speaks, he is adopted by Flora as her new love.

Edward, as the curtain falls, has told all his memories to the matchseller and lies, his soul drained, on the floor with the matchseller's tray of matches. He and the matchseller have changed places.

Walter Lee Mosher, Edward, sounds of James Sargent, the Matchseller, in A Slight Ache.

Leading Actors Create Their Own Interpretations

By LOIS COHEN

Feature Editor

For their current performance, the Roister Doisters have chosen three one-act plays: The Apollo of Bellac, by Giraudoux, Antigone, by Cocteau, and Pinter's The Slight Ache.

The Apollo of Bellac is, according to its leading actors Jane Helman and Ted Buswick, A "beautiful and delicate fantasy". When Agnes (Jane Helman) is given the secret of beauty by the god of beauty, she finds complete happiness.

There is sadness also in the story, but of the "Peter Pan" type, when the god of beauty must leave. The sadness is not to be treated as tragedy, but as part of the fantasy, and it in no way mars the beauty in the story.

Both Jane Helman and Ted Buswick agree the play is a difficult one because it is "like a piece of glass" and it is "hard to be magical and real at the same time." To understand the author and their parts more fully, they had to read many others of Giraudoux's works.

It is up to the audience to decide whether the god of beauty is magical or real, and the actors feel that the play "loses none of its delicacy or beauty regardless of what that decision is."

Cocteau's Antigone, according to Jim Sargent who plays Haemon, is based on the Greek tragedy but is presented with a modern interpretation. There is modern dialogue, and the play is a "modern commentary."

The interpretation of the chorus differs greatly from the Greek use of chorus, in that it represents the "voices of all times, of all people"; it is universal.

The Slight Ache is written in the manner of the "theater of the absurd", but leading actors Elizabeth Corea and Walter Lee Mosher agree that it is more than that. Pinter's purpose was not merely to amuse, although an audience can watch for entertainment and not search for meaning.

The play was a difficult one to present for the actors because of its "many levels of meaning." There was not enough time for them to concentrate and learn to convey each one, and they limited their performance to the important ones.

Other problems arose because the characters had to learn in a two-week period to speak with a British accent. They worked extensively with their faculty advisor, Mr. Bucham, to develop the correct accents.

Another difficulty for the actors was the character of the play itself. This was the first absurdist play that Mosher had done, and it was exhausting work to both develop their parts with no cues and to convey "the meaning and motivation."

According to director Ken Bordner, the production of three plays instead of just one presented no unusually great problems. There was more difficulty in having to present three different beginnings and to immediately set the mood for each, but this was balanced by the freedom from having to maintain a mood for three or more acts.

The three plays, each so different from the others, and the limited amount of time that the group had to rehearse, presented problems for the actors, but each found meaning in, and identified completely with, parts.

Walter Lee Mosher, as Edward, nurses A Slight Ache.

Therese, played by Linda DeCast, makes a point in The Apollo of Bellac.

Roister Doisters was founded in 1911, and is the oldest student organization at UMass. The group takes its name from the play Ralph Roister Doister by Nicholas Udall, one of the first English comedies. Credits toward membership are earned through participation in Roister Doister productions and in the academic theatre program.

"... warm, amusing Productions Highlight Dramatic Activity"

By JON HUTTON

Last night, the Roister Doister Society presented an evening of one-act plays, which will, hopefully, run for two more evenings. All three of the plays made use of the same basic scenery, and this set proved adaptable to each of them, even though they differed considerably in style.

In The Apollo of Bellac, Jane Helman's portrayal of Agnes, recipient of the secret of true beauty, was at once warm and amusing. Her use of gesture in describing her flat and starway was particularly brilliant, and the general quality of her performance was excellent.

Ted Buswick, as a guard in Antigone, performs his several duties.

This might also be said of Richard Bellerive and Chuck Interlandi, both of whom turned in clear and well - delineated performances. Ted Brunswick, however, was a bit awkward in his part as The Man (or the God of Beauty).

Although this awkwardness might well have been turned in his favor as art of the character he played, and although vocally his performance was reasonably good, (the end result was rather like a clumsy ostrich with a good voice).

THE HUMOR of Robert Singer as the vice-president was well received, and he displayed a good sense of timing and comedy. His enunciation, though, left something to be desired, as was the case with Linda DeCost, who, as Therese, tended to swallow her words.

Jean Cocteau's version of Antigone was a difficult undertaking, and director Ken Bordner, using costume and action (to point up the universality and timelessness of the theme, brought it off rather well).

By using costumes ranging from Classic Greek to Nazi to Chicago hoodlum, he emphasized Cocteau's mixture of classic and contemporary dialogue. (The characters used a combination of stylized and more natural action) to great advantage.

Carole Willard, as Antigone, had a commanding stage presence, achieved more through her strong, clear voice than by physical means.

She was outshone, however, by William Sibley, who, as Creon, managed a very convincing portrayal of a very difficult role.

Though he appeared ill at ease occasionally with the incongruous dialogue, he sustained the intense emotion of the final scene masterfully.

Patricia Cooke gave a rather hollow, and extremely breathy airing of Ismene. She seemed terribly preoccupied with clutching at her bosom, and one could not be sure if she was trying to express emotion, or merely to hold up her costume.

(Otherwise, her actions were sufficiently vague to effectively portray a dish rag.)

James Sargent almost same close to a good performance, but became rooted to the stage in a profile stance which he seemed unable to break out of.

THE FINAL PLAY of the evening, A Slight Ache, will undoubtedly tedly provide its audience with food for thought for quite some time. Betty Corea, though amusing and clear, seemed a bit too lively for an aging woman, and much of the pathetic humor of her flirtations with the Match-seller was lost.

Walter Mosher managed to appear older, but even though the emotional content of his lines themselves often did not, and in fact, became, at times, quite inaudible.

In spite of these shortcomings, (the overall performance was excellent, and where the performance fell a bit, Pinter's work carried the burden, and) this play is, in itself, well worth the price of admission.

Former Editor Reminisces On The Collegian of '47

(ED. NOTE: This is the first article of three written exclusively for the Collegian, at the invitation of its editors. Dr. Politella reminisces of his tenure as editor of the 1947 Collegian, from his current position of associate professor of English and Journalistic Studies.)

by Dario Politella '47

They were anything but halcyon days—that spring semester of 1947 when I succeeded the editorship of the Massachusetts Collegian.

My domain was a large office at the southwest corner of Mem Hall. The only separation then of the editor's territory from the news room was a large roll-top oak desk matched with an equally well-worn swivel chair from which many a story plan had been conjured.

It was the very same desk and the identical chair which had been manned in 1932-33 by my brother (now Dr. Joseph Politella, professor of philosophy at Kent (O.) State University. His principal claim to fame as a Collegian editor are that he had been the only editor to serve two terms to that time and that he took sports coverage off page one and established the back pages as sports news pages. The athletic coaches never forgave him for that.

I LIKE TO THINK THAT my own claims to fame are surely as earth-shattering. They began with the fact that I was one of the first veterans to edit the newspaper in the post-WW II years. And the accident of time dictated that there would be a number of Big Stories to guide into type.

The biggest of these, of course, was the campaign to change the name from Mass. State College to the University of Massachusetts. Another was to tell the story of the impact of the new breed of student who was invading the campuses during the late Forties: the GI-Bill Boys. And there was also the story of the New Journalism on campus. With the offering of courses by a professional journalist, the Collegian took on an aura of purpose which has persisted to this day in a "Free and Responsible Press" which we then termed to be "The Most Powerful Newspaper on Campus."

Helping with these stories was a harem of reporters . . . a throwback to the WW II days of male-less campuses. In fact, the Collegian editor who gave me my chance to write columns and feature articles between stringing for the Boston Herald was a woman, Rosie Speer.

At that, the Collegian staff of 50 per cent males had made the adjustment to peacetime much quicker than the Index. The 1947 yearbook could boast only one man for every four distaffers.

But it was not all fun and games.

THE COLLEGIAN'S BIG STORY, that year, was the name change. Those of us who served the newspaper then liek to think we had a lot to do with helping this historic event to materialize. The story had begun almost a decade before. The veterans revitalized the agitation for new status when they returned from more pressing business abroad.

The Collegian's kick-off was in a column I story called "Duke's Mixture" (described as a potpourri of campus comment. The name originated from a nickname and a popular brand of roll-one's-own cigarette tobacco). In the Nov. 8 1946 edition, I had pointed out that the average MSC faculty member earned $1,750 per annum.

"The time to correct such a condition is now, when money is at a premium, in comparison with the things it will buy. Massachusetts can place itself at the forefront of this crusade (for higher salaries) by enlarging the facilities here at MSC and creating the University of Massachusetts . . ."

We continued the story in true propagandist fashion. Thumping the theme, "We are a University in fact but not in name," we bombarded the legislators with copies of the newspaper. With them, we also supplied ammunition to friends of the college to use in arguing the passage of Bill S-533 which was introduced in the State Senate to rename the college.

Besides promoting a Legislator's Day to draw them to the campus to inspect our facilities (some legislators had confessed they were not aware that the Commonwealth owned a college west of Worcester!), we planned to take to the air. A couple of us veterans who had been aviators had arranged to rent an Aeronca Champion, arm ourselves with propaganda leaflets urging passage and fly to Boston to "bomb" the Capitol into passing S-533.

COOLE RHEADS HAD the foresight to check the legality of such a mission. The state aeronautic authority reacted with thumbs down. They explained politely that it would be expensive to clean up the litter. (Besides, we knew, it's a Federal offense to throw anything out of an airplane.)

Bill S-533 passed easily in the State Senate on April 10. As it lay on the table of the House of Representatives, we waited in an agony of anticipation. With assurances that its passage was inevitable the next week, we went ahead by making up the paper in advance with a banner headline on page one to scream the good news. The gamble was lost, however.

Twas in the issue of the 19th of April in '47 (and hardly a Collegian reporter is still around to remember that fateful day and year) that we confessed the reason we were two days late with that week's issue.

Managing Editor Avrom Romm (now editor of the Middletown, N. Y., Record) and Associate Editor Edward Cynarski (now a newspaperman in North Adams) had established press headquarters in Room 533 (clever?) of the Hotel Bellevue in Boston.

From there, they filed stories by telephone of the progress (or lack of it) of S-533 through the House. They had taken the "thumb route" to the capital, incidentally, since the precarious financial condition of the Collegian, in those days, did not permit expense accounts.

The issue of April 17 was to have been the Big Announcement Issue. We had it all made up and on the press, waiting only for the word to flash that the House had passed S-533 before giving the order to Ham Newell to "roll 'em."

We described the Big Gamble for our readers in an editorial.

"Like a bunch of expectant fathers and godmothers, we haunted the office waiting for the Boston call to announce to our campus world that the Great White Fathers on Beacon Hill had finally decided to call us the UNIVERSITY in name for what we have been these many years in fact. But all the news we got each day at five was: 'Hold everything . . . postponed until tomorrow . . . call you then "The first day wasn't too bad . . . the second was a little worse, but the news of the third was hair-raising. Our reporters resignedly announced that we had better scrap the whole edition and start again. So we agreed and this is it.

"We regret that the Collegian did not meet its Thursday deadline—but it was surely in the interests of being the first with the biggest news scoop of the year.

"We went on the air over WMSC (predecessor to WMUA) Thursday night with Arnie Levin (their newscaster) to give all our listeners the latest in the U of M developments. In that way we feel that our duty to our subscribers was fulfilled."

In the issue of May 1, we were able to announce the triumph of S-533 and our reward: the Class of '47 would be graduated with a UNIVERSITY diploma.

As an added historical note: you can still see the five-cent coin which connected the Collegian with its reporter on Beacon Hill, the day the UM bill was passed. Imbedded on a wooden shield, it hangs in the Collegian office in the Student Union.

As soon as Av Romm had said "go," an intrepid staffer signaled the chime-ringer standing by in the belfry of the Old Chapel (her name is lost forever to history). And in the dusk of that April day, the hills reverberated to the triumphant caroling of our Big Story!

The Spirit of '76 and Paul Revere was surely upon all us student journalists, that day.

(The second article will appear Monday. Ed. note.)

Volpe Announces Med School Designers

Governor John A. Volpe announced today selection of two Massachusetts architectural firms and a nationally known medical school consultant as the project team for the planning and design of the new University of Massachusetts Medical School at Worcester.

Dr. Anthony J. J. Rourke, New Rochelle, N. Y., has been selected as consultant for the Medical school project to the Bureau of Building Construction of the Executive Office for Administration and Finance.

The architectural firms selected are Campbell, Aldrich and Nulty, of Boston, and Ritchie Associates, Inc., of Chestnut Hill, specialists in hospital and medical facility design.

Dr. Rourke is widely known as a planner in the area of hospital and medical school construction. Among projects with which he has been associated are the medical school of the University of Tennessee, University of Pennsylvania, Jefferson University at Philadelphia, Wayne University at Detroit, and the University of South Carolina. He has just completed a feasibility study for Furman University Medical School, South Carolina.

Dr. Rourke is immediate past president of the American College of Hospital Consultants. He has programmed and planned a large number of hospitals in the United States.

Campbell, Aldrich and Nulty are a well-known Boston architectural firm. They have wide experience in planning and design for major educational institutions. They have recently performed master planning for Dartmouth College, Amherst, and Bradford Junior College. Among their major architectural commissions in the educational field were the design of the Graduate Research Center and the Business School of the University of Massachusetts.

They are associate architects for the new Boston City Hall and designed the General Library at Tufts University and the Data Processing Center of the First National Bank of Boston.

Ritchie Associates, Inc., founded in 1909, are specialists in hospital and medical facility design. They are currently en-

Civil Defense Specialist Forms Emergency Club

George Vinskey, extension rural civil defense specialist at the University of Massachusetts, has announced the formation of the first Emergency Preparedness Club in this area.

The club has been organized in Southampton within the framework of the 4-H program by nine high school youngsters under the leadership of Mrs. Harold Norton, Mrs. James J. McMahon, Jr., and Mrs. Romaine Lambert.

Purpose of the project is to teach the young people skills useful in coping with man-made or natural disasters. Subjects they study include medical self-help, safety, basic understanding of radiation, fallout shelter principles, and preparedness for floods, hurricanes and other natural disasters.

"Basically, civil defense in the United States is civil government-federal, state and local — prepared for effective action to limit damage and speed recovery in the event of a major disaster," Vinskey said.

Preparedness groups like the one in Southampton can be formed by any group of young people and leaders, the UMass extension specialist said. Information is available at the UMass rural civil defense office, Stockbridge Hall.

Cooperating with Vinskey in the Southampton project is Charles Wissenach, Hampshire County 4-H extension agent, and John F. W. Schulze, Region 1 and rural civil defense program leader.

"Come Out Into the Sun"

By GENEVIEVE REALL
UMass '63

Come Out Into the Sun, collected poems from 29 years of Robert Francis' writing, is his sixth volume of poetry—and a complimentary one. Beginning with 41 new poems, the book also contains selections from The Orb Weaver (Wesleyan, 1960) and works from his early out-of-print books: The Sound I Listened For (1944), Valhalla and Other Poems (1938), and Stand With Me Here (1936).

Francis bears the markings of his New England forebears, most notably Frost and Dickinson. His is a Yankee economy and, like his kindred bards, he has chosen Nature for his canvas.

The "Early Poems" as striking for their Frostian language, terseness; an unembroidered address by the poet to Nature at her most elementary, most unspectacular, yet most revealing.

He reaches us with his nonsense Frostian tone; a modest, conversational, unelaborate, off-the-cuff voice.

There is a sense of lack of thoroughness in his earlier pieces, however; a sense that the poet has given his subjects a briefer glance perhaps, an un-reverberating commentary which does not pursue us as we leave the poem and turn the page. The stroke is more introverted; the scope more personal.

The reflection of man in beast, and vice versa, drawing their fascinating analogies and personalities, is a technique practically absent here but proves highly effective and characteristic of Francis' later material.

The middle and recent pieces most earn him the rank of poet. He shows himself such in the original sense—a singer of praises, praises to life. From this seed to man, his is a jubilant affirmation of faith in the living, and rejoicing is his emblem.

The detail, the homely fact, transcends itself, becomes symbol and vehicles of a panoramic view. The mirrored interplay of man and Nature, Nature and beast, and man is something at which Francis is very adept.

Does he meet his standards? Yes, for where lucidity is concerned, where the perfected paring down of expression to subject is concerned, there is no problem; but suggestiveness—that's something else.

Francis is a precise, compassionate, and articulate craftsman. But what was missing was verbal music, sensuousness, the rapture with colors and delight with sounds as well as aptness of a word.

Mr. FRANCIS has an interesting mind; he is intrigued with the juxtaposition of ideas, their contrasts and ironies—like placing pictures variously on a wall.

But poetry must feed the pill in the guise of a bon bon. That seems part of a poet's job—whipping sense into confection, persuading us via our unreflecting appetites.

UM Press Releases New Book

—A University of Massachusetts Press book is one of 23 selected by the jury of the New England Book Show for its current travelling exhibit, the University Press has announced.

The book, "The Symphonies of Ralph Vaughan Williams" by Elliot S. Schwartz is part of the traveling show that will be at Robert Frost Library, Amherst College, through Saturday, Feb. 5.

The exhibit is designed to represent the best in all facets of New England publishing, with total design concept, manufacturing quality and the publishers' objective for each title taken into consideration.

Robert Francis, a noted New England poet, has added a new book to his list of successful works.

En Francais — and English!

The men and women's French Corridors will be sponsoring a series of French films this semester. They will all be classics of the French cinema, some of them award-winning, all of them well-known internationally and highly praised.

There will be six films in all, shown at intervals during the semester. The first of these films, "Monsieur Vincent" will be shown Monday night, Feb. 7, at 8:00 p.m. in Mahar Auditorium.

"Monsieur Vincent" is the Academy Award-winning story of the life of St. Vincent DePaul. A humbly-born priest of the 17th century, he devoted his life to "... the poor, my brothers, and my masters."

This film has been declared in the "ranks with the all-time greats" by Newsweek Magazine. Besides the Academy Award, it has won ten international prizes.

Also on the list for the coming semester are such films as "Le Coeur Battant", to be shown on Feb. 4, and "Les Visiteurs du Soir", to be shown on Mar. 7.

Season tickets for all six of the plays will be on sale at Bartlett Hall, room 208, for $2.50. Tickets to the individual movies will be sold for $5.50.

By the way — the plays all have English subtitles, so even non-French majors can enjoy them.

Where's Ralph?

Have you seen Ralph? You know him—he used to visit you as you ate at the South Dining Commons or tear by you as you walked around campus.

Ralph is large, black, shaggy, very curly-haired, overly friendly, and looks like a huge poodle. Ralph (as you must know by now), is a DOG. He's a rather rambunctious dog, and last Friday he broke loose from his collar and, seemingly, ran away.

He was seen during meals at the dining commons last weekend, but no one has reported seeing him since Monday.

He's also a very lively dog, and he might have followed someone, or a car, in search of adventure.

Ralph's owners, five-year-old Neill and nine-year-old Page are concerned about Ralph's whereabouts and would like to hear from you if you have seen him this week or have any information about him. There will be a reward if you can help find him, and you can call his owners at Alpine 3-7831.

You've got to be wide awake to put the collegian to bed.

The production of a newspaper as large and as well-regarded as the Collegian is a remarkable thing. It is the product of many people, each with his own individual stamp and style, yet the final product must retain a traditionally high standard. An uncanny amalgamation of individuality and teamwork.

The Collegian owes its success and nationally-known fine reputation, then, to two factors: the individual quality of each staff member and the pride of the staff in the final product.

Each applicant for a position on the Collegian staff will be expected to possess a consummate degree of personal pride in his or her work; present staff members will quickly instill in successful applicants the tradition of pride which permeates each edition of the Collegian.

Conscientiousness is our most important pre-requisite; you can be taught to read and write, but only you can develop and nurture pride in your work.

Some Collegian staff positions have become available with the normal semester-break turnover. Applications are currently being accepted. Stop in and leave your name with the Collegian secretary on the second floor of the Union or drop in to see us at our meeting for new applicants on Monday, February 14.

Noted Violinist Here The Fifteenth Art Exhibition Opens Sunday

—Charles Treger, first American ever to win Poland's highly-regarded Wieniawski Violin Competition, will be presented by the University of Massachusetts Concert Association in a Feb. 15 concert at the Student Union.

The Wieniawski Competition, held in Poznan, Poland, is regarded in the music world as the major international proving ground for violinists. Treger won first place in November, 1962.

His New York debut was in January, 1964, in four solo appearances at Lincoln Center with the New York Philharmonic. The New York Times called him "one of our most important violinists" as a result of the series.

Treger lives with his wife and two daughters in Iowa City, where he is head of the string department at the University of Iowa.

Born in Detroit, Treger was singing folk songs in four languages at the age of three, taking violin lessons at nine and playing in the violin section of the Detroit Symphony at 16.

His UMass concert, at 8:00 p.m. in the Student Union ballroom, will begin with the Sonata in E Major by Handel, followed by Mozart's Sonata in G Major, K 379, and Nathan Milstein's "Paganiniana."

After intermission he will play the Sonata in G Major, Opus 78, of Brahms and Six Roumanian Folkdances by Bartok.

He will be accompanied by David Garvey at the piano. Tickets are on sale at the UMass Student Union ticket office and will be available at the door.

Recent Acquisitions

More than 60 recently-acquired works of art will go on display at the University of Massachusetts Student Union Sunday, Feb. 6, in the University's annual Recent Acquisitions Exhibition.

The public is invited to an opening reception Sunday afternoon from 3 to 5 p.m. The works will be on display through Feb. 25.

Represented in the exhibition will be paintings, graphics and sculpture acquired by the University for its permanent collection during the past year and the latter part of 1964.

Many of these works have been donated by the artist, or by faculty, students, galleries and friends of the University.

Others have been purchased from trust funds especially set aside for the purpose. After the exhibit, the works will be allocated on a loan basis for hanging in offices throughout the campus.

Artists represented include Walter Barker, George Cohen, Leonel Gongora, Lyle N. Perkins, David Von Schlegell, Sybil Wilson and many others.

The exhibit is meant to give "an interesting cross-section of artistic viewpoints" rather than try to display examples of all types of contemporary art, according to Dr. Paul F. Norton, head of the UMass art department. The art department is sponsoring the show in cooperation with the Student Union Art and Music Committee.

Healey Named to Ed. Board

Amherst, Mass. — Joseph P. Healey of Arlington, President of the Middlesex County National Bank, has been named by the University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees to represent UMass on the new Board of Higher Education.

The new board, formed under provisions of the Harrington-Willis Act, will coordinate policies of the four major elements of public higher education in Massachusetts — University of Massachusetts, State Colleges, Technological Institutes, and Community Colleges.

A graduate of Harvard University, Mr. Healey also received his M.B.A. and law degrees at that institution. He is a former Massachusetts Tax Commissioner, and has been a member of the UMass Board of Trustees since 1959.

Swimmers Win

The UMass Swimming Team returned to the winning track with a decisive 57-8 victory over a powerful Holy Cross squad here at the Boyden pool Jan. 1.

In the opening event, which proved to be the most exciting event of the entire season, the UMass Medley Relay team whipped the best that the Cross had to offer and set a new University record in the process, with a time of 4:05.9.

Co-Captain Dick Daniels followed this up with a victory in the 200 yd. freestyle with a time of 1:59.8, slow for Dick.

Chip Wyser then copped first place in his specialty, the 50 yd. Freestyle with a time of 23.8. Dick Lennon, who has broken and rebroken his 200 yd. Individual Medley record consistently this year, did it again with a time of 2:14.9.

The Redmen gained more valuable points in the diving, with Tony Roubound taking second and Dick D'Andrea third. The grueling 200 yd. butterfly also went to Holy Cross.

The 100 yd. Freestyle went to UM with Ken Nowak turning in the best time of his career, a 51.3. Fred Anderson then took second in the Backstroke, and Dick Daniels paddled to victory once again in the 500 yd. Freestyle.

The Crusaders won the Breaststroke, with Ted Severn taking second and Dick Lennon third.

The 400 yd. Freestyle Relay of Nowak, Daniels, Lennon (right from the 200 yd. Breaststroke), and Wyser then proceeded to set the third record of the evening with a time of 3:32.

The swimmers have their work cut out for them, as they return from the vacation to visit Coast Guard Academy on February 5.

Where Was The Huskie Hiding?

By MIKE GOULD
Sports Editor

For the second successive year the UConn Huskies ran the Redmen out of Curry Hicks Cage. Last year it was excused. Last Wednesday night it was shocking.

Fred Shabel's Huskies outplayed John Orr's Redmen in every phase of the game of basketball. UC outshot UM 44% to 39%, controlled the backboards, 60-41, and layed superior defense in an outstanding team effort. The most foreseeing of prophets could not have predicted such a one sided victory by a Huskie team whose previous record spelled mediocrity. Then again, who was to know that under Wednesday night's full moon the Huskie would turn tiger?

UConn entered the UM game with a so-so 8-6 record, far below its pace at this time last year. It had dropped a decision to a Holy Cross unit with which the Redmen toyed earlier this season and, like UM, had lost to Rhode Island. The Huskies were being pegged as a one man team, and for the first time in many a moon, the Redmen were given an excellent chance to whip their rivals.

The Ormen, however, showed that they have not yet broken the habit of playing their worst against UC. Our boys seemed to be under a spell, perhaps that of the full moon, but more likely that of a spirited band of Huskies who were determined to bring the bacon back to Storrs.

If the Redmen played their poorest game of the season, the Huskies played their best. Coach Shabel got a typically great shooting display from Wes Bialosuknia and a fine floor game from leader Tom Penders. The fans at the Cage also saw an exhibition of aggressiveness and defensive magic by an underrated Dan "Spider" Hestford, and great all-around work by much improved sophomores Bill Corley and Bob Steinberg.

It was to be one of those nights for Coach Orr and his boys. The Redmen were literally falling all over each other during the game while the Huskies put together an almost unbelievable total of 23 straight points.

Billy Tindall seemed helpless as 6'8" UConn pivotman Corley bagged 19 rebounds. The shoe was on the other foot when the two clashed as freshmen last year.

So stifling was the UC zone defense that UM star Clarence Hill could garner but one field goal in the first half. The Redmen elected to pass the ball around the outside of the zone and were only occasionally able to get a second shot at the basket. Many of their shots were forced efforts, and several were blocked. The pick and screen seemed to be mere abstract terms for the sluggish Redmen.

Bialosuknia showed a great touch from downtown, as he used big Corley as a screen on several occasions.

The Huskies were not to be denied Wednesday night. They were really out for blood. Ask Gary Gasperack.

Frosh Mermen Triumph

The junior Mermen walked away with their second victory of the season against one defeat, with a 56-39 trouncing of the Holy Cross frosh. Showing good all-around power, Mass. took seven of the eleven events, starting with a win in the 200 yd. Medley Relay in a time of 1:52.2, swum by Keyes, Sullivan, Donahue, and Morton. UMass took first and third in the 200 yd. Freestyle, McMahon and Senior, respectively. All first three finishers had a time of 2:06.4, and it took a five minute judge's conference to decide the places. Joyce then took second in the 50 yd. Freestyle, with Kramer taking third and Asquith left the field in his wake, winning the 200 yd. I.M. in 2:15.9. Spry took third. Mass. swept the diving with Larson first and LaFerriere second.

The 100 yd. Butterfly went to Mike Donehue in a time of 1:00.4, and Dick Donehue took third. The swimming team became a loser in a sense, as Mike swam his last event for the University. He's leaving school for personal reasons. Mike was being trained for next year's Varsity Butterfly competition with Steve Levy. The 200 yd. Butterfly event is probably the toughest and most tiring event in a meet, and the exceptional talents and speed Mike possessed will be missed in this relatively weak position of the team.

Bob Asquith took second and Joyce third in the 100 yd. Freestyle, and Keyes took first, Cases third in the 100 yd. Backstroke. McMahon's 4:39.6 was good enough to win the 400 yd. Freestyle with Senior taking third. Sullivan finished the UM scoring with a strong second place in the 100 yd. Breaststroke.

The Frosh swimmers this year have shown themselves to be the best crop of rookies in Joe Rogers' 36 years of coaching at the University. They previously beat Tufts 61-31, and lost a heart-breaker to Wesleyan, 48-47, to ruin any hopes of an undefeated season. The Frosh have taken seven swimming records this year, and it looks like there are more to follow, possibly in their next meet against UConn, here on February 9th at the Boyden pool.

GIRL GYMNASTS TO PERFORM

By AL RICE

The UMass Women's gymnastics team begins a busy month of competition tomorrow when they face West Chester State College in the first of four meets on tap in the next three weeks.

West Chester has had girls competition for about five years, two more than Massachusetts, but both teams recently beat Southern Connecticut by similar margins, so it's expected the 1 p.m. meet should be a close one. This is the first trip to Massachusetts by West Chester for dual meet competition as most of their contests are in the New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio region.

The Boyden Auxiliary Gym

won't be a strange sight to two of the West Chester performers, however. The Babushka sisters, Ellen and Barbara, both experienced in national meets, appeared last year when UMass hosted the Northeast Regional Invitational Tournament. Ellen is the national Sokol (a Czech gymnastics club) champ and is going to try out for next year's World Games, to be held in Germany.

Both teams are off peak form from the long vacations, but two UMass competitors saw action recently in an exhibition meet in Framingham and they did very well. Marianne Davis and Sue Clancy competed as special guests against the nine top women in the country in a practice meet for the World Games. Miss Davis, a junior from Wellesley, placed fourth in the floor exercises and Sue Clancy, a freshman from Newton, was sixth on the uneven parallel bars. Miss Clancy thrilled a large home crowd by winning that event with an 8.7 score against Southern Connecticut in December in her first collegiate meet. Marianne, coming back from serious injuries suffered in competition last summer, averaged an 8.24 all-around in the same meet.

The UMass team will have two more members this semester as Charlyn Webster returns from a practice teaching assignment and Sue Doane begins competing for the first time since her transfer from Springfield College. Charlyn placed in the top ten nationally in a collegiate meet last spring. Miss Doane has been kept off the team by a series of ankle injuries since she appeared in a Sport Magazine photo spread appearing last winter on the Springfield gymnastics team.

Tomorrow's 1 p.m. meet is the first of many in a big week for University gym teams. The varsity will meet Temple in Philadelphia and the freshmen will compete at Braintree High, also tomorrow. Tuesday night Coast Guard Academy will appear in a non-league meet, and next Saturday the girls will have another home meet against the Western Mass High School all-stars.

SKI CAPITAL OF THE EAST

Redmen Overwhelmed By UConn, 90 - 60

by Glenn Briere

Most of the 4025 spectators in Curry Hicks Cage Wednesday night sat down expecting a tight closely fought game. Instead, they saw the Huskies from Connecticut catch Massachusetts completely off guard to run away with a 90-60 Yankee Conference victory.

The teams went into the game seeming to be evenly matched. UConn had a something less than spectacular 8-6 record, including a loss to Holy Cross, whom the Redmen had beaten easily. Each team also had a conference loss, each to Rhode Island. But the defending YC champs stunned the Redmen with a spectacular shooting display and an aggressive, pressing defense which exhausted their opponents. UMass found it quite difficult to penetrate the zone.

The game started out with a three point play by Huskie ace Wes Bialosuknia. UMass came back with scores by Jim Babyak, Clarence Hill and Billy Tindall to give the Redmen a 6-5 edge. That was the last time they were to lead in the game. Connecticut strung together ten points, including three buckets by red hot Bialosuknia. The Redmen broke that string on two baskets by Babyak, and they crept to within four points. But again the Huskies caught fire, and within a two minute span they outscored Massachusetts 14-1. At the same time, they hawked and pressed the disorganized Redmen, who were hardly able to get a shot off.

Behind 28-11, UMass began to peek away at the lead. Babyak sparked a brief spurt of brilliance that brought them to within nine points of UConn, and the Redmen fans had something to cheer about. But once again the Huskies broke it open, and they held an unbelievable 46-23 lead at halftime.

The second half was a little more even, but Massachusetts' jitters had not been cured, and they were unable to mount a sizeable attack. UConn slowed down play and their shooting cooled off, but they were able to coast in on the lead which they had built up in the first half. The closest the Redmen came was 18 points with fourteen minutes remaining. Greg Rand, who showed some promise, did a good job late in the game, but it was too late.

There is little doubt that Connecticut won the game by hustling. They were far more aggressive than the unusually lackadaisical Redmen. The Huskies also hurt UMass very much off the bench, outbounding them by a 60-41 margin. Overall, it was one of the poorer games for the Redmen, who seem to run up against red hot teams on their off-nights.

Wes Bialosuknia and Bob Steinberg excelled for UConn, scoring 23 and 22 points respectively. Babyak led the Redmen with 17, and UMass star Hill, who had been averaging 25 points, was held to 16. Connecticut's Bill Corley scored 14 points and grabbed 19 rebounds. UConn is 9-6 overall, and 4-1 in the conference. UMass is 7-8 and 2-2.

The Redmen will host a tough Vermont team at the Cage tomorrow night. Next Tuesday they will travel to Boston College for a shot at Cousy's Eagles. They will be looking for revenge on February 19 when they meet UConn at Storrs in an ECAC TV game.

Rifleman Victors

On Sat., Jan. 8, the rifleman from UMass defeated the rifle team from the University of New Hampshire by a score of 1229 to 1173. This marked the first victory for the Redmen sharpshooters, who have previously dropped matches to Vermont and Maine.

son Flaming A's, who have yet to lose a game in two years of regular season competition, ran their record to 32-0 fifth a sweep of the Chadbourne Maroons, who came into the match with a 28-4 record. In other Dorm B action the Oaks and Trojans swept the Chestnuts and Aces 8-0, while the Maples took 6 of 8 from the Eagles.

In the A league, the Lemons, Hickorys, Patriots, and Comanches shut out the Bruins, Hacks, Hilo's and Redmen, respectively. The Comanches took over first place with a 28-4 record.

Homer Davis led the match scoring with a mark of 267 out of a possible 300. On the UMass side Davis was followed by Peter Gallagher, 260, Maurice Case, 252, Al Medeiros, and Paul Lysko 224. Bob Eno topped the scoring for UNH with a 253. The other New Hampshire shooters who figured in the match scoring were Mullins, 240, Smith, 227, Herman, 227 and Binnie 226.

Despite the two early season losses, Coach Margelony is still confident of finishing with a victorious season. The Redmen's next contest will be an invitational match in New London, Conn. on Feb. 12.

Ever improving sophomore Greg Rand showed well against Connecticut and should see more action in games to come.

Freshmen Defeated

By TOM FITZGERALD

A full-court zone press, applied to advantage by the University of Connecticut Freshmen, was the story as the UMass Frosh bowed to the Huskies, 68-62, at the Cage Wednesday night. The game marked the third loss for the Little Redmen, who hold four victories.

UMass held sway in the first half, leading by 22-18 at the ten-minute mark. With Joe DiSarcina engineering the fast break and with Mike Gemei and Ron Nowakowski supplying the pointage, UMass built the lead up to 37-24.

The Huskies, however, awoke and garnered 12 of the final 14 points of the half. Guard Fred Malan and forward John Melen led this drive, which cut the Redmen's lead at halftime to 39-36.

A basket by Glenn Pollard and a turn-around jumper by Bill Gray put UConn in front, 40-39, to start the second half. UMass retaliated with a hoop by Peter Gayeska, a driving lay-up by John Schockro, a foul shot by Gayeska, and a basket from outside by Nowakowski, making the score 46-40, UMass on top.

Pollard sparked UConn to eight of the next nine points, as the Huskies took over the lead again, 48-47. After two-pointers by Gemei and Gayeska had shot UMass back in front by 51-48, the Huskies took over the lead for keeps on a free throw by Milani, a field goal by Bruce Drummond, and a drive by Pollard, to move UConn ahead, 53-51, with ten minutes left.

UConn maintained the lead the rest of the way, with eight points the biggest margin.

Gemei, Nowakowski, and Gayeska led the Redmen with 16, 15, and 14 points respectively. For UConn, the 5'10" Pollard, a real swiftie in the lane, stood out with 19 points, while Greg Coleman scored 1 and Melen 12.

UMass'3 next contest will be against the St. Anselm's Frosh tomorrow night at the Cage. The six-o'clock affair will precede the varsity game with Vermont.

IM REPORT

By DAVE JARNES

The Butterfield Lemons, who had performed far below expectations before this week, dealt the title aspirations of the Comanches a severe blow with a 34-27 triumph.

Meanwhile the Colt 45's and the Mills Birch remained deadlocked for first with impressive victories. The Colts trampled the hapless Redmen 69-28 as Ferry (17), Greenblatt (15), Cohen (12), and Porter (12) all hit double figures. The Birches cruised past the Slippery Elms 44-33 as nine players contributed to the scoring for Mills.

The Pines negotiated a big upset by nipping the Trojans 29-27 in a tight low scoring game. Jay Kenny's 12 points paced the victors.

The Grayson Aces warmed up for their showdown battle with the Flaming A's by clobbering the Hawks 77-34. Jack Thomas hit the nets for 28 markers. The Plymouth Patriots remained in contention for the North League title by whipping the Panthers 64-0. Ray Stanelis, who leads all intramural scorers, had another big night with 4 point3ts.

In other games the Hoovers, led by John Allison's fine all-around play, edged out the Hilo's 47-40 and the Black Bears trounced the Limes 60-30.

Turning to bowling, the Gray-

Draft Policy Similar to Korea; UMass Not Yet Affected

Officials at the University told the Collegian that college students in Massachusetts need not worry about being drafted—at least not for a few more months. The number of draft-age males not in school is great enough to fill the draft quotas until the Spring.

The rumor that the names of students with grades in the bottom quarter of their class have been turned in to the Selective Service was also refuted by authorities.

College students had been expecting it for weeks, but when the selective service director announced last weekend that college students would be drafted to meet the demands of the growing military forces it was still a shock.

Lt. Gen. Lewis B. Hershey, head of the Selective Service System, said the guidelines for local draft boards are "similar to those employed during the Korean conflict."

THE ANNOUNCEMENT which had been expected when draft quotas continued above 30,000 a month, recalled that special test scores or class standings were used to determine deferment for future college study from 1952 to 1963.

Prior to this the primary requisite for college deferment was satisfactory pursuit of full-time college studies. But increases in military manpower authorized or proposed last August total 452,000, and drafting from colleges will tap a pool of more than 1,800,000 young men.

The announcement seemed to apply to only the II-S category—"registrant deferred because of activity in study"—and not to the I-Y group—"qualified national emergency." The second category contains some young men who missed being drafted because of relatively minor physical or mental factors.

During the Korean war and long afterward colleges reported a student's standing at the end of each academic year. He generally could be deferred if he was in the upper half of his freshman class, the upper two-thirds of his sophomore class, or the upper three-fourths of his junior class.

He could also take a selective service college qualification test that called for a passing mark of 70 for undergraduates and 80 for students at the post-graduate level.

Hershey had indicated earlier that he was more inclined toward the examination as a test for deferment, but his announcement specifically mentioned "test score or class standing."

Congress authorized an increase of 340,000 in the armed forces last August when it approved a budget addition of $1.7 billion for the pursuit of the war in Vietnam.

An additional 113,000 men would be authorized by the $12.3 billion supplemental appropriations request now before Congress.

The decision to rely upon the draft for Vietnam troops rather than turn to the reserves was made deliberately. Government officials described it as a "more equitable distribution of the burden."

IN TESTIMONY before congressional committees earlier, Robert S. McNamara, Secretary of Defense, remarked that "inasmuch as it appears desirable to be in position to deploy additional forces without calling up reserves, these support units must be provided in the active force structure."

Official figures put 197,000 American troops in Vietnam at present, but officials indicated that naval forces and other support units bring the total committed in Southeast Asia to more than 270,000.

How high that figure may go is the great uncertainty at this point. President Johnson has said that his pledge to prevent the Communist military takeover of South Vietnam means that as many troops as are required will be sent. The President has said that he will return to Congress for more money, and presumably, men if they are needed.

Some Congressional estimates have put the total requirement in Vietnam as high as 600,000 men.

"Tough" Female Editor Invades Male Bastion

A medium-sized blond coed from Radcliffe has been elected the first female editor of the Harvard Crimson, the news stories around the nation hailed it a "major victory for feminism."

The post goes to 19-year-old Linda McVeigh, an honors major in American History and literature. She will become managing editor in February, and thus is second only to the Crimson president in the newspaper's leadership.

She will be responsible for a news staff of about 30, about a third of them women. The job is, according to Crimson staffers, the hardest, most masculine post on the paper.

Andrew Beyer, the Crimson sports writer, was asked by reporters if he had found it difficult to vote for a woman. "Not Linda," was his reply; "she's tough."

Harrison Young, a drama critic, said, "There's more to her than just being tough. She's brave. You wouldn't mind being in a resistance movement with her."

The only problem Linda sees involves her social life. Her dates, she said, are generally with Crimson men. "After Saturday night, I have to be boss on Monday morning," she said. "That might be sort of touchy."

Plans Reviewed

Look Ahead to Growth

The University Expansion and Improvement Program is well underway. Information just released shows rapid development of new plans and steady progress on the plans already in existence.

Bids for the new Poultry Plant facility to be located at the Tillson Farm and the Farm Service Building addition have been received. The apparent low bidders are Leo P. Stramese and Peabody Construction Company respectively. Construction work on both projects is expected to start on or about March 1, 1966.

Meanwhile, work on the Administration Building is on schedule. The target completion date is April 1967 and that of the Goodell Air Conditioning project is June 1, 1966. The Renovation to Goessmann Laboratory is moving slowly and is being delayed by late deliveries of laboratory equipment.

Final plans and specifications for the first portion of the Graduate Research Center have been completed and $6,060,000 has been made available under the 1966 Capital Outlay Program to start site preparation work and to complete the design work on the second portion. The total project is estimated at approximately 20 million dollars.

Four other projects are in various stages of final design. These include: Addition to Machmer Hall, Bartlett Hall East, Central Stores Building and Campus Boulevard and Roads. Bids should be requested on these over the next six month period.

In the preliminary design stage are: Bartlett West, Physical Education Fields, South Deerfield Farm Complex and the Fine Arts Building.

While feasibility studies for both the Continuing Education Building and the New Library have been completed, funds for preparation of the plans and specifications have not been approved. As a result, initiation of construction on these two facilities will be delayed at least until the Fall of 1967 and most likely into 1968.

Also due to insufficient funds, the Renovation of Flint Laboratory will be postponed until such time as additional Capital Outlay monies are made available—hopefully in the Fall of this year.

Looking ahead, preliminary studies have been initiated on the Northwest Residence Complex and a major Addition to the Power Plant at the Amherst Campus.

Also, architects have been appointed for the Worcester Medical School and a preliminary scope is being developed for an Expansion of the Boston Branch.

Selectmen Approve Student Food Truck

Amherst Selectmen frowned on the plans but approved the charter of two UMass students and one former student who want to run a food truck on fringes of the campus.

A University ban on such vending prompted the Selectmen's dilemma. The solons indicated they wished to cooperate with the University in enforcing this policy, but decided that disapproving the students' character was not the proper means.

"The question legally before us is approving their character," First Selectman Norman MacLeod said. "There's no reason not to approve it. It's not their fault we haven't faced up to this problem previously."

Douglas Bruce, spokesman for the three entrepreneurs, said he is looking for a kitchen-storage building in a commercial zone, after MacLeod wondered where the three planned to operate.

The three haven't made any definite decisions, Bruce said, pending approval of their peddler's license. "It's suicide on my part to rent or buy without the license," Bruce said. The state dispenses the license automatically when it receives charter approval from the local Selectmen.

Finding a place to park might not be so easy. Bruce admitted, since all University property is closed to truck vending. This includes the North Hadley Rd. area the University will soon take over, where vendor Joseph Keene parks his food truck. Other possible sites are Butterfield Terrace and Eastman Lane.

Selectman Howard Atkins mentioned a possible forthcoming Town bylaw "not allowing certain vending on Town ways," but offered no details. Town Manager Allen Torrey noted that town streets are not subject to zoning restrictions, and that parking restraints would apply to residents also.

You're Invited

President John Lederle will hold Open Office Hours in his office in South College tomorrow from 4-5 p.m. The President has extended an invitation to all students to stop in and voice any opinions or questions that they might have.

Arrival of "Batman" Livens Camp Humor

Any possibility that camp humor has run its course on the campus was laid to rest with the advent of the "Batman" television series.

At the University of Illinois, officials installed 100 extra chairs in the student union TV room but still had to turn students away. For the next installment, they set aside the ballroom of the union building and still had standing room only.

THE STUDENT center and dormitory lounges were reported overflowing at the University of Kentucky as each new installment of the series was aired. Especially popular was the student center lounge where students could see "Biff, Zap, Bam, Blam..." come out in purple, green, and yellow on the color television.

THE MINNESOTA DAILY at the University of Minnesota ran a picture of the front page with the Batmobile pasted up over a picture of one of the campus streets. A fan club is underway on campus, the paper said, and already has about 50 members. It expects to distribute membership cards and Bat-insignias.

At the University of Michigan, the Michigan Daily's television critic tried to explain why students who digest Samuelson by day and Sartre by night could be drawn so magnetically toward the "electronic and intellectual vacuum tube." He quoted Phineas T. Barnum: "No one ever lost money underestimating the intelligence of the American people."

Banking on college jokes being just as funny in New Haven as they are in Berkeley or Slippery Rock, the Hallmark Card Company is coming out with a whole new line of cards just for the college student.

SUCH CARDS as "Happy Exams," and "You'll like it here... it's very intellectual. Even the rest rooms have English subtitles," are soon to flood college bookstores across the country.

The line of 45 cards, called "Curricula Prints," are the work of college humorists at 10 colleges and universities. Student panels on these campuses voted down 2,879 ideas that were submitted to them and accepted 73 publishable ones.

The humor mills were found on the campuses of Ohio State, Southern Methodist, Colorado, Michigan State, Missouri, Kansas, Tulsa, New York University, Ottawa, and the University of California at Los Angeles.

"Duke's Mixture," "The Stork Club," and "Operation Infant" — Dr. Politella Writes About the Collegian's post War Years

by DARIO POLITELLA Collegian Editor '47

Ed. note: This is the second of three articles on the Collegian of 1947.

The second Big Story with which we were blessed, that year, was that of the veteran on campus.

"Duke's Mixture" again was the vehicle for launching the vets' story. On Nov. 15, some 14 column inches of text described life in Federal Circle. Long gone now, the community of 94 one, two and three - bedroom row apartments had housed married vets at rents ranging from $32.25 to $51.25 a month.

Situated on what had been the old ROTC cavalry's corral just south of Munson Hall, the Circle had been unofficially designated as "Maternity Row." It was MSC's first experience with a birth rate statistic.

OUT OF THE ROW came the predecessor to what is now the "Dame's Club." It was then called the "Vets' Wives Club." The first chairman was Peggy Politella (the author's Row-mate).

The veteran and his family left indelible marks on the news columns of the 1946 - 47 Collegian. For example, a new feature kicking off on page one of the Feb. 7 issue was "The Stork Club." Labeled for "restricted membership", it carried this "Note to prospective parents: When it happens, please call 1148-W and tell Billingsley, Jr. about it."

And they did. By Apr. 24, a total of nine births had been recorded. Six of them were boys.

As an aid to future Stork Club reporters, we tried to keep up production by announcing, on Apr. 19, a prize for the first baby to be born on campus on New York's 1948.

"Careful consideration has been given to the time element involved in this 'Operation Infant', with expert advice from graduate students taking courses in genetics and home economics. All couples interested in entering this contest are urged to plan now."

THE ROW WAS ALSO responsible for changes in the distribution system of the Collegian. Beginning with the Apr. 19 issue, a public-spirited member of the staff made home deliveries to house-bound vets' wives.

But the story which gained the greatest attention concerned the social problem of how single, available coeds might distinguish the married, unavailable veteran. A page one story, headed "Married, Single? Damsel's Dilemma", so touched the news sense of professional editors that it was reproduced on the front page of the Boston Herald as a Sunday feature, it was used inside by the Boston Globe, and it was incorporated in a two-thirds page of text and pictures in the Boston Post.

The Collegian's lead paragraph read:

"A girl finds herself in a most difficult situation when, spotting a man that strikes her fancy, she delays turning on her attracting mechanism for fear that someone may already have attracted successfully long before. It was to alleviate this crisis that the Collegian called together three experts from the four corners of the earth to find one solution. We think we half (sic) found the answer..."

(ED. NOTE: For the full answer, see the Feb. 20, 1947 Collegian on microfilm.)

U. T. TO PRESENT "SIX TIMES FOUR"

Holt, Rinehart, Winston, speaking for the Robert Frost Estate, has withdrawn the rights for the University of Massachusetts Theatre to produce THE LETTERS AND POEMS OF ROBERT FROST. With two similar productions now touring the country, the Frost Estate felt that another production would overburden the 1965-66 theatrical season.

"We are naturally very disappointed," said director Vincen C. Brann, "the Frost work lends itself quite well to the reading stage. However, we are very lucky indeed to have an excellent source of literature to turn to in our own back yard." Mr. Brann is referring to The Massachusetts Review, a literary magazine published in Amherst. With the kind co-operation of the editors, he has assembled an anthology of staged readings selected from the Review and entitled, SIX TIMES FOUR.

SIX TIMES FOUR will be presented in Bowker Auditorium March 31, April 1, 2 on the campus of the University.

Tryouts for the production of SIX TIMES FOUR will be held on February 8 at 4:30 p.m. in 125 Bartlett, and February 9 at 7:30 p.m. in 125 Bartlett. Tryouts for this production are open to all. Those wishing to tryout should come prepared to read a short poem and/or a short prose selection. A short few paragraphs will suffice.

Army and Air Force Commission Thirteen

Joint commissioning ceremonies were held for graduating Army and Air Force ROTC cadets at Bowker Auditorium February 1, at 11:00 a.m.

The combined cadet brigades and graduating seniors were addressed by Mr. Daniel E. Hogan, Jr., guest speaker for the ceremonies. Hogan, a graduate of Yale Law School, is President of Standard International Corporation, a director of Merrimack Valley National Bank, and a Lieutenant Commander in the United States Naval Reserve.

Mr. Hogan stressed the importance of ROTC training to today's college students. Citing the very high percentage of business executives who have had ROTC training, Mr. Hogan commented that their experience in accepting responsibility and making decisions as officers was invaluable to them in later years.

Explaining why private enterprise values this experience very highly in its search for personnel to fill important positions, Commander Hogan said that "it is of no use whatsoever to have the capacity. . . if you haven't got the will to use it."

Following his address, Commander Hogan presented certificates to the newly commissioned Army and Air Force Second Lieutenants.

Those receiving Army commissions were: Paul L. Anderson, William R. Forand, Evan N. Fournaris, Frank M. Knott, Donald A. Margeson, George A. Marold, Richard W. Rineer, Douglas W. Robb, Michael Scafati and Walter A. Tobias.

Those receiving commissions in the Air Force were: Ian N. Cooke, Roland A. Landry and Steven L. Sherman.

Student-Faculty Night Set for Tomorrow

PRE-MED

On Student-Faculty evening, February 8, premedical, pre-veterinary, and pre-dental majors are invited to meet with their advisors from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m. in the Faculty Lounge, Rm. 170, Bartlett Hall. This will be an informal social gathering at which students can talk to their advisors and meet other committee members in a relaxed atmosphere.

Freshman who plan to become pre-professional majors are welcome to join this meeting if they wish.

ZOOLOGY DEPARTMENT

7:30-8:15 — Group meeting to discuss curricula and other topics of interests, room 203, Morrill Science Center.

Freshmen who attended summer session, 1965, students who have declared Zoology major since Counseling Day, non-majors and returning upperclassmen are urged to join this group. Freshmen planning medical or similar professional careers are free to join the Student-Faculty meeting scheduled by the Pre-Medical Advisory Committee in the Faculty Lounge of Bartlett Hall.

Other majors may meet at this time with their advisors who will be in their offices for consultation.

8:30—Student-faculty social hour, Rm 212, Morrill. All are welcome to attend.

DEPT OF MICROBIOLOGY

The Department of Microbiology invites all interested students to meet in Room 202 in the New North Wing, Morrill, Science Center, Section IV. There will be a general question, answer and discussion period. Job opportunities for graduating seniors and applications by juniors for graduate and professional schools will also be discussed. Graduate students will be present for informal talks. Refreshments will be served.

SCHOOL OF NURSING

The faculty of the School of Nursing will arrange for a social hour with their respective advisees on this evening. Faculty living in the vicinity of the campus plan to open their homes to advisees—others will plan to utilize available campus facilities.

Invitations will be sent to the individual students, indicating time, place and nature of activity.

GERMAN

Norfolk Room, Student Union this meeting is for all seniors, incoming students and new majors.

RUSSIAN

Nantucket Room, Student Union this meeting is for all Russian majors. Both meetings begin at 7:30.

EDUCATION

The School of Education on February 8 will hold an assembly of senior majors and of others interested in teaching and how to gain certification for teaching.

DEPARTMENT OF VETERINARY AND ANIMAL SCIENCES

The Department of Veterinary and Animal Sciences will hold a Student-Faculty night at the Farley 4-H Clubhouse, Tuesday, February 8, 1966 at 7:30 p.m. The meeting will be open to all classes and special attention will be given to summer job opportunities and placement. A review of career and graduate school opportunities will be included for seniors.

FOOD SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

Mr. Robert J. Morrissey, Director of Placement and Financial Aid will speak to the Food Science and Technology Club (all undergraduate and graduate majors and their guests). His talk will include—"How to interview, what to look for in jobs, selecting a career etc." The meeting will be held in Room 227 Chenoweth Laboratory at 7:30 p.m. Refreshments will be served.

RESTAURANT AND HOTEL MANAGEMENT

A reception for Restaurant and Hotel Management majors and their guests will be held at 7:30 p.m. in Room 221 Chenoweth Laboratory—desserts and coffee will be served. Dr. D. E. Lundberg will show new food laboratory and library facilities.

DEPARTMENT OF GOVERNMENT

The Government Department is planning to have a session on career opportunities for Government majors. We assume this would be of interest to all Government majors, but especially seniors and freshmen. Mr. Robert Galley of the University Placement and Financial Aid Service office will be the principal speaker. He intends to provide data on salary scales and careers available for Government majors as well as information on the whereabouts of Government majors who have graduated within the last five years. We will be meeting in Goswami Auditorium at 8 p.m.

DEPARTMENT OF ART

The Department of Art would like to have its students meet as a single group in Room 61, Bartlett Hall at 7:30 p.m. After the program there, we would like to break up in smaller groups which can be handled in the several art rooms in Bartlett and Munson Hall Annex.

The main emphasis will be given to questions for newly entered art majors and questions on careers in art for the senior art majors.

DEPARTMENT OF HISTORY

Dean Wagner has asked our department to notify you concerning our plans for the next Student-Faculty evening to be held on February 8. All undergraduate history majors are invited to meet informally with their faculty advisors in the large reception room on the first floor of Memorial Hall.

FRENCH

Swing-shift freshmen and transfer students majoring in French will be welcomed by the French staff at an informal evening in the faculty club (Stockbridge House) on Tuesday, February 8, at 8 p.m. Students who have not already acknowledged their invitations should telephone Mrs. Donoghue or Mrs. Chahman at 545-2600 as soon as possible. Monsieur Gilles Six will speak informally on his native city of Cean, France, and of its university. There will be refreshments, as well as an opportunity to speak with faculty advisors.

SPANISH

The "Swing shift" Freshmen and Transfer Students majoring in Spanish will be welcomed by the Spanish Staff on February 8, 1966 at 7:30 p.m. in Bartlett Hall, Room 256.

DEPARTMENT OF SPEECH

On February 8th for the third Student-Faculty Evening, the Department of Speech will hold a reception in honor of Dr. Ronald Reid, the new head of the Department. The reception will be held in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union beginning at 7:30 p.m. Dr. Reid will speak on "The Field of Speech, 1966-2000." All Speech majors are cordially invited to attend.

DEPARTMENT OF SOCIOLOGY

The Sociology Department and the Sociology Club will present jointly a program on career opportunities for Sociology majors in the Worcester room of the Student Union at 8:00 p.m.

DEPARTMENT OF ENTOMOLOGY AND PLANT PATHOLOGY

The Department of Entomology and Plant Pathology will offer a program on university preparation for a career in entomology or plant pathology. The program will be oriented towards evaluating existing curricula and newer programs available for specialized training. Graduate students will discuss their undergraduate training and its inadequacies as preparation for graduate study in their major fields of interest. An informal student-faculty discussion will follow. Fernald Hall, Room B1, February 8, 7:30 p.m.

SCHOOL OF PHYSICAL EDUCATION

Department of Physical Education for Men

Freshmen: Auxiliary Gymnasium Boyden 7:00 p.m. Seminar: The Teaching Minor and its Importance in Undergraduate Preparation

Juniors: Room 249 Boyden, 7:00 p.m. Seminar: The Student Teacher — His Place and Responsibility in the Cooperating School.

Department of Physical Education for Women

Women's Physical Education Building 7:30 p.m.

The Department of Physical Education for Women will have a Student Panel made up of the Student Teachers who have just finished their teaching block, and they will present their experiences to both faculty and students. A discussion period will follow.

Department of Recreation

Room 251 Boyden, 7:30 p.m. The Recreation Department will present a Career Opportunity Orientation Program.

MASSACHUSETTS COLLEGIAN FORUM

Relevance of Religion

The following two guest editorials represent the opinions of the authors only. The articles were solicited at different times and are not meant to be a debate between the two authors, but are intended only to discuss a subject of much confusion—religion on the campus.

Don Quixote Rides Again...?

By REV. DAVID A. PURDY, Protestant Chaplain

The unreligious and even anti-religious attitude that one frequently encounters on this campus and in the classroom is not an unhealthy state of affairs. When a freshman tells me that Freud's Future of an Illusion has called into question his religious convictions, I count that as a good thing, for more than likely his "religious belief" was a mixture of sentiment, fairy tales and middle class values learned at home and reinforced by his Sunday School teacher. If the purpose of higher education is to dispel the myths which prevent persons and society from being fully human, then the shattering of so-called religious beliefs is a step in the right direction.

WHAT DOES BOTHER ME however, is the apparent tendency on the part of some University faculty members to assume categorically that religious thinking in general and Christian theology in particular has not gone beyond Aquinas and that to be "religious" is to believe in the medieval world view or maybe at best to subscribe to evangelical emotionalism of the 19th century. To use scientific method and rational analysis to attack an outdated orthodoxy and an antiquated world view is to tilt at windmills. Illustration: A student told me the other day that an English teacher claimed that since no one today thought the way Dante did, there was no such thing as a Christian anymore. The first part of the claim is probably true (except that I have my own special list of people I'd like to see freezing in hell), but never have I heard Dante considered the archetype of the Christian man by the Church. Illustration: Last year the philosophy department sponsored a guest lecturer whose talk made clear that the existence of God could not be proved. I do not know of anyone within the Church who has seriously (there is a lot of unserious "does God exist?" talk in the Hatch and at cocktail parties) considered proving God's existence a possible or fruitful pursuit since

Kant.

INDEED RELIGIOUS thinkers of late owe much to the contemporary disciplines of psychology, sociology, philosophy and history as well as the natural sciences. And so for some time now we have heard theologians describing man's situation with such terms as alienation, meaninglessness, etc. A few years ago, Rudolf Bultmann, employing the latest historical methods set about "demythologizing" the New Testament. In 1944 Dietrich Bonhoeffer, a pastor and theologian, through contact with the scientific and technological communities wrote, "It is becoming evident that everything gets along without 'God' and just as well as before." And most recently, Harvey Cox, Professor of Christian Ethics at Harvard, has written a sociological treatise, The Secular City, in which he asserts that the hallmarks of our era, secularization and urbanization, are to be celebrated because they provide man with a new context of freedom and responsibility.

I am not making an apology for religion—it is impossible to justify the various kinds of "crimes against humanity" committed in the name of religion over the centuries. Nor am I suggesting that contemporary religious thought is going to restore religion to its previous height. I am, rather, pointing out that there has been theological discussion which has attempted to be relevant to where man finds himself in the world today. And so I would suggest that intellectual integrity demands that those who make a case for the absurdity of religion in the 20th century criticize contemporary institutions and thought and not the straw man of some other century. In other words, attack religion for relevant rather than irrelevant reasons and not simply because of its past.

A SECOND conclusion to what I have said is really the most important. As long as Don Quixote was tilting at windmills he could not see the world for what it was (or was it that because he could see the world for what it was he spent his time going after windmills...?). Let's stop attacking the myths of religion here at the University—most of them are not worth bothering about. I would rather we who are on the campus and in the classroom join forces to combat the political, social and educational myths under which the university operates—the myths which, if they prevail, will sooner or later prevent this University from being the locus of genuine dialogue and encounter with the humanizing ideologies, activities and movements of our time; the myths which may keep the students from appropriating the intellectual tools and a life-style for the sake of improving the quality of human life in the world and not simply for contributing to the status quo (Jules Feiffer's "radical middle") patterns that mark our nation in these revolutionary times.

OBSTACLES TO THE DISPLACEMENT OF RELIGION BY SCIENCE

By DR. ROBERT S. FELDMAN, Dept. of Psychology

One of the most interesting paradoxes in current intellectual life is, on the one hand, the widespread appreciation of contemporary technological excellence and the nature of the scientific method which brings it about, and on the other hand, the mass reluctance to bring this method to bear on our more intimate social problems. As a psychologist I have long been interested in this paradox which portrays man's finding the funds and diligently solving some of the most formidable problems where subatomic particles or interplanetary rocketry are concerned, but standing by helplessly while cities deteriorate, preventable diseases become epidemic, populations over-expand and choke off any hope for humane existence, and civilized nations verge toward barbarism.

I THINK the reason that science is not totally embraced in human and social "problem areas" is that there are competing knowledge systems that have not been displaced and the dominant knowledge system referred to is supernatural religion. It is interesting to ask how religions developed, what are their principal characteristics, and why they persist in the face of better knowledge systems. Examining these questions in more detail, we find that man's early knowledge about the universe was little more than the accumulation of every-day experiences that occurred in his daily struggle for survival, and therefore was little better than the knowledge at a faster rate, but for the 600,000 years of the paleolithic age his total accumulation still didn't amount to much. Nevertheless, he may have been able to make a fire and crude stone tools and weapons, and it can be imagined that he began building up elaborate conceptions of "what" caused "what" in his limited experience. He developed fantastic explanations for what caused the rock fall that destroyed his family, the poor hunting one day, and the good hunting the next, the avalanche, the flood, the cold, the epidemic, the attack from wild beasts and other men, and so on.

THUS, HIS knowledge was poor and incomplete, subject to inadequate observation; ignored negative cases, was primitive in logic, and subject to exaggeration and self justification since all peoples were the chosen people. This leads to the question of why such an inferior knowledge system developed when it turned out to be so inadequate and self-defeating. Judging from the snail's pace progress of cultural development during this period, it couldn't have been otherwise. The answer seems to be that primitive knowledge is similar to that of present day children who have had limited experience and have not matured enough to reason better, and it may be supposed that primitive men were childlike in capacity for many hundreds of thousands of years. Also, practically everything a person learns is learned from his immediate parents due to the long period of human dependency after birth. This has the effect of perpetuating any belief. Yet, it should not be overlooked that there was some survival value even in the childlike beliefs of our early forebears. It may seem silly to us that primitive people burned incense and invoked the help of gods, and engaged in blood rituals to secure a state of economic and social well-being when we know that hybrid seed and irrigation ditches are more predictable. But, for people in a low state of cultural development, a poor answer may be better than no answer at all. At least a poor answer gives a person confidence that he is not helpless, unfounded as this confidence may be. It is quite likely that a critic in those days would have been justifiably banished from the tribe, if not worse, since he could offer little in the way of constructive criticism and his negative approach to things could only lead to hopelessness and despair.

THUS, PROGRESS was slow, if existent at all, and probably no one ever expected it to be otherwise. When things are the same for a few hundred years, no one gets "high-falootin' ideas about anything. During this period man elaborated his beliefs and passed them on by word of mouth, a method prone to distortion and exaggeration. So, during this period all that man could do was stay alive, and if it hadn't been for a sex drive of great potency, he probably wouldn't even have done that.

In the next issue, Dr. Feldman will present an analysis of primitive beliefs and show how they are related to the content of formal religion.

IS RELIGION MEANINGLESS?

By JOSEPH ZALKIND, Editorial Chairman

On the college campus religion has been the subject of much discussion and much confusion. The student who has been raised from childhood in the traditional religion of myths and dogmatic beliefs finds himself unable to answer many theological questions which arise as a result of his class studies.

For example, what is a student to think when in philosophy he sees a proof that shows, using pure logic and reason, that God does not exist? Of course, it can be similarly "proven" that God does exist, but this second "proof" only adds to the growing belief that religion is nothing more than a lot of contradictory jabber.

Religion is difficult to define, since every individual has his own slightly varying interpretation of what it is. But, whatever religion may be, it is an important, influencing factor in the life of every human being. Therefore, it is very necessary that some clarification be given to the subject by those qualified to do so—professors and clergymen. Perhaps, those who suggested a department of religion did not have such a bad idea after all.

MASSACHUSETTS COLLEGIAN FORUM

"WE'VE GOT TO FIND A WAY TO DEAL WITH THOSE STUDENTS WHO NEED A SPECIFIC COURSE IN ORDER TO GRADUATE."

Requirements—have mercy

By JEROME HORVITZ, Associate Chairman

Requirements! What a finality. One only has to turn to any directory of courses and he will see the words, "majors must take . . ." This phrase is a discouraging and unfortunate declaration made by every department. To many it is a type of death sentence and to others it is a stay of execution.

Why should, let us say, a sociology major be forced to take a course such as Chemistry 111? Why should a government major be forced to take a year of biological science? Why should all liberal arts students be forced to take two years of a language which gives him nothing but an introduction and four semesters of worry and cramming? The usual answer to these questions is "to give the student a well rounded education". This proposition does have validity, but who is capable of saying what a "well rounded education" really is? One can give numerous examples, but the point to be made is that many of these courses fill up gaps of time rather than gaps of knowledge. A distinction has to be made as to what requirements are needed.

It is an unfortunate situation when a liberal arts student is unable to cope with two years of language and is forced to enroll into the School of Business Administration in order to "get out of the requirement" of a foreign language. In many ways this individual is sacrificing his long range outlook or future for a requirement. How ironical it is since most of these requirements are just introduction courses. These, in many instances, have no bearing on the individual's major.

One also has to look on the other side of the problem. Many students take advantage of the situation and use requirements as an easy way of getting through four years of college. There are still courses left where one can get the easy 'C'. This is nothing more than a stay of execution for these individuals.

However, the tragedy lies with the serious student who finds himself literally imprisoned. Alternatives . . . he has none. Some suggestions are as follows: to alter the language requirement in such a way that it gives to the student the alternative as to either becoming proficient in a particular language or not taking it at all. Another suggestion would be to create a general science course for the liberal arts student that would touch upon both the physical as well as the biological. For a final suggestion a humanities course should be created for the science major which would include touches of English, history, and government.

The question of requirements is a very real one that bothers every student. The suggestions mentioned above are not so out of the question. In fact other schools employ them now in their curricula. Why not this university? Until some positive action is taken in the correction of this problem, the student will, unfortunately, not have "a well rounded education".

Student Left Organizes "New" College Concepts

Joseph Byrd is a soft-spoken, scholarly young graduate student and teaching assistant at the University of California at Los Angeles who discusses most subjects with wry detachment. When he talks about the plight of the university student, however, his face registers passionate indignation.

"THE UNIVERSITY student today is the single most exploited individual in our society," the 27-year-old Mr. Byrd declares. "Fortunately, students at long last are awakening to this fact."

Mr. Byrd and some fellow students have recently decided to ameliorate the problem. They have taken over a shabby loft building in downtown Los Angeles and established a new educational institution to fit their own design. Called the New Left School of Los Angeles, it is one of a series of roughly similar "counter-universities" that are springing up around the nation.

THE FOUNDERS of the new schools, which are often called counter-universities or "anti-universities" to signify their rejection of all that ordinary universities stand for, are not especially interested in achieving formal accreditation or in building themselves into giant organizations.

"Our interest is to provide the sort of intellectual vigor that has disappeared from the established universities," says Dr. Paul Krebs, 31, director of the six-month - old Free University of New York, 20 East 14th Street.

This, he notes, ultimately involved the Free University in subjects considered taboo by established institutions. Its course offerings include such subjects as "Life in Mainland China Today," "Hallucinogenic Drugs: Uses and Social Implications" and "Search for the Authentic Sexual Experience."

In general, the schools have no plan to adopt the formal accreditations of a university—accreditation, the right to grant degrees, establishment of four-year undergraduate programs. The only institutional formality is tuition, which at the Free University amounts to $24 for a first course running 10 weeks, and lesser amounts for other courses.

Trackmen Impressive in KofC, BAA

By TERRY CARPENTER

Several of the members of the track team have run well in recent Boston meets. Sophomore speedster Steve Burrell placed well against such greats as Sam Perry and Darryl Newman in the dash. They are the co-world record holders at 60 yards. Steve beat John Collins of Holy Cross and Heptagonal Champ Anderson of Harvard in running a school record tying 5.5 for 50 yards. Also in the K of C sponsored meet in the Boston Garden, a 2-mile relay team of Bill Thoms, Steve S. Clair, Leonard DelMolino, and Dick Stevens ran well.

In the BAA meet over the vacation, the UMass team fared well. John Medeiros won his specialty, the broad jump, defeating a classy field including former Greater Boston Champ Henry Keller (ex B.C.). John's winning leap was 21 feet 8 inches. Medeiros, Burrell, and Doug Sloane all entered the dash, Burrell making it to the semifinals. Bill Thoms ran the New England Intercollegiate 880 and came up with a respectable time of 2:02. The mile relay team of Burrell, Sloane, Thoms, and John Anderson placed second in their heat, with Andy turning in a fast 51 sec. anchor leg.

The New England AAU indoor championships were held at M.I.T. last Wednesday night. John Medeiros continued his winning ways by capturing the Broad Jump once again. This time his winning jump was upped to 22 feet 6 inches. Co-capt Bob Murray began his season successfully by setting a school record in the pole vault. Bob soared over 13'6" to finish in a tie for second place. Steve Burrell got a bad start but roared back at the finish to grab second spot in the dash. Freshman Ron Kay looked impressive in placing fourth in the mile in 4:36.

The first dual meet of the season for the track team is this Saturday when they travel to Bowdoin College.

Men, Women Gymnasts Defeated

By AL RICE

SATURDAY AFTERNOON was a bad time for University gymnastics teams as both the men's and women's varsity went down to defeat. The men's squad lost an Eastern Intercollegiate League encounter at Temple by a 176-150 score, and the UMass gals lost a close one 83.85 to 78.60 to West Chester State College in a home meet.

Temple's big margin of victory was mainly thanks to a terrific performance by Mark Cohn who won all five events he entered. Cohn won all the international events (trampoline not considered as one) until he withdrew from the rings with an arm injury after the meet's outcome had been decided. He scored even nines in the floor exercise and on the parallel bars, 9.3 on the horizontal bar, 9.4 in long horse vaulting, and registered his high of 9.55 on the side horse.

DESPITE MASSACHUSETTS' not taking any first places and a few seconds, the meet wasn't a total loss for the Redmen. The parallel bars team of Jack Bradbury, Steve Brown, and Rich Booth did well with all three in the low eights. The trampoline was another event that went well for Mass. Al Carver came through with a good performance that scored well above his average for the event. Bob Leclair, the top UMass man on the side horse, scored an 8.4 in his specialty and Al Cohen registered a 9.15 second place behind Cohn in the long horse vaulting.

The West Chester girls won their meet by rolling up good-sized advantages on the uneven parallel bars and the vaulting that more than counteracted good scores by Marianne Davis and Maryanne Gawlinski in the floor exercise event. Unfortunately it was subpar performances by these two UMass girls that hurt the scores in the other events. Both had an off afternoon with marks well below their averages, although team-wise the scores were generally running much lower than those of the earlier Southern Connecticut meet even for better performances. Sue Clancy dropped in score on the uneven parallels from an 8.7 to Saturday's 8.35 though her showing could hardly be faulted. Ellen Babushka of West Chester won the event with an 8.7 and her sister Barbara came in third with an 8.1.

THE BALANCE BEAM was the tightest event of the day with Massachusetts coming out on top by a slight .05 points. Marianne Davis won over Ellen Babushka by the same slim margin that the team did. Sue Clancy was third. The vaulting title went to Ellen Babushka by a large edge over Miss Davis. Maggie Faulkner and Pat Long also scored well for West Chester to build up a lead that the UMass slim win on the beam did little to endanger. The high scores of the Babushka sisters in the final event cinched the win and handed Mass its first season loss. Next Saturday the girls junior varsity team will compete at Boyden against teams from Longmeadow, Braintree, King Philip Regional, and Andover High Schools. The men will have a similar type meet Tuesday night against the Coast Guard Academy, also home.

By DAVE JARNES

IN A KEY independent game the Philosophers whipped the Innkeepers 45-23 to clinch the American League title. Jack Schroeder paced the victors' balanced attack with 12 points. Excessive fouling led to the downfall of the Innkeepers.

THE ZEROS survived a scare from the lowly Midgets to triumph 43-40 and move into a tie for first with the Moody Blues in the National League. Anderson's 14 points and 10 rebounds were instrumental in the Zeros' win.

The Mills Birch moved into a tie for the top spot with the Colt .45's with a 46-33 decision over the faltering Comanches as Goldberg's 15 points led a balanced attack.

In a battle of the also-rans the Hoovers toppled the winless Hicks 71-47. John Allison hit the nets for 26 big points. The Slippery Elms beat the Redmen 40-18, the Pines knocked off the HiLo's 47-33 and the Oaks bombed the Trojans 44-22.

THE PLYMOUTH PATRIOTS knocked the Grayson Flaming A's out of first place in the North League with a 55-46 win. Ray Stanelis supplied the points with 25 and Bill Carty cleared the boards with 17 rebounds. Meanwhile the Grayson Aces topped the Phallics 58-47 as four players hit double figures. The Aces are unbeaten and still must play the Flaming A's, who've lost once. The Patriots, who have also suffered a single setback, will be rooting a win by the Flaming A's to set up a three way tie for first.

In other games Ron Merrill's 26 points led TKE to a 62-41 victory over ATC, AIE outscored the Buggers 68-58 despite Salamoff's 29 points, and the Chem Club beat the Forestry Club 36-25.

REMEMBER, entries for the squash tournament must be in by today. Volleyball team entries are due by February 14. All of the basketball teams should begin to think about selections for the dormitory-fraternity all-star game to be played at the Cage.

REDMEN REBOUND, WHIP UVM, 94-83

By DAVE JARNES

The University of Massachusetts basketball team rebounded from consecutive defeats against Syracuse and UConn to whip Vermont 94-83 before a sparse turnout of 1250 at the Cage. By winning, the Redmen leveled their record at 8-8 and kept their slim Yankee Conference title hopes alive.

THE FIRST HALF was highlighted by outstanding performances from leading scorers Jimmy Babyak (17 points) and Clarence Hill (16 points). The Redmen started slowly, apparently still a little shell-shocked from the debacle with UConn, and actually trailed 10-7 after about four minutes of play. At this point Clarence Hill and Bill Tindall led an 11-1 spurt with the fast break which gave UMass an 18-11 advantage. Vermont then switched from its man to man defense to a 2-3 zone and began to chip away at the lead as the Redmen helped the Catamounts with some sloppy ball-handling. With 2 minutes left in the half and the Orrmen holding a 39-37 lead, Hill and Babyak led a 12-4 surge which carried UMass to a 51-41 halftime bulge.

UMASS BEGAN THE second half just as it had ended the first half with a scoring spurge by Clarence giving them a comfortable 68-50 margin with 15 minutes left in the game. The rest of the contest was completed in a routine manner with both teams trading hoops. Seniors Ken Spalter and Layne Higgs kept Vermont's score respectable with their jump shooting. A half-court zone press brought the Cats to 79-89 with two minutes remaining. However, a left-handed jump shot by Hill took UMass out of any trouble that might have arisen. Bob Murphy replaced Hill in the last minute of play and impressed the home crowd with his hustle.

HILL with 36 points and Babyak with 27 paced the Redmen attack. Clarence set a school record with 16 field goals for the game and, along with Frank Stewart and Billy Tindall, set up many of Jim Babyak's baskets with some fancy assists. Higgs and Spalter led Vermont with 23 and 22 points respectively while rugged sophomore Bill Libera scored 15 points in the first half but was blanked in the second canto.

AS A TEAM UMass shot a torrid 61% from the floor in the first half and 58% for the game, but an excessive number of turnovers (21) kept the Redmen from scoring more than 94 points. The Redmen will have to cut down on their number of errors if they are to make a good showing against Bob Cousy's potent Boston College Eagles on Tuesday. The next home game for UMass will be this Friday against powerful Rhode Island which is led by all-New England choice Steve Chubin. Maine visits the Cage on Saturday night to complete an active week of basketball for the Redmen.

Bob Murphy, hustling junior guard, has begun to see more action in the last few games for the Redmen.

Frosh Triumph; Shockro Excels

by Michael Curran

Sparked by the all-around play of John Shockro and the clutch foul shooting of Joey DiSarcina and Ed Griffith, the UMass frosh overcame a tenacious St. Anselm's freshman team to win 78-72 at Curry Hicks Saturday night.

In the first half, St. Anselm's was able to build a 37-32 lead, thanks to Scott Cummings' 23 points and the poor shooting of the Redmen.

It wasn't until the ten minute mark of the second half, when Shockro scored on a driving layup, that the score was knotted at 51-51. From there on it was clutch foul shooting on 1 and 1 opportunities that enabled UMass to build and hold a small lead until the buzzer had safely sounded.

Shockro hit 8-13 from the floor, grabbed numerous loose balls, and played excellent defense. In playing his best game of the season, John finished with 23 points. DiSarcina, Griffith, and Gayestka hit double figures also. John Dreyer did a good job for the Redmen on the boards, gathering 10 rebounds.

UMASS VERMONT

Senate to discuss new student loan fund

By KAREN ROSE, Senate Editor

A bill to create a special student loan fund, "for the purpose of supplying needed funds for the purchasing of books", will be brought up at tonight's Senate meeting.

According to the bill, such a loan would be available only during the period extending from registration to the end of the second week after registration.

This loan would be available to the student applicants at the discretion of the appointed administrator. The maximum for each loan would be $25. The total loan appropriation would be $2,000.

Sen. Mike Garjian, the originator of this bill will also be bringing another bill to the floor calling for the formation of an Ad-Hoc Committee for the purpose of investigating the prices and services of the University Bookstore.

The intent of this committee would be especially to check into the price the Bookstore pays students for used books and the resale price of the same.

Also under new business will be a bill drawn up by Sens. Downes, Marcus and Allen stipulating that the Academic Affairs Committee establish a complaint board to hear individual student complaints in regard to "unfairness or academic incompetence on the part of members of the faculty...periodically (relaying them) to the Office of the Provost".

In connection with the recent results of the actions of one of the student senators a bill is being brought up that redefines the residential area requirements for senators.

The bill states that a resident of a residential area will be defined to mean "that the student shall have a bed and room at the time of his election in the residential area, and shall not have voluntarily given up a bed and room in that dormitory during his term of office..."

Also at tonight's meeting the senators will vote on a resolution stipulating that the Senate recommend to the Trustees that meal tickets henceforth be transferable at the discretion of the student who has legal ownership of said ticket.

Finally, a bill drawn up by Sens. Marcus and Downes calls for the Senate Public Relations Committee to institute a search for new and improved lyrics to the University's fight song ("Fight Massachusetts").

The bill ends with the following sentence: The Committee shall be further instructed to consider the possibility of offering some form of remuneration as an incentive to the author of the new lyrics.

UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS, WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 9, 1966

Featured in this year's Winter Carni rock 'n roll concert will be the Four Seasons. The Saturday concert will also include Simon & Garfunkel and The Rovin' Kind and is just one of the many highlights of Carnival Week. Look for complete Winter Carni coverage in next week's Collegian.

Class of '67 Plans "Broadway Premiere" For Winter Carnival Week

The UMass campus is under eight inches of snow these days but some students are bucking for more—for the annual Winter Carnival Feb. 14 to 20.

The snow-seekers are the University's junior class, sponsors of the carnival. To them the inconvenience seems a small price to pay for the snow, more snow, tons of snow needed to mold giant snow sculptures, and to hold tobogganing and winter olympic events planned for the week-long frozen festival.

The class of 1967 has planned a fashion show, semi-formal ball, ski trip, pancake breakfast, winter sports, and two in-person concerts bringing to the campus a small "Who's Who" in popular music, including Glen Yarbrough the Four Seasons, and more.

The theme this year is "Broadway Premiere" providing a motif of bright lights and theatre excitement for the sculpture entries and other events.

The week begins with a winter fashion show Monday evening at 7 in Bowker Auditorium sponsored by a local clothing store, with coeds as models. Five candidates for carnival queen will be special guests at the show, open to the public with a small charge.

Immediately after the fashion show in Bowker, there will be a screening of 3 Edgar Allen Poe "Tales of Terror." There will also be a small charge for the movies.

The carnival sponsors have promised a surprise show during halftime in the basketball game Thursday evening with the University of New Hampshire. The game begins at 8 p.m. in Curry Hicks Cage.

Friday night begins Winter Carnival Weekend, highlighted by the crowning of the carnival queen at the semi-formal "Carni-Ball." Massachusetts Lt. Gov. Elliott Richardson will crown the queen, who will reign at carnival activities for the rest of the weekend. Students and their dates will dance to the music of Bobby Kaye's Orchestra. With the Broadway theme in mind, the dance committee has named the ball "Wonderful Town," and will provide a New York nightclub setting.

Saturday will be the big day for snow. A day-long ski trip will leave from the Student Union at 9, and at the same time a committee of faculty and students will begin judging the snow sculptures.

A hearty pancake breakfast will be sponsored by Revelers, upperclassmen chosen to promote and encourage school spirit, at 9:30 in the Student Union.

The freshman class will hold a toboggan run along and around the campus pond Saturday morning at 10:30. An afternoon of winter sport competition, dubbed the winter olympics, will feature a powder puff hockey game, men and women's speed skating, and a tug-of-war between fraternity and non-fraternity undergraduates.

Saturday night, the Four Seasons will headline a rock and roll concert at 7 in Curry Hicks Cage, along with two other popular groups, the Rovin' Kind and Simon and Garfunkel. At 8:30, Stockbridge School will sponsor an informal dance featuring the music of the Bostonians. Fireworks will light up the sky just after the concert and before the dance.

Closing and climaxing the weekend will be a folk concert Sunday afternoon at 1:30 in the Cage starring Glen Yarbrough with the Modern Folk Quartet.

Open Office Hours

Pres. Lederle Comments, Counsels and Clarifies

By CLIFF SNICKERS
Staff Reporter

President Lederle saw more than twenty students yesterday during his open office hours. As a result of the many who wished to see him the scheduled hour from 4-5 p.m. lasted until 6 p.m.

The students who spoke with him brought with them a wide range of topics. For the most part they sought his comments on official University policy on individual subjects and his advice on personal matters.

One group wished to know what new facilities would be provided for the Operetta Guild in view of the proposed razing of the Abbey. Their concern lay with storage of props and equipment, and the president referred them to the University's building supervisor.

A men's dormitory counselor and two women's dorm counselors sought the president's advice on their functions as counselors.

President Lederle commented at length on the medical school in response to one question. Regarding the duplication that would be made necessary by locating the school at Worcester the president cited the loss in basic scientific background which exists on the UMass campus.

In Worcester, he said, the medical school would have to rely on "other schools in the area, over which the University exerts no control." As an alternative to this he explained that it would be necessary to tolerate the hour and fifteen minute distance between Worcester and the UMass campus, in order to take advantage of the science department facilities here.

Another student brought a suggestion that students be invited to discuss building plans with University planners. He felt that students are in a position to know where sidewalks, parking facilities and buildings can be placed most efficiently.

He also suggested a more detailed communication of proposed building plans by the administration to the student body. The president agreed that more communication was desirable, commenting that he and others of the administration have always sought student views.

Waiting until nearly six o'clock to see President Lederle, one upperclassman wanted to know what was being done to prevent the proposed fraternity college on campus.

To this the president replied that the University takes no action to either encourage or discourage the existence of fraternities. He expressed sympathy with their "present crowded conditions and facilities" stating that any advances in fraternity accommodations would benefit both the fraternities and the University itself.

In answer to a comment that fraternities are a dying institution, he commented that the opposite appears to be true at UMass, and that fraternities have shown signs of a growing vitality.

In answer to a question of a rumored rise in tuition costs the president said, "Not if I can help it."

Responding to another question regarding fall semester classes he made known that in the future, fall semester classes will end before Christmas vacation.

Regarding a proposed publica-

Students Advised to Keep Draft Boards Informed

A memorandum from Massachusetts Selective Service Headquarters under date of January 27, 1966 stated that until new nationwide student draft deferment programs were promulgated, Massachusetts Local Boards would consider requests for student deferments under the same plan as was in effect last fall. In other words, a student must be pursuing a full-time program in satisfactory fashion in order to be considered for II-S student deferment.

On January 29th news media carried word from Washington that a Selective Service test would be re-instituted as a criterion for draft deferment. Whenever official notice of this is received, the information will be widely publicized on campus.

Meanwhile, it is imperative that every student—University undergraduate, graduate or Stockbridge—keeps his particular Draft Board informed of his student status and that any request for deferment be supported by the official "Leave Service Form 109 (for undergraduate and Stockbridge students) and Form 103 (for graduate students). These Forms are prepared in the Placement & Financial Aid Office, which serves as the central agency for draft information. Requests for the Forms should be made there by the individual students; the Forms are not sent out automatically.

Dorm Changes to Be Discussed

Thursday, Feb. 10 at 8 p.m. in the Student Union Council Chambers there will be a meeting to discuss the proposed dorm changes for the fall semester. The purpose of the meeting is to allow the students to express their views. The final decisions will be made in light of student opinion. All dorms involved in the changes should make sure that they have representatives at this meeting.

New Journalism, Freedom Marked Politella Regime

Ed. Note: This is the third of three reminiscent articles about the Collegian of 1947 by former Collegian editor, Dr. Dario Politella, who is now a UMass journalism professor.

As for the Big Story on the New Journalism on campus, it came about when Arthur Benson Musgrave, a Nieman Fellow at Harvard and former copy editor on the Houston Post, appeared on campus as University editor and teacher of the first courses in journalism ever offered here.

It was under his enthusiastic guidance that the Collegian staffers discovered new reasons for being and new (to them) techniques for expression.

In this new spirit of probing, we discovered such intriguing bits of information as the fact that if we removed the "The" from the nameplate, the make-up editor (Romm) could plan a more decently balanced front page. We told the campus about it in a March 27 editorial entitled, "The Murder of the THE."

WE ALSO REACTED to a supplement to the April 1947 issue of Fortune Magazine in which the Commission on Freedom of the Press (the so-called Hutchins Committee) made its report.

Financed by Time, Inc. and Encyclopedia Britannica, Inc., the committee at the University of Chicago studied for almost four years the problem of press freedom. The committee of 13 distinguished Americans included 11 educators and Archibald MacLeish, formerly U.S. Secretary of State, and Beardsley Ruml, then chairman of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York. They came to the conclusion that freedom of the press is an accountable freedom. That is, freedom is really responsibility for the common good.

So impressed with this concept were we that we announced in the Apr. 19 issue our adoption of the motto, "A Free and Responsible Press." We staked our claim to be the first of the college press (if, indeed, there were others) to adopt such a motto by writing the editors of Time, Inc. Their letter acknowledging our claim said, on May 16, 1947: "In these times of turmoil and confusion no more commendable ideal could be found."

New GI Bill of Rights Passes Legislature 381-0

A new G.I. Bill of Rights for veterans sailed through the House today after years of active blocking from three Administrators. The vote was 381 to 0.

The Senate had asked a more costly bill last year, but it is expected to accept the House version and send it along to the White House.

Sources close to the President said that he was not expected to veto the bill.

THE HOUSE bill sets up a permanent program of educational and housing benefits for veterans with more than 180 days of active military service since Jan. 31, 1955. That was the date the Korean War G.I. Bill expired.

The first-year cost has been estimated at $327-million, with a gradual rise to $494-million when the program became fully effective in 1970.

Advocates of far larger benefits angrily denounced the move. They argued that the benefits fall far short of those given veterans of both World War II and Korea.

"It's a disgrace," Representative John P. Saylor, Republican of Pennsylvania, told the House.

The Government owes its fighting men "much more than we are giving them here," Representative Paul A. Fino, Republican of the Bronx, insisted.

I'm sorry it took this feeling over Vietnam to get this bill to the floor," he said. "This should not have had to depend on the Administration's slow surrender to public opinion."

THE HOUSE bill provides educational benefits of $100 a month for single persons, $125 for those with one dependent and $150 for those with two or more dependents.

Both the Korean G.I. bill and the Senate bill passed last year provided $10 a month more in each of these categories.

Veterans of World War II received $50 a month in living allowances, plus $25 for each dependent. This was later raised to $75 for single persons, $105 for those with one dependent and $120 for those with two dependents.

However, World War II veterans also received payments for tuition, books and fees. The pending bill does not provide such payments.

VETERANS of both World War II and Korea received other benefits not provided in the pending bill. These included on-the-job and on-the-farm training allowances and free automobiles for amputees.

ELIGIBLE veterans would be entitled to one month of college or vocational training for each month of service, up to 36 months. Those who have already completed four years of college would be eligible for graduate study.

The program would start next June 1. For veterans discharged before then, educational or training courses would have to be completed within eight years after that date. The eight-year eligibility for those subsequently discharged would begin on the date of discharge.

The bill provides these other benefits:

- The Veterans Administration would guarantee home loans of up to $7,500 and direct loans of up to $17,500 where private financing is not available.
- Limited hospital benefits would be given for nonservice-connected disabilities. Greater benefits would be given those with chronic or tropical diseases.
- The Veterans Administration would guarantee repayment of up to $150 a month in rentals for those drafted while renting homes. The present guarantee is $80. Repayment would be required after discharge from service.

Smokers Beware!

A potentially dangerous cigarette lighter has been called to the attention of state and local health officers by the chief of the Division of Accident Prevention of the Public Health Service, Dr. Paul V. Joliet.

The product is an 'AIRFLAM' lighter, which looks like a large lipstick or perfume vial. The lid comes off easily and the vapor ignites immediately on contact with air, with a flame which is almost invisible.

The hazards include the possibility of a child or adult opening the lighter and being burned by the invisible flame.

This Wed., February 9, the Northampton State Mental Hospital is sponsoring a recruitment night for all interested students attending colleges in the Amherst-Springfield area. The evening will include a discussion of the various programs open to new volunteers, a tour of hospital facilities, and a question and answer period following which refreshments will be served.

About 125 students from 9 colleges are presently participating in volunteer services at N.H.S. but there is a greater need for many more students. This semester's program promises to be more successful than those previous due to the greater allocation of professional personnel to N.H.S.'s volunteer services. A further innovation in this semester's program is the addition of an 8 series lecture program which will take up topics including the problems of a volunteer worker.

Transportation will be provided Wed. at 6:30 in front of the S.U. All students are invited.

SENIOR WEEK '66

Senior Class members and their guests have for the first time in University history the opportunity to enjoy a full-scale senior week in the full sense of the term.

The LAURELS country club and resort in New York state is a plush, swinging establishment which will provide for all seniors and their guests:

- luxury rooms
- all meals
- a myriad of activities (indoor and outdoor pools, golf, tennis, dancing, etc.)
- free PARTIES with legal beverages served.

In order to reserve a place for you and your guest at this once in a lifetime affair, June 6-12, bring a twenty-five dollar deposit to the RSO Office now. Total cost for the entire week will be only sixty dollars. A fabulous buy and a fabulous opportunity to say goodbye to UMass in the kind of style you like.

However, you must act now as places are rapidly becoming filled. After the payment of your deposit, only thirty five more must be paid between now and June for the greatest week of your life.

The Eastern Pest Control Operators Conference of the National Pest Control Association, during a recent University of Massachusetts meeting, presented a snowblower as a retirement gift to Dr. Harvey Leroy Sweetman, professor of entomology and plant pathology who has become a professor emeritus after nearly 35 years on the UMass faculty. At the Lord Jeffery Inn presentation, left to right, is Mrs. Sweetman, Charles Houghton of Boston, past president of the National Pest Control Association, making the presentation, and Dr. Sweetman. The conference cited Dr. Sweetman's "valued and unselfish contributions in helping an industry gain a more professional image."

Operetta Guild Takes On New Look for Spring

The old Operetta Guild has taken on a new look for the spring semester. Monday night the new Operetta Guild had its second organizational meeting and the '66 elections for the executive board were completed.

The results are, Business Manager Peggy Booth with assistant Gwen Hamil, Technical Director sophomore Dan Fivehouse, Personnel Coordinator Sharon Williams, and Publicity Coordinator Joan Gamble.

"No No Nannette", a lively musical comedy with such songs as "Tea For Two" and "I Want To Be Happy", was chosen for the spring production.

This situation comedy revolves around five female and seven male parts. Nannette, a sheltered but eager young girl, finds herself thrown into the chaotic world of a passionate millionaire and his scheming counterparts.

TRYOUTS for the show will be Monday and Tuesday, February 14th and 15th, at 7:30 p.m. in the basement of the Abbey. Anyone interested in singing, dancing, acting, make-up, costumes, set design, tech crew—or just having a good time—COME!

Set design is open to competition. Designs will be judged on three criteria: 1) The incorporation of material already owned by O. G. 2) low cost, and 3) simplicity of construction.

Specifications for design are posted on the bulletin board by the south basement door of the Abbey. (Just look for the sign "Home of the Operetta Guild")

All designs must be submitted by Wednesday, February 16th. Additional information will be posted with the specifications.

OBSTACLES TO THE DISPLACEMENT OF RELIGION BY SCIENCE

BY DR. ROBERT S. FELDMAN, PSYCHOLOGY DEPARTMENT

On Monday Prof. Feldman argued that the techniques of science cannot be fully applied to our current problems because older knowledge systems have not yet been displaced, among them supernatural religion. He pointed out how primitive beliefs developed and in this section he attempts to show how these beliefs are related to the content of formal religion.

An analysis of primitive beliefs has shown that they were characterized fundamentally by animism which is the belief that all natural objects have a conscious life of their own. Thus, if a person stubs his toe on a stone, he can return the hurt by striking the stone. Or if he sees a herd of antelopes, someone or something put it there in the same way that his mother put a basket of berries in front of him. It is easy to see that from this belief in animism there develops a belief in myth and magic. If one were hungry and there were no antelopes, he implored the one that distributes antelopes, to put a few in reach for himself, and the way to do that is to ask just as he asked his mother for berries.

OCCASIONALLY, by coincidence, his entreaties were answered and this led to the institutionalization of beliefs, rites, and ritual. Recent experiments by B. F. Skinner have demonstrated the mechanisms by which this takes place. An interesting paper, "Superstition in the pigeon" (J. exp. Psychol., 1948, 38: 168 - 172) describes how a pigeon may accidentally make a peculiar hopping response just before a food is inserted into the cage according to the experimenter's schedule. The bird associates the hopping with getting food, and "thinks" that the hopping was responsible for it. Thereafter the bird continues this hopping even though it "works" very rarely. And, interestingly enough, the experiments showed that these superstitious responses persisted longer if the presentation of food coincided rarely than more often. There are numerous examples in human behavior, e.g., maneuvers to change your luck at cards, seats to sit in and clothes and amulets to wear at examinations, and so on.

To continue, early man was also aware of more abstract consistencies in his world, those having to do with tribal custom, kinship, etiquette and taboos, and the same rules of animism were applied here. For example, there may be a prohibition against looking at pregnant women at certain times. This belief may have originated eons ago when an accidental catastrophe occurred in the presence of a pregnant woman, and someone got the notion that she caused it, and hence, pregnant women are bad luck. Why? "Obvious," said some sage, "she doesn't look natural, and unnatural things are evil, hence bad, and besides, the gods want it this way." No one bothers about the poor assumptions and the poor logic — after all you can't take any chances about such things.

RETURNING to the central point, we must appreciate that animism, myth and magic made up the dominant philosophy or knowledge system for 600,000 years of the paleolithic age, and during 10,000 years of the neolithic age, and that philosophy has been seriously challenged only during the last 250 years of the last 5,000 years of recorded history. It should also be pointed out that there were two other philosophical developments, albeit more sophisticated than myth and magic, which nevertheless had a retarding effect on the development of science. These were teleology and a mistaken confidence in rationalistic conceptions.

First, teleology is the anthropocentric belief in purpose as an explanatory system. For example:

"The moon exists to light our way at night."

"Earthworms exist to aerate the soil."

"Sexual intercourse exists for procreation."

All of these propositions seem patently valid, but a little sophistication reveals that one cannot really explain a thing or predict anything on the basis of such statements. No astronomer, quater astronomer, would entertain the first notion for two seconds; no biologist could say anything about the origins or physiology of annelids on the basis of the second; and no embryologist, geneticist, or demographer could say anything on the basis of the third.

MOST EDUCATED PEOPLE see the fallacy of the first two statements but fail to see the same fallacy in the third, and this accounts for some of the controversy currently developing over the question of population control. It is a matter of fact that this kind of thinking is so strong it frequently passes for science or natural law. Some time ago my young son returned from school announcing he had a science class for the first time in which he learned that cactus plants had needles on them so that cattle wouldn't eat them. This is teleology in its crudest form, and we see how it corrupts the scientific view before its eventual demise. This is a common occurrence as old philosophies are displaced by new ones and one has to guard against the contaminating effects of the old system.

What is wrong with teleology is that it tries to explain in terms of purpose or consequences, and this implies a kind of super-intelligence either of a prime mover or of an individual, and this is animism.

HERE it should be mentioned that even though some people have given up the notion of a supernatural prime mover, they nevertheless cling to a conception of individuals or groups as having the same properties. In other words, they contend that man is different from other things in nature and his behavior is not subject to the laws of causality or determinism but may arise through the exercise of the will. At worst, this is an undisguised form of question begging, and at best, there is no set of criteria which enables us to distinguish between those human events which are traceable to causes and those which spring spontaneously out of the so-called human spirit.

Turning now to the issue of the misuse of rationalistic conceptions, I refer to the confusion of casual relations with logical implications. A sample example will illustrate: "All babies have green hair, Little Joe is a baby, thus Little Joe has green hair." Syllogistically there is nothing wrong with these statements, but it is obvious that the basic assumption is false. Hence, learning rules of logic and applying them faithfully cannot contribute to knowledge unless one has some criterion for making original assumptions.

NOW WE MAY ASK, "With respect to human behavior, in what kind of knowledge can one have confidence?" My thesis, of course, is one of selling scientific knowledge, having pointed out the obsolescence of teleology and the limitations of rationalism. I will not waste the readers' time by stating the more obvious characteristics of the scientific method since he is probably well versed in these by now, but in the next issue I will review some of the more subtle aspects of science, the pre-ferred knowledge system.

RELIGION — 1966 MODEL TOKEN RELIGION THE RELIGION CLUB

BY NANCY LEIBOVITZ

What seems to be causing the conflict over religion among college students on the campus? From conversations overheard at the Hatch, dorm sessions, meetings and parties, a big issue appears to be personal versus institutionalized religion.

There are many students who have not given up their religious beliefs altogether, but who have become wary of the institutions which present religion to them. They are unable to reconcile newly learned scientific facts and theories on life, and the natural order of the universe, with old, scientifically unprovable religious dogmas.

If they made a token practice of attending church every Sunday at home, only because they would incur the wrath of their family and local clergyman, at college they have given up the ghost. You'll find them sleeping peacefully on those Sunday mornings instead. If they followed ritualistic dietary customs to please grandmother from the old country at home, you'll find them happily gulping down a hamburger and a forbidden glass of milk in the Copper Kettle.

However, if you ask them if they believe in God, there is a very good chance that you will get a strong "yes" and an added, "but not all the other extras that have become attached to institutionalized religion." Many students simply cannot accept miracles on faith alone.

And yet, more than ever, there seems to be a need today, in the chaos of life which belongs to twentieth century man, for a spiritual entity. A Being who can comfort in times of personal grief, inspire in times of intellectual depression, and support in times of ethical conflict.

However, the religion of modern youth must be a fast-paced religion to match his fast-paced life. It may have to be a "pray and run" religion, and it may have to be a religion that doesn't fit in on Friday nights and Sunday mornings, but only in scattered moments of personal need, in a quiet dormitory room or at a corner table in the library.

So although it may appear to adults and religious leaders that the youth of today are entering a period of irreligiousness, it may actually only be a shift from an outward show of religion to a sincere inward expression of personal faith. And perhaps this is the way religion was really meant to be.

BY JACK DEAN

Is religion dying? Is God really dead as many modern theologians claim?

These questions are being asked more frequently today, particularly in the light of scientific findings which appear to contradict religious teachings. Science is now waging a war with religion which could ultimately bring about a humanistic, scientifically oriented civilization with man elevating himself to the position of Supreme Being.

How has this deplorable situation come about? This question is possibly even more important than the first; for if one is to rectify a situation, he must first recognize the conditions which have been detrimental to it.

The slow death of organized religion appears to be due, mainly, to its failure to provide strong, understandable, and unchanging guides for its followers. Most believers in God are hard-pressed to prove His existence to those who question it.

And, too, religious bodies have evolved to a point where they no longer cater primarily to man's spiritual needs. Organized religion is now basically social in nature, a fact which may be illustrated by referring to women's societies, men's clubs, athletic teams, scout troops, youth groups of various types, and the like. No longer does one belong solely to a particular school of theological thought; instead, he belongs to an all-around organization where, if he pays his "dues," he is entitled to participate in the activities of his choosing. What better way is there to display "loyalty" to a religion than by playing basketball?

It is fairly obvious that religion is fighting a losing battle, and will continue to do so, until it starts tending to the needs of the spirit and provides strong guides on which faith may be based.

There are already too many social classifications in our society—let's not let religion become one of them.

MASSACHUSETTS COLLEGIAN FORUM

A Little Criticism

Though the Collegian is not The New York Times and its reporters are not first-class journalists, I doubt whether there has been a worse theatre review in the long history of our paper. Jon Hutton's pretended knowledgeability of theatre production showed him to be merely a would-be wit who must have frantically searched class D newspapers for reviews with disparaging phrases. His efforts resulted in a criticism in which Hutton sophomorically "dumped" upon acting technique he obviously did not comprehend.

On Campus with Max Shulman

(By the author of "Rally Round the Flag, Boys!", "Dobie Gillis," etc.)

ROOMMATES: THEIR CAUSE AND CURE

You'd think that with all the progress we have made in the education game, somebody would have found a cure for roommates by now. But no. Roommates remain as big a problem today as they were when Ethan Mather founded the first American college.

(Contrary to popular belief, Harvard was not the first. Mr. Mather started his institution some 100 years earlier. And quite an institution it was, let me tell you! Mr. Mather built schools of liberal arts, fine arts, dentistry and tanning. He built a lacrosse stadium that seated 200,000. Everywhere on campus was emblazoned the stirring Latin motto CAVE MUSSI—"Watch out for moose." The student union contained a bowling alley, a weighing machine, and a sixteen-chair barber shop.)

(It was this last feature—the barber shop—that, alas, brought Mr. Mather's college to an early end. The student body, being drawn chiefly from the nearby countryside, was composed almost entirely of Pequot and Iroquois Indians who, alas, had no need of a barber shop. They braided the hair on top of their heads, and as for the hair on their faces, they had none. The barber, Tremblatt Follicle by name, grew so depressed staring day after day at 16 empty chairs that one day his mind gave way. Seizing his vibrator, he ran outside and shook the entire campus till it crumbled to dust. This later became known as Pickett's Charge.)

But I digress. We were exploring ways for you and your roommate to stop hating each other. This is admittedly difficult but not impossible if you will both bend a bit, give a little.

I remember, for example, my own college days (Berlitz '08). My roommate was, I think you will allow, even less agreeable than most. He was a Tibetan named Ringading whose native customs, while indisputably colorful, were not entirely endearing. Mark you, I didn't mind so much the gong he struck on the hour or the string of firecrackers he set off on the half hour. I didn't even mind that he slung chicken feathers every dusk and daybreak. What I did mind was that he slung them in my hat.

To be fair, he was not totally taken with some of my habits either—especially my hobby of collecting water. I had no jars at the time, so I just had to stack the water any-old-where.

Well, sir, things grew steadily cooler between Ringading and me, and they might actually have gotten ugly had we not each happened to receive a package from home one day. Ringading opened his package, paused, smiled shyly at me, and offered me a gift.

"Thank you," I said. "What is it?"

"Yak butter," he said. "You put it in your hair. In Tibetan we call it grease kid stuff."

"Well now, that's mighty friendly," I said and offered him a gift from my package. "Now you must have one of mine."

"Thank you," he said. "What is this called?"

"Personna Stainless Steel Razor Blades," I said.

"I will try one at once," he said. And did.

"Wowdow!" he cried. "Never have I had such a smooth, close, comfortable shave!"

"Ah, but the best is yet!" I cried. "For you will get many, many smooth, close, comfortable shaves from your Personna Blade—each one nearly as smooth, close, and comfortable as the first!"

"Wowdow!" he cried.

"Moreover," I cried, "Personna Blades come both in Double Edge style and Injector style!"

"Sort of makes a man feel humble," he said.

"Yes," I said.

We were both silent then, not trusting ourselves to speak. Silently we clasped hands, friends at last, and I am proud to say that Ringading and I remain friends to this day. We exchange cards each Christmas and firecrackers each Fourth of July.

Can They Serve

BY SKIP DAVIS

Can a representative of students living in a residence hall be allowed to reside outside of that residence hall and still act as the voice of his constituents? It would appear to be an extremely difficult task for a full-time student to carry on his official duties as a liaison man between the University Student Senate and the residents of a dormitory when circumstances force him to vacate that dormitory.

Wednesday night a bill will be sponsored in the Student Senate which, if passed, would allow a Senator, elected to represent a residence hall, to continue to function in this capacity after he has left that dormitory. Senate Bill number S-87: "A resident of a Residential Area" will be defined for the purpose of Art. II, Sect. 2 the constitution of S.G.A. to mean that a student shall have a bed and a room at the time of his election in the residential area, and shall not have voluntarily given up a bed and a room in that dormitory during his term in office and a Student Senator shall continue to be a resident for the purpose of Art. II, Sect. 2 unless a Student Judiciary shall recommend that the Student Senator be removed from the residential area . . ."

If Bill S-87 is allowed to pass, anyone interested in becoming a senator would be allowed to enter a residence hall, campaign for election, and then remove himself from that residence hall with his representative powers while, in actuality, he would not have any constituency. Such a senator would no longer be responsible to the students who elected him, and, unless impeached by the dormitory residents, he would represent only one constituent, himself.

If bill S-87 is defeated, the representatives would be bound to their constituents. If this bill is passed, representation in the senate would be non-existent and any sen-

Graduation was only the beginning of Jim Brown's education

Because he joined Western Electric

Jim Brown, Northwestern University, '62, came with Western Electric because he had heard about the Company's concern for the continued development of its engineers after college graduation.

Jim has his degree in industrial engineering and is continuing to learn and grow in professional stature through Western Electric's Graduate Engineering Training Program. The objectives and educational philosophy of this Program are in the best of academic traditions, designed for both experienced and new engineers.

Like other Western Electric engineers, Jim started out in this Program with a six-week course to help in the transition from the classroom to industry. Since then, Jim Brown has continued to take courses that will help him keep up with the newest engineering techniques in communications.

This training, together with formal college engineering studies, has given Jim the ability to develop his talents to the fullest extent. His present responsibilities include the solution of engineering problems in the manufacture of moly-permalloy core rings, a component used to improve the quality of voice transmission.

If you set the highest standards for yourself, enjoy a challenge, and have the qualifications we're looking for—we want to talk to you! Opportunities exist now for electrical, mechanical and industrial engineers, and for physical science, liberal arts and business majors. For more information, get your copy of the Western Electric Career Opportunities booklet from your Placement Officer. And be sure to arrange for an interview when the Bell System recruiting team visits your campus.

International Club Plans Are Big This Semester

The first cabinet meeting of the UMass International Club will be held Wed., Feb. 9. The meeting will be presided over by club president Alladin Hashim and programs for the semester will be finalized.

This semester's programs are more ambitious and have added some exciting new features.

Besides the weekly coffee hour every Wednesday and the "Land and People" series, a monthly dance will be arranged for members of the club.

The cabinet is also making arrangements for tours of parts of the U.S. to further acquaint club members with the country.

SAYONARA

The members of the club who left this semester after completing their studies here were bid "sayonara", and those entering the University this year were wished "sa'amat datang" by the International Club at the coffee hour last Wednesday.

Alladin Hashim, president of the club, wished the best of luck on behalf of the club to those departing and welcomed those who arrived in Amherst recently.

Speaking on the occasion, Parakash A. Raj, a graduate student in geology from Nepal (the home of Mt. Everest), said that he will always cherish the pleasant memories of his three-year stay in the USA. Rephrasing McCarthy's saying, Raj concluded his speech by saying, "old memories never die, they only fade away."

TALK ON NIGERIA

A talk entitled "Political Situation in Nigeria", (with special reference to recent military takeover), has been arranged for this Wed., Feb. 9, at 6:30 p.m. in the Governor's Lounge, S.U. It is another in the International Club's "Land and People Series."

Since this revolt in Nigeria involves shifting of political power from people in the northern region to people in the south, two UMass students from Nigeria, Abdullah Ibrahim and Syivanus Odurukwe, have been called upon to speak. They represent the northern and southern parts of their countries respectively.

Hatem Al Hussaini, vice president of the club, will act as moderator. All are cordially invited to attend.

CAN THEY SERVE . . .

ator would be free to seek personal gain rather than representative government.

The Senators were elected to represent the student body. It is about time the student body took the initiative and put some of its public opinion to a worthwhile cause. Speak out to your representative and help defeat Student Senate Bill S-87.

Man from UMCLE Cometh

Umcle is coming. Everyone has been wondering what U.M.C.L.E. really is. The letters stand for the University of Massachusetts Commission for Label Enforcement.

The Commission has been established to inspect the students of the University to find out whether they are wearing the Winter Carnival buttons.

The men from U.M.C.L.E. will wear maroon berets and carry rifles. The first inspection will be late in the week at a strategic time, with more during the weekend.

The men from U.M.C.L.E. will give everyone ample time to purchase a button. Penalties will be administered to those students who are caught without a button.

What are the penalties? Don't buy a button (if you are of brave heart), and find out.

The buttons will be on sale at U.M.C.L.E. headquarters (in front of the bookstore). They are cheap—no more than a phone call.

The buttons are made of strong metal with a smooth celluloid finish and have a sharp safety pin back, sure to outlast every other souvenir of Winter Carnival 1966.

Princess Summerfall Winterspring and Clarabell (Ed Jasinski '52) on "Howdy Doody"

It's Howdy Doody Time!

By GENA COREA,
Feature Staff

"It's Howdy Doody time!"
"No Ma. I can't come to supper now. Let's eat in front of TV."

Do you remember when Howdy Doody was more important than food? Do you remember Phineas T. Bluster, Dilly Dally, Flub-a-dub, Princess Summerfall Winterspring, Buffalo Bob? And Clarabell?

Of course you remember Clarabell. He ran around squirting people with his seltzer bottle! He reminds you of a lot of U-Mies you know. He should. Clarabell is a UMie too.

Clarabell the Clown, of the Howdy Doody TV show, was portrayed for several years by one of our University graduates, Edwin Jasinski. Mr. Jasinski came to this campus as a sophomore in 1945 following his service in the Navy, and obtained his B.A. degree in Economics in February 1952.

School records show that Mr. Jasinski, who was better known by his nickname Jazz, participated in a wide variety of campus activities: varsity football and basketball, Varsity M Club, class treasurer, judiciary committee, Roister Doisters, Ski Club, Veterans Club, Newman Club, Band and Concert Club.

HE ALSO served on committees for Dad's Day, Mother's Day, Carnival Ball, Soph Senior Hop and Inter - Greek Ball. He was also a member of Phi Sigma Kappa, and was vice-president during his junior year.

Several people on the campus today, notably Dan Melley of the News Service, Dean Field and Dean Tunis, one of Mr. Jasinski's frat brothers, remember Jazz.

They describe him as a campus character, a living legend and the first person a freshman heard about when he arrived at Amherst.

No wonder Jazz was a legend. He began his clowning career at UMass. At the football rallies and games, he was the star. On the way to the games, students passing Phi Sig would see Jasinski hanging from a tree like an effigy. He'd hold a funny sign.

He would make a grand entrance at the games, dressed in a tuxedo and a racoon coat that dangled around his ankles. During one game, he stole the football and ran down the field with the grubby football players chasing after tux-clad Jazz.

At another game, Jazz, dressed as Lady Godiva-avec-shorts and a flowing wig, charged down the field on a white plow horse. The police charged after him.

Jazz, or the Count of Chicope as he called himself, didn't restrict his clowning to the stadium. Customers of a local butcher shop got quite a shock when they looked in the meat counter one day.

The Count, dressed in his usual tux, had laid himself out in the counter with his hands folded over his chest.

Help! We need some body...

Caesura board members are looking for art, poetry and prose for the winter issue. We have not been inundated by material!

Your contribution won't be lost among thousands (hundreds) (tens) of others!

Submitted material is not examined in a highly objective manner, but critically, to choose subjects which the readers can enjoy and to publish the fine art of university students.

Desperation is not Caesura's plea; but the literary publication can be only as good as its best contributions.

THE DEADLINE for the winter issue is Friday, Feb. 11. All material may be left on the Caesura desk in the Franklin room, S.U. If you have any questions, leave a message there.

There are now several openings for members of the Caesura Board. Anyone interested in playing critic, in elevating the quality of Caesura, or in suggesting ideas for the future issues is encouraged to apply at this time to become a voting member.

The poetry staff will meet on Thursday, Feb. 10 at 7 p.m. and the prose board on Tues., Feb. 15 at 7 p.m. to interview interested persons.

Sign up sheets are posted in the Franklin Room for candidate appointments.

Art board candidates should contact the Art editor, Robert Pero, by phone, or leave a message on the Caesura desk.

The "broken egg"?

The "broken egg" coffee house will open this Friday night at 8 p.m. It is located on North Pleasant Street on the University side of the University Motor Lodge in Amherst.

On today's campus, one of the most frequently heard themes is freedom of expression. The "broken egg" is a neutral environment designed to encourage this freedom.

To this end, the coffee house will employ modern art forms such as painting, sculpture, folk music, and experimental films.

Coffee and donuts will be available.

If you are tired of the usual, come blow your shell at the "broken egg".

Pigs Eat Healthier!

In one sense, a man who eats like a pig may be better off than his fellow human beings.

Nutritionally speaking, cattle and pigs eat more vitamins than humans because of the pre-mixed food they are given by ranchers.

Dr. George M. Briggs, a University of California nutritionist, says controlled feeding means healthier animals.

"Animal nutrition has become such an advanced science that cattle, pigs and poultry under modern feeding conditions get a far better ration and more nutritious foods than does the average human being," he says.

Noting that some foods for humans are fortified with such vitamins as riboflavin, niacin and others, he proposes that "with the availability of low-cost manufactured vitamins, we could do this on a much larger scale very cheaply and effectively to insure complete protection against vitamin deficiencies" for humans.

"Many complications will keep this from happening overnight, but the idea is a promising one."

On Campus RCA will interview for Graduate Training Programs on February 16

Candidates for BS, AB and Advanced Degrees are invited to consider this opportunity to join a world-famous electronics corporation.

Briefly, the three principal RCA programs are:

COMPUTER MARKETING

requires individuals with good academic standing and a degree in engineering, science, mathematics, liberal arts, or business administration, with an interest in computer systems and sales.

The program consists of five integrated phases incorporating both formal and on-the-job training.

ENGINEERING

for the engineer or physicist interested in research, development or design engineering.

There are three possible avenues for the individual chosen:

Design and Development Specialized Training will help you decide in which directions your career aptitudes lie.

Direct Assignment

for the person who knows his chosen field of interest.

Graduate Study

offers selected candidates an opportunity to continue their studies, fee paid, for two days a week, and work at RCA three days.

FINANCIAL

for the graduate with an interest in financial management and the applications of the computer in the field of finance.

This is a complete indoctrination into RCA's approach to financial management and other management functions. You will be trained in depth to assume an important post in one of the many RCA businesses.

Qualified People Sought To Fill Job Opportunities

Department of State Recruiting Officers will be in Boston from February 28 through March 12. They are looking for qualified young people for positions in American Embassies and Consulates in some 300 cities, from Adelaide to Zagreb. They are also looking for candidates for positions in the "home" office in Washington, D. C.

"These jobs must be filled by the best qualified young people we can find," said one of the Recruiting Officers who has served in the Foreign Service around the world. "Our standards are high, and we plan to keep them that way. But," she added, "those fortunate enough to qualify will find a challenging, interesting career with an added 'bonus', the satisfaction which comes from serving one's country in a vital capacity."

Consideration for Foreign Service positions will be given to experienced secretaries who are single and have shorthand skill, and to communications clerks with recent experience in cryptography or teletype. Applicants must be American citizens who are high school graduates at least 21, and able to pass qualified tests. Salaries range from $4,641 to $5,190 per year. Washington positions are open for typists and stenographers who are high school graduates, American citizens at least 18, and able to pass qualified tests. Salaries range from $3,814 to $5,190 per year.

Interviews will be conducted at the Massachusetts State Employment Service, 6 Somerset St., Boston, from February 28 through March 12. Hours are 9:15 A.M. to 4:30 P.M., daily, until 8:00 P.M. on Wednesdays and until Noon on Saturdays. The telephone number is LAfayette 3-4525.

Book Exch. Closes

The APO-GSS Used Book Exchange is drawing to a close. As of Tuesday no more book sales were made, and the Exchange is now open only to make payments to sellers and to return unsold books.

All persons who brought books to the Book Exchange are reminded to claim their money or books in the Middlesex Room no later than 5 p.m. on Thursday, February 10. No payments will be made or books returned unless the seller can present his receipt.

Caesura Now Accepting Artwork For Forthcoming Second Issue

Everyone has heard of face lifting on this campus. In fact a college or university is a kind of ideal breeding ground for change, and it should be; new ideas are tested and new purposes are discovered.

It isn't really very surprising then to hear about the new face on the forthcoming issue of Caesura. The issue will be unique in several ways but it's not our purpose here to discuss the specific changes. The staff feels that each issue should test new ideas concerning every aspect of publishing and, therefore, it is proposing three face liftings a year, one for each issue.

Caesura is not looking for The best format, because there isn't a single method for universal purposes. An idea which may be valid for one issue could (and probably would), be inappropriate for the next. A stock format, one which claims excellence, may be adequate for a stock market listing, but even commercial marketing firms periodically change their catalogs with a consideration for consumer appeal.

Anyone wishing to submit art work for the second and next issue of "Caesura" should leave the submissions in the Caesura office in the Student Union Building, or contact Robert Petro, Tel. 586-1153, on or before Feb. 20.

Special consideration will be given in this issue to those works which exhibit an unusual technique or content, but all submissions are welcome. Good photography is also needed—any theme.

Workshop Is Sponsored By University Volunteers

"The mentally retarded can be helped," says the President's Commission on Mental Retardation. This is one topic to be discussed at an open workshop on mental retardation sponsored by the University Volunteers for Retarded Children Association, February 12, in the Student Union Senate Chambers.

The Volunteers are University students who work with the mentally retarded children at Belchertown State School.

Main speakers for the workshop will include Mr. William Barse, Director of the Community Action Group in Holyoke and former director of the Hampden County Association for Retarded Children; Dr. Louis Klebanoff, Assistant to Director of Mental Education of the Commonwealth of Mass.; and Mr. Francis Kelly, Sup't. of Mansfield State Training School in Conn. and Consultant on Recreation to the Kennedy Foundation.

A coffee hour at 9:30 will open the workshop, with the program starting at 10:00. Discussion groups will include such topics as psychology of the child, special education and recreation, child development, and community resources.

Those interested in attending the free workshop should register by contacting Aline MacDonnell, 326 Dickinson House at the University.

Reverend Green To Lecture At Smith College

"Which way Rhodesia in the Struggle for White Supremacy?" is the title of a lecture to be given at Smith College's Wright Hall Auditorium, at 7:30 p.m. on February 9. The lecturer will be Reverend Rufus Green, Rector of the Church of the Redeemer in Watertown, New York, who was for twenty years active in social work in Rhodesia.

The lecture is one in a series of monthly discussions on the theme, "The Church in a World Come of Age," sponsored by the Smith College Christian Association, and the public is invited to attend.

A graduate of St. Paul's Theological College, Grahamstown, South Africa, Mr. Green has served as organizer of social welfare work under the Beit Trustees, and as colony organizing secretary for the National Youth Council of Rhodesia. Awarded the M.B.E. by King George VI, he was also the first person in Rhodesia to receive a Carnegie Travel Scholarship. He was a founding member of The National Affairs Society and of the National Arts Council of Southern Rhodesia, and, in addition to the National Youth Council of Rhodesia founded several inter-racial social and cultural groups in that country.

You've got to be wide awake to put the collegian to bed.

The production of a newspaper as large and as well-regarded as the Collegian is a remarkable thing. It is the product of many people, each with his own individual stamp and style, yet the final product must retain a traditionally high standard. An uncanny amalgamation of individuality and teamwork.

The Collegian owes its success and nationally-known fine reputation, then, to two factors: the individual quality of each staff member and the pride of the staff in the final product.

Each applicant for a position on the Collegian staff will be expected to possess a consummate degree of personal pride in his or her work; present staff members will quickly instill in successful applicants the tradition of pride which permeates each edition of the Collegian.

Conscientiousness is our most important pre-requisite; you can be taught to read and write, but only you can develop and nurture pride in your work.

Some Collegian staff positions have become available with the normal semester-break turnover. Applications are currently being accepted. Stop in and leave your name with the Collegian secretary on the second floor of the Union or drop in to see us at our meeting for new applicants on Monday, February 14.

WORLD WIDE OPPORTUNITIES IN CAREER MANAGEMENT POSITIONS

The Army and Air Force Exchange Service needs trainees in the following areas:

- Food Management
- Retail Management
- Personnel Administration
- Architectural Engineering
- Accounting

The Army and Air Force Exchange Service is an Agency of the United States Government, established to provide military personnel and their dependents with merchandise and services not furnished by the Government.

Exchange personnel are governed by an independent self-sustained program, offering attractive salary, outstanding fringe benefits, and excellent opportunities for advancement for ambitious graduating seniors.

Our recruiter will visit this campus on 11 February 1966. Register with your Placement Service for a personal interview.

1966 SWAP Committee Seeks New Membership

S.W.A.P.—Student Workshop on Activities Problems, is a conference designed to; bring together in an informal atmosphere, representatives of campus organizations so that they might discuss and solve their mutual problems, give students the opportunity to confront faculty or administration and air grievances or request help, give the student representatives an insight as to the problems confronting the University staff and give the staff a similar insight into student difficulties.

The represented organizations include major activities, (service groups, religious groups, class executive councils, etc.), dorms, fraternities and Sororities. Each organization sends at least one delegate who is prepared to discuss the problems plaguing his particular group as well as aid other groups. The delegate is grouped in conferences with representatives from similar organizations, thus mutual problems can be discussed.

The week-end conference is highlighted by keynote speakers from the fields of education and student activities. These speakers set the tone for the following discussions and arouse the enthusiasm that always manifests itself at a S.W.A.P. Conference.

The S.W.A.P. conference is planned, organized, and directed by the S.W.A.P. committee. The group is composed completely of students with advisors from the faculty and staff. It is their responsibility to; contact organizations; instruct delegates; acquire speakers; arrange accommodations, transportation, and entertainment; provide discussion leaders and secretaries, and complete the final report. The committee is composed of between seven and twelve members of the Freshmen, Sophomore, and Junior classes (when chosen).

The S.W.A.P. "1966" Committee is currently being formed, if you are interested in becoming a member of this group fill out an application at the R.S.O. Office in the Student Union.

Friends Meeting Planned For Conscientious Objectors

An Open Meeting on Conscientious Objection to military service, sponsored by the Mt. Toby Friends (Quakers) will be held Sunday, February 13 at 7 p.m. in the Middlesex Room, Student Union, University of Massachusetts. George Bliss, Headmaster, the Meeting School, Rindge, N.H. will speak on "Alternatives under Selective Service" and Prof. Milton Mayer of the University English department will discuss "Thinking Through the Basis for Conscientious Objection." This will be followed by discussion in small groups lead by Friends from the Mt. Toby Meeting who have taken the conscientious objector position. The meeting is open to both men and women who wish to hear about and discuss the implications of the C.O. position.

For more information about this meeting, or to obtain the "Handbook for Conscientious Objectors, or other literature, contact Prof. John H. Foster, AL 3-5253.

The IBM interviewer will be on campus February 14-15

Interview him. How else are you going to find out about new ways to use your talents and skills in an exciting
"go-places" career?

You could visit a nearby IBM branch office. You could write to the Manager of College Relations, IBM Corporate Headquarters, Armonk, New York 10504. But we would like to see you on campus. Why not check at your placement office today? See if you can still make an appointment for an on-campus visit with IBM. Then interview the IBM interviewer. Whatever your area of study, ask him how you might use your particular talents at IBM. Ask about your growth potential in America's fastest-growing major industry. You'll never regret it. IBM is an Equal Opportunity Employer.

INTRAMURAL REPORT

By DAVE JARNES
THE WEBSTER RAMS parlayed a balanced attack and a ball-hawking defense into a surprisingly easy 49-35 victory over the once mighty Chadbourne Maroons, who are the defending dorm champs. Burt Cady's 20 points and 15 rebounds were instrumental in Webster's win.

Meanwhile, the Baker Buffaloes won their fifth straight after an opening game setback against the Rams by toppling the fading Baker Bruins 40-21 as Chuck Webster hit the nets for 20 points. Both the Rams and the Buffaloes have one loss apiece while the Baker Barracudas have yet to lose. However, the Barracudas still have to play the Rams and the Buffaloes and a playoff for the North league title could very well result if the Barracudas fail to finish unbeaten.

IN A BATTLE for second place LCA edged out TC 6-34 although no players hit double figures for the winners. In another tight fraternity game TKE nosed out BKP 36-35 despite Carl Gustafson's game high of 14 points.

KS warmed up for the upcoming playoffs by whipping PMD 48-33. Greg Landry cleared the boards while Detore, Murray, and MacDonough all hit double figures.

Big Al Sagesse chipped in with 13 points as SPE topped PSD 35-25 and AEP outscored ASP with Alan White scoring 14 for Pi.

Ray Stanelis with 33 points and Bill Carty with 2 kept the Patriots' title hopes alive as they blasted the Redwoods 73-29.

IN INDEPENDENT GAMES the Hotrods nipped the 5 Friars 30-27, the Moody Blues bombed the Shlubs 60-26, and the Capitalists got by the College St. A.C. 39-37. The Phantoms held the Leftovers to the lowest score of the year in scoring a lopsided 42-10 verdict.

Freestyle ace Dick Daniel, who won the 200 yard event in the UMass-Coast Guard swimming meet.

Swimmers Lose Disputed Meet

THE SWIMMING TEAM met trouble right from the first event against Coast Guard Academy in New London on Saturday. The evasive Academy team attempted several means to ensure a victory over the powerful Mermen squad. The final outcome resulted from the call of one official during the last event, the 400 yd. freestyle relay.

The Academy started their powerful swimmers against the UMass second team in the 400 yd. medley relay. This saved the individuals of the regular UMass team to compete well-rested in their own events, where they demonstrated their skills well.

DICK DANIELS again led the field in the 200 yd. freestyle. Coach Rogers has depended heavily on Dick here and in the 500 yd. event, and Dick has proven himself admirably.

Chip Wyser did it again when he won the 60 yd. freestyle. Chip hadn't swum much during the week, and this race was really in doubt. To add to his laurels, Chip swam the race in record-breaking time.

Ken Nowak and Dick Lannon took first and second in the 160 yd. individual medley. These extra points put the mermen definitely in the winning column.

LACK OF PRACTICE showed itself as the divers took third and fourth, and lost the winning momentum gained in earlier races.

Steve Levy swam closely on the heels of Coast Guard, not quite enough to overtake his opponent, and Steve took second. Steve, who was switched from a freestyler to a butterfly man, is swimming his hardest against tough competition.

Chip Wyser returned to win the 100 yd. freestyle. This victory again tilted the meet's score in favor of UMass. Ken Nowak, in a rather poor attempt, took second in the 200 yd. backstroke. Ken lost much valuable ground from the beginning of the race and never won it back.

ANOTHER NEW RECORD went to Dick Lannon who dropped 3.6 seconds off his old time in the 200 yd. breaststroke. Dick set the pace for 150 yds., only to surge ahead to outdistance his closest rival and gain a new record of 2:29.2. Ted Severn, tight from an excess of Western flying over intercession, took third in the event.

The crucial and most hotly-disputed event was the 400 yd. freestyle relay. Dick Lannon, fresh from the 200 yd. breaststroke, was disqualified for allegedly jumping his start. Spectators and other officials at the

Redmen Fall to Strong BC Eagles

By TOM FITZGERALD
and MIKE CURRAN

The shooting wizardry of All-America candidate John Austin and the backboard tandem of Willie Wolters and Steve Adelman proved too much for the ever hustling Redmen to handle as Boston College posted a 101-80 decision last night at the Roberts Center in Boston. The Eagles, under basketball immortal Bob Cousy, took their thirteenth victory in seventeen games, but had their troubles with the UM offense in the early going.

Frank Stewart scored the Redmen's first seven markers, as UM took an early 7-4 lead. Both teams traded baskets, until a Bill Tindall jumper and a bomb from the corner by Gary Gasperack gave UM a 19-15 lead. After Austin and Tindall had traded two-pointers, BC ran off eleven straight points to spurt ahead, 28-21, just after the first 10-minute mark.

During this spree, Wolters' bucket with 11:15 left in the half gave BC a 22-21 edge. UMass did not lead again. With Wolters and Adelman vacuuming the boards and with Austin as deadly as Batman's laser beam, the Redmen felt the rug being gradually pulled out from underneath them.

The Eagles hit on 40 of 85 shots from the floor, while the Redmen scored 32 of 80. BC held a 61-47 rebounding edge, although Tindall was scraping his share of paint off the boards with 17 rebounds. The 6'8" 220-lb. Wolters and the 6'5" 205 lb. Adelman represented a lot of muscle underneath.

Hill and Austin tied for game scoring honors with 25 points, and Wolters and Adelman each checked in at 23 points for BC. Following Hill for the Redmen were Tindall with 17, Babyak with 14, and Stewart with 11.

The Redmen thus dipped below .500 again and will be hoping to rebound against Rhode Island and Maine at the Cage on Friday and Saturday night.

Pucksters Clash Tonite

By DAVE HANSON

THE REDMEN SEXTET faces off tonight against Coach John Chapman's Connecticut pucksters in what promises to be an exciting game. The Huskies sport two close decisions over the UMies and are hot off wins over Wesleyan and M.I.T. The Redmen are coming off on a 32 day idle period but Coach Steve Kosakowski has been drilling the squad nightly for the past ten days and they appear ready for the encounter.

Kosakowski will go with a first line of Ed Polchlopek at center, and Bill Skowrya and Dave Eaton at the wings. This line has accounted for 18 of the Redmen's 35 scores this season and has been looking at its best ing to rebound against Rhode Island and Maine at the Cage on Friday and Saturday night. Hill's 25 points sets the stage for Friday night when he will need only 14 points to take Doug Grutchfield's place as the number one scorer in UM history.

In a thrilling freshman preliminary, the Little Redmen held off a BC rally to register an 85-81 decision. A 5'11" guard, Bill Evans, scored 34 points for the Eagles and sparked the uprising that proved fruitless when reserve Lonnie Lehrer scored both ends of a clutch one-and-one situation with 25 seconds remaining.

It took the best all-around effort of the season by UM to master the BC Frosh, who owned an 8-2 record and had beaten mighty Holy Cross by 22.

UMass took the lead for keeps almost immediately. A three-point play by John Shockro followed a basket by BC's Jim King to start off the fray. A fast-break lay-up by Terry Driscoll netted the Eagles a 4-3 lead, but a good-looking hook by the greatly-improved Peter Gayeska put UM ahead, 5-4.

The Little Redmen, from this point on, were never headed, although they were constantly hard-pressed in the fourth quarter. Two baskets each by Gayeska and Mike Gemei, just before the first 10-minute mark gave UM a 25-14 first quarter bulge. UM led at halftime, 44-36, and at the middle of the second quarter by 67-60, but with the shifty Evans driving for baskets and with King and Driscoll rebounding strongly, the game went down to the wire.

Gemei and Shockro led the Little Redmen with 22 and 20 points, and Gayeska chipped in 17 while pulling down 20 rebounds. The Frosh will be in action again. Friday and Saturday night against Cornwall Academy, which features several former Western Mass. schoolboy stars, and Chamberlayne Junior College.

THE UMASS JUDO CLUB is now accepting new male members. Beginners' instruction will start Thursday night at the Boyden Gymnasium wrestling room from 7 to 9 p.m. Previous experience is not necessary. The main emphasis in the club is on sport judo, though self-defense is also taught.

meet disagreed with the ruling. However, the official prevailed and the record-breaking performance went to Coast Guard Academy who had trailed considerably in the event. With the unexpected seven points, the Academy's total score went ahead of the mermen, and UMass lost a tough, well-swum meet.

More headaches are in store for the keyed-up Mermen as they oppose the University of Connecticut in home waters this Wednesday at 7:30, and when they journey to the University of Vermont for a dual meet on Saturday.

The IFC bowling was characterized by feasts and famines. TKE, PMD, AEP, KS, PSD, QTV and TEP all scored sweeps over ASP, BKP, PSK, ATG, TC, IGA, and SPE while SAM took 6 of 8 from ZN.

Volleyball officials are needed. Anyone interested should sign up in the intramural office.

TED'S GLOVE, SPIKES NOT TO BE SEEN AT HALL

By MIKE GOULD

Much has been made of the small scale feud which Ted Williams and a group of sports-writers have carried on over the years. The Boston press has led many to believe that this misunderstanding was a primary reason for Ted not getting a unanimous vote into the Hall of Fame.

"How could anyone not vote for the greatest hitter of all time?" cried sports scribes from the Hub.

THEIR POINT is well taken. Williams batted .344 lifetime, hit an almost inconceivable .406 for one complete season, and possessed the classically perfect baseball swing. Williams hit 512 career home runs, playing half of his games in a ball park not suited to the left-handed power hitter. These are phenomenal statistics indeed, but let us look at the other side of the fence.

During his 19 years tenure with the Red Sox, Williams' efforts brought only one pennant to the Hub. One man, of course can not make a team, but it can not be denied that this is a point against Ted.

Williams was a mediocre outfielder at best, possessed a fair throwing arm, and ran the bases with the caution of a UMass Freshman at orientation.

The Kid's fielding deficiencies were not too apparent at Fenway Park, where the pasture he patrolled in left field is not much bigger than a Pebble Beach putting green. When Ted roamed through the spacious confines of Yankee Stadium, Comiskey Park, and Municipal Stadium, Cleveland, however, his defensive inadequacies became clearly evident.

UNLIKE FOOTBALL, baseball is a two way game. A player must do his part in stopping the opposition from scoring as well as producing an offensive thrust for his own side. Ted Williams was probably the greatest one way player in the history of baseball. Is this enough for entrance to the Hall of Fame? Well, Babe Ruth was no Willie Mays in the field either.

COMMONS WORKERS GET 15¢ RAISE

by JIM FOUDE
News Editor

John F. Martin, director of the University Food Services announced yesterday that student employees of the Dining Commons will receive $1.15 per hour, retroactive Feb. 1, 1966. The new wage represents an increase of about 27% in the last 18 months.

MR. GERALD GRADY, business manager for the University explained that the increase was made possible by income from over 6,000 students who have purchased meal tickets.

However, while Grady said that he was "pleased" to make the wage increase at this time, students who have been pressing for the change feel that this is the beginning rather than an end.

Miss Victoria Cancotti, who has been heading up a student move to increase the wages to $1.25 commented that the present wage is only a "token" increase. "We still haven't got what we want."

Miss Cancotti explained that "We (student employees) want to be recognized as having the right to enter into negotiations with University administrators."

"We want it understood that we have a right to be heard," she continued.

THE ISSUE began last October when dining commons workers attempted a strike for a $30 meal—the price paid by full time employees.

Following the abortive strike, Miss Cancotti met with Grady to discuss student grievances. At this time Grady explained that giving employees a $30 meal would change their status from student help to that of a regular University employee. This would have entailed students working a set number of hours, withholding of tax monies as well as a tightening up on some of the leniency shown for exams and studies.

Upon Grady's suggestion the students went for a wage increase and on Dec. 10, with Student Senate backing, a petition containing 145 signatures was presented to Mr. Martin, director of the food services.

THE FACT THAT the wage increase is still unacceptable was also pointed out by Student Senator Betty Chambers.

Chairman of the Senate Services Committee, Miss Chambers said that her committee and the Senate will continue their support of student employees and will keep "haunting" for the $1.25.

Miss Chambers also expressed a strong interest in attaining $1.25 wage for S.U. employees.

Grady stated that there is presently over $43,000 to spend on approximately 200 commons employees. The food services budget is now being studied by the Services Committee.

GRADY SUGGESTED that fur-

"COME ON OVER"

To The UM Side

by KAREN ROSE
Senate Reporter

A resolution to recommend to the Board of Trustees that Stockbridge men be integrated into the various residence halls of the University in the fall semester was passed unanimously at Wednesday's Senate meeting.

Senator Burt Freedman (Baker) and Senator Joe Roseberry (Stockbridge) pointed out that such a move will provide all com-cerned with a more well rounded

THE PUBLIC RELATIONS committee was instructed to conduct a search for new, improved lyrics to the UM fight song during the meeting and Academic Affairs Committee was directed to establish a complaint board to receive the complaints of individual students with respect to unfairness or academic incompetence concerning members of the faculty.

These complaints are to be relayed to the Provost's office. Announcements as to where the complaint forms will be available will be forthcoming.

A bill calling for the Senate to purchase recognition pins for senators, class officers and judiciary members was defeated after much discussion.

SENATOR JERRY BENEZRA (Fraternalities) summed up the issue by saying that if a student government member is recognized only because of the pin he is wearing then perhaps he isn't doing his job and thus doesn't deserve his position or a pin.

Shortly after midnight it was brought to the attention of the Senate that the Faculty Senate is considering some probable changes in the University calendar for next year.

Some of the changes include eliminating the so-called lame duck week between Christmas vacation and finals. Also to have 2 reading days prior to each set of finals. Thus finals will be over and students will be out for summer vacation by May 27.

The Senate here launched into a long debate concerning the merits of the week of class after the Christmas vacation. Thus the original intent of the motion became lost (i.e. to report a standing on this to the Faculty Senate).

It was finally decided to table any action on this issue for one week.

DR. WELLMAN of the Faculty Senate was present at Wednesday's meeting to answer questions concerning the interim report of the Fine Arts Joint Study committee which was read at the meeting.

During the questioning Wellman stated the revival of the old Fine Arts Council, by the Student Senate is greatly appreciated by members of the Faculty Senate.

Under announcements last night President Dacey read letters from three resigning senators: Dave Murphy (Hills South), Pat Cerami (Knowlton) and Martha Allen (Brooks).

Soph Exec Council Plans Charity

by BRIAN SULLIVAN
Class Reporter

The Sophomore Class last night decided to present a talent show at the Chelsea Naval Hospital in the spirit of the John F. Kennedy benefit concert by the Beach Boys.

Last night at the Sophomore Executive Council meeting Bob Keough, class president, presented the Chelsea and other charity-service proposals.

At the Naval Hospital, where many Viet casualties are cared for, talented UMass students would donate time to entertain the wounded.

Also planned is the sponsorship of a trip to UMass for 40 underprivileged children of Boston's South End. The class will pay for the transportation and meals, hoping to expose the kids to the advantages and opportunities of higher education.

"I'd Rather Fight Than Switch"

by CLIF SNICKERS

Students and administrators faced off last night to discuss the proposed juggling of men's and women's dormitories in reaction to University growth.

William Field, dean of students, said in his initial remarks that, "After five years of overcrowding, during which from three hundred to eight hundred triples made living quarters cramped for many students, the University is in a position to house all students adequately."

This unique situation offers opportunity for many innovations which were impossible before, he explained. And with this opportunity, "Comes the problem of what choices would be best," he commented.

"IN DRAWING up a proposal we consulted plans offered some time ago by Stockbridge students and by the Student Senate," he said.

Senate Pres. Dick Dacey, presiding over the meeting, called representatives from each affected dorm in the proposed changes to make a statement.

Betsy Singer of Johnson House cited the petition drawn up by Johnson students in opposition to the proposed changing of Johnson to a men's dorm. Only two girls in the entire dorm did not sign the petition, she said.

Among listed reasons for the opposition were:

- Johnson was constructed and furnished with women in mind.
- the dorm is well situated for women students; Home Economics and Education majors, and for women's P.E. classes.
- a move would break up the strong and very evident dorm unity that now prevails.

Miss Singer also noted that two-thirds of Johnson do not want the Quad integrated with more men's dorms.

John Mullin, representing Hills North, commented that "In all these proposals (of the administration)...the students themselves have been left out." Mullin asked Dean Field, "Why is Hills being taken?"

IN ANSWER, Dean Field explained that the proposals are only proposals, and intended to precede a dialogue with the parties concerned with the changes. He added that no definite policy had been arrived at and wouldn't be until the student body had been consulted.

Cheryl Johns of Brooks House opposed making Brooks into a senior women's dorm.

Hatch To Grow: SUG Performs Miracle

by PETER HENDRICKSON
Editor-in-Chief

The SU bowling alleys were sacrificed last night so that the other ground floor facilities might expand and swap locations.

The Student Union Governing Board voted last night to implement a plan to:

- give pool players more pockets and elbow room by moving into the alley room
- enlarge the bookstore by snaking into the rear of the current pool room and back of the lodge
- blossom the lodge by shifting it slightly to the east, recently, of course

- give the ping pong players plenty of playing room by migrating to the south
- chase the scalp shop into the depths of the billiard room
- give students more head room by slightly enlarging the squaw's and brave's laboratories.

- expand the Hatch into the current ping pong room and out onto the patio.

Mary Hudzikewicz, program director of the SU, said that the plans are dependent upon the budget and student appropriations. She said that improvement of the food service is under study. Plans call for specialized food stations to eliminate the long lines.

In other business, board members elected Richard Schinoff '67, chairman; Beverly Coleman '68, vice-chairman; and Neal Whitman '69, secretary.

The board will petition on the Student Senate to allow one non-voting member to sit in senate meetings with a voice. The budget was also passed without a preview by board members. According to Mrs. Hudzikewicz, the budget was given directly to University Board of Trustees for approval without the board's knowledge.

Tabled were: —a review of vending policy and building regulations

—a reconsideration of Hatch food costs

—a request by Granby High School to use the Ballroom for their Senior Prom. The board will first make sure that the date does not conflict with the Amherst Regional High School Prom.

U.S. Involvement Discussed At The First "Great Decisions Debate"

by FRAN LIRO
Staff Reporter

"As a historian, I am interested in the kind of response and the depth of this response manifested by the American people at any time, such as great emergencies; and as a constitutional historian one has to put these responses against what appears to be some lamentable lapses in terms of adherence to law." This was the opening statement of Dr. Milton Cantor of the history dept. at the initial meeting of "Great Decisions - '66" held Tuesday night in the Webster Lounge.

Dr. Luther Allen, of the government dept. was the other panel member of the open session entitled "Struggle for Vietnam."

"We are committed to the people," Dr. Allen said, "our involvement entails our political ideas. It shows the world what we are like. By our impatience in believing that we can bring about a quick and easy solution (to the problem) we show that temperamentally we are incapable of acting responsibly in the Asian milieu."

Dr. Cantor stated that the involvement of the United States in Vietnam violates its SEATO Treaty agreements, the agreements of the Geneva conference, the United Nations charter, the Hague Convention and the Versailles Treaty. He also noted that the 'hot pursuit concept', that is following the enemy into other territory, is unprecedented in land operation.

Stating that the National Liberation Front has sent a negotiation proposal through U Thant and that the United States has said that it has received no meaningful negotiation proposals, Dr. Cantor said that he would question the word meaningful and the truth of this government. It is a definition of national interest "to seek and to tell the truth," he said. We have the right to question any other approach.

"Surely it is time for students," Dr. Cantor said, "to make it clear to government and to readers that there is in fact a difference between soldiers and civilians. Surely it is time to state that high policy is not the only value worth serving, that the news is still sacred, too, that freedom to write and to teach and to think unmolested is at least equal to the sanctity of high policy."

Cantor quoted Arthur Miller in saying: "For God's sake let us at least cling with one finger if we cannot grasp it in our hands, to the most secure position mankind has ever proved in its bloody time on this earth, that the vision of any single human being need not be any more mistaken than even a politician's."

Dr. Allen stated that his comments would be based on a highly personal position, having spent several years in Vietnam. He believes that there have been many errors committed in Vietnam. One is thinking that divided Vietnam is analogous to a divided Korea or Germany. "The fact is that there is no Ho Chi Min in North Korea or East Germany," he said.

Another error, he stated, was to the Diem Regime from 1955-1963 with a dominance in the role of the military and the CIA is responsible for many mistakes and the complexity of our dilemma.

"When the refugees came South they expected the U. S. supported regime would resemble ideals for which the U. S. stands. They had a right to expect something less crushing, less oppressing," he pointed out.

Dr. Allen believes that our stand in Vietnam should be a willingness to support the present government in Vietnam, a government which he said is not a Roman Catholic and Military clique, but a government that has the "dedication and ability to unite groups in South Vietnam into a political construct." Such a stand, he feels would reaffirm faith in Vietnamese national tradition.

Dr. Cantor countered that, by supporting a government because its chief of state is sympathetic to the people concerned, "fails to consider the dynamics of military policy and trusts in military power."

In the question and answer period that followed, Dr. Allen stated that he opposed negotiations that would result in a coalition government with North Vietnam representation. Such negotiation "will be sapping the morale of anti-communists." He stated, "We find it impossible to think of a 20 year struggle. They do, the North Vietnamese and the anti-Communists."

On the point of a settlement to the crisis, Dr. Cantor said, "I think that the Vietnamese people would rather be Red than dead."

Dr. Allen replied that it is a tragedy that the Vietnamese need neither to be Red or dead. "The tragedy," Dr. Cantor said, "is that there is no choice. Even if there is a coalition government the communists eventually take over."

After the discussion, the panelists met informally with the audience over coffee and many, many cigarettes.

The Price?

Two Solons Ousted

Two Western Massachusetts state representatives, who stood fast for locating the University of Massachusetts Medical School in Amherst against pressure from the speaker of the House, yesterday received their reward.

Speaker John Davoren (D-Milford) removed Reps. John G. Clark (D-Easthampton) and Walter T. Kostanski (R-Turners Falls) from the powerful and influential Ways and Means Committee and the Rules Committee, respectively.

Clark was replaced by Rep. James J. Craven (D-Boston), while Kostanski was replaced by David M. Bartley (D-Holyoke). Another Western Massachusetts legislator, Stephen T. Chmura (D-Holyoke) was replaced on the Rules Committee by Gerald P. Morrissey (D-Boston). Chmura also was an outspoken advocate of Amherst as the location for the medical school.

The medical school, of course, was voted for Worcester, a short distance from Milford, the home town of Davoren.

Kostanski, meanwhile, said he was unwilling to compromise the wishes of his Second Franklin District and the interests of Western Massachusetts in the medical school issue and the sales tax question.

"I felt my 10 years' service in the legislature would provide some value to the rules committee," Kostanski said.

Clark, Kostanski and Chmura were also recorded in favor of Gov. Volpe's sales tax proposal. But this is not generally considered to be a key cause for Davoren to replace the three legislators. In the house, Davoren led a movement against Sen. Maurice Donohue's income tax proposal, which in effect, kept the sales tax question on top of the desk.

The only comment made by Clark was, "My integrity is worth more to me than anything the speaker can possibly do for or to me."

COMMENTARY

Students Defended; College Draft Refuted

There have been too many bombastic statements from Selective Service officials to the effect: "We either are going to make them good soldiers or good students," when referring to men in college. The students don't understand, nor do a great many others, why they should be singled out for special examination. They not only don't think it is fair, but they also see no need of reclassifying thousands of students when they finish their present semesters if they are not getting high enough marks to satisfy the draft people.

YOU CAN USE figures to prove almost anything, and in this case they seem to bear out contentions that there is no real need to call up any students who are in legitimate colleges doing work that the people there consider satisfactory.

There are 650,000 men in the early-call 1-A category today. Almost two million reach draft age every year. Present draft calls run only 30,000 or so a month—far under the 80,000 a month we called during the Korean mess. Yet it seems that we continually are "scraping the bottom of the barrel." Invariably, when that happens, everybody looks at the colleges where 1,834,240 are classified, temporarily at least, in 2-S.

So they are proposing to draft some of these—at least those who are not getting high enough marks. One result, and it is a good one is that students are studying harder. "Hell," said a neighbor the other day, "we used to all go out on the town when the boy brought home a report with nothing lower than a 'C' on it. Now he's getting A's and B's in all his courses."

EVEN THEN, HE'S skating on thin ice if he is attending a liberal arts college and taking courses in music, history, civics, economics. They lean over backwards to find excuses to defer a man majoring in chemistry, engineering or physics, but love to grab those in liberal arts.

If a student went before his draft board and told them he was studying so he later could show people how to govern or conduct themselves, he would

Fellowships Offered With Gov't. Agencies

Students interested in a career in the government service who will receive their bachelor's degree in June are offered an opportunity to apply for fellowships to study at three different universities. Each fellowship has a total value of $3,200. The stipend is $2,500 and the remainder of the grant consists of fees and tuition at the three cooperating universities.

Beginning this June, fellows will serve a three-months' internship with a government agency in Alabama, Kentucky, or Tennessee. During the 1966-67 academic year, they will take graduate courses in public administration at the universities of Alabama, Kentucky, and Tennessee.

Completion of the twelve-months' training period entitles fellows to a certificate in public administration. They can be awarded a master's degree at the universities attended upon completing a thesis and passing appropriate examinations.

For information and applications, students should write to Coleman B. Ransone, Jr., educational director, Southern Regional Training Program in Public Administration, Drawer I, University, Alabama. The deadline for submitting applications is March 1, 1966.

There are more than 2,000,000 young men classified 1-Y, who are available in wartime, but do not meet present day standards. It would be a good idea to go after 10 or 15 thousand of these a month for the next year or two and leave the students alone.

N. S. D. S. President To Speak Monday

CARL OGLESBY

Carl Oglesby, the president of National Students for a Democratic Society, is coming to the four-college area on Monday, Feb. 14.

College Draft Refuted . . .

get scant consideration on that argument.

UNDER THE NEW PLAN of checking on students, colleges will be asked to file reports to local draft boards showing whether a student is full time, and giving his class rank. To qualify for deferment a student would have to stand at the top 50 p.c. of his class at the end of his freshman year, top two-thirds at the end of his sophomore year and top three-fourths at the end of his junior year.

THEN THERE ARE to be aptitude tests, largely mathematical,

He will speak at 8:00 in Johnson Chapel at Amherst College on "World Revolution and American Containment," a subject he touched upon in a speech given to over 20,000 people gathered in Washington for a demonstration last November.

SDS is made of 128 chapters on college campuses and in cities throughout the country, including chapters at Smith, Amherst, Mt. Holyoke, and the University of Massachusetts.

At 3:00 on Monday Oglesby will attend a four-college SDS meeting in the Babbott Room, Octagon Building at Amherst.

According to the group's charter, SDS is "an education and social action organization dedicated to increasing democracy in a phase of our common life."

cal, given by an independent agency, on which a student will be expected to score 70 or better to qualify for deferment as an undergraduate, and 80 or more as a graduate student.

The trouble with the whole business is that the draft system needs to be revised. For one thing, the military doesn't want to accept a man unless he is fit for active combat, although only one man in five in uniform is a combat soldier. That's the reason scores of young professional athletes aren't drafted. The Army throws out almost half the men at the examination centers, most of whom would do fine in non-combat service.

Commons Workers Get Raise . . .

ther wage adjustments will be achieved with federal funds provided by the recently passed Office of Economic Opportunities Act. The Act makes provisions for including dining commons employees under work-study programs which pay the federal minimum wage.

One problem which students feared was that a wage increase would result in the University withholding monies for federal taxes. Robert Morrissey, director of placement and financial aid, dispelled this fear.

Morrissey said that the policy will remain the same: if a student makes over $200 the internal

ROTC Cadets Survive Maneuvers on Mt. Toby

Fifteen volunteer Special Forces Cadets, led by Cadet 1st Sgt. Ted Monette, and advised by Captain Richard Parker and M-Sgt. Kenneth Cudworth, recently spent four days and three nights on the frost-bitten heights of Mt. Toby in a cold weather endurance survival maneuver.

The object of the exercise was to build shelters and find food in the snow covered woods, adequate for the prolonged maintenance of life under adverse conditions.

The cadets split into four groups, each responsible for the organization and maintenance of its small community, and each entirely independent of the other three. One group, later dubbed the "cavemen", under the leadership of Cadet Cpl. Fred Anderson, converted a niche in a rock cliff into a well-heated shelter for four.

The long days, which began at dawn, were used for the necessary routine of setting small game traps, ice fishing, improvement of shelters, and the constant gathering of fire wood. Early on the morning of the second day, the Professor of Military Science, Colonel Joseph A. Bohnak, a well conditioned military man, and his Cadet counterpart, Cadet Colonel Courtney Turner, made a short excursion up the mountain. They were given a quick but thorough tour of the four sites by Captain Parker and M-Sgt. Cudworth, who were living in the hills with the cadets.

Night was best used for military patrolling and infiltration exercises. These exercises were highlighted by reconnaissance patrols to the highest peak of the mountain, which afforded a beautiful, seldom-seen perspective of the University Campus. Night was also used for some sleep, a commodity which, due to night time cold, and intense dampness, was scarcer than the food.

However, against most expectations, the survival maneuver ended successfully with all fifteen cadets and both advisors returning to campus healthy and happy.

"I'd Rather Fight Than Switch . . .

Miss Helene Curtis, Dean of Women, explained that for specific purposes dormitories were chosen with regard to their student capacities and that Brooks House was determined to be of an adequate size and in a suitable position for such an experiment.

The experiment, she said, was conceived at last Fall's SWAP conference. She said she felt it would make possible some revised rules for senior women and that it could prove to be an effort toward students assuming more self-government.

Dean Curtis said that a sub-committee of Women's Affairs is now considering a survey to measure the response of junior women to the idea and to gauge how many women would be involved.

Dean Geoffrey of the Stockbridge School of Agriculture, commenting on the new desire of Stockbridge students to integrate with other University students in dorms, based the change in attitude on the rise in quality and higher aptitude of Stockbridge students.

He said that no final policy has been set. A committee has been formed to study the entire situation and to determine in what manner the integration will be carried out.

Burt Freedman told the Collegian that the opinion of Stockbridge students was solicited in two polls. One was conducted in the Student Union Lobby last semester. Both Stockbridge and University students were questioned then.

In a second poll conducted by Joe Roseberry in a Stockbridge dormitory the majority of students affirmed the earlier results — Stockbridge students wanted integration.

Speaking of the overall situation, Jack Wells, director of housing, said it has been recognized that the overwhelming majority of students do not want to move, and that Stockbridge wants integration.

Working upon these basics, Wells explained, a policy will be formulated that will best serve the wishes of the student body and the needs of the University. "We can see," he said, "that the proposal as it stands must be largely redesigned to fill needs of which we were not aware."

The final policy regarding all the proposed changes will be effected by a committee comprising the Director of Housing, Dean of Men's office, Dean of Women's office, Dean of Stockbridge, and the Dean of the Graduate School, with representatives of Men's and Women's Affairs.

Last night's forum was sparked by Jacquie Hall, Senate Student Affairs Committee chairman, who sent invitations to the administration and contacted interested students.

OBSTACLES TO THE DISPLACEMENT OF RELIGION BY SCIENCE

BY DR. ROBERT S. FELDMAN, PSYCHOLOGY DEPARTMENT

In part two which appeared in Wednesday's issue, it was pointed out that primitive beliefs were characterized by animism, myth and magic, and later by teleology—the anthropocentric belief that there is some ultimate purpose to natural phenomena. After pointing out the inadequacy of these knowledge systems Prof. Feldman suggested that science is a superior knowledge system, and in this issue describes some of its fundamental characteristics.

There are two fundamental characteristics of science. The less subtle of the two is the one of determinism which has been hinted at previously. It is easy to recognize the role of determinism in electrical currents, stresses that can be applied to beams, and electron spin, but there are two objections to applying determinism to human action. First, determinism is confused with fate. Determinism is not fate, it simply is a statement of the general proposition, "If A, then B." Deterministic philosophy merely tries to formulate laws of 'what' leads to 'what'. Any scientific determinist knows after a little reflection that the varieties of experience are so great, and the number of variables that are uncontrolled so large, that predicting everyone's fate is out of the question. But, when significant variables are known, predictions of high accuracy can be made. Thus, we can predict that a given individual is a likely candidate for suicide and should be constantly watched, or foreign aid will reduce political tensions, and so on.

THE SECOND objection is that determinism applied to human behavior makes us feel insignificant and conflicts with freedom.

The feeling of insignificance is illusory since man, if he can be considered significant at all, got that way because of his ability to accumulate and transmit knowledge of high quality. There is no reason to believe that knowledge about ourselves will suddenly reverse this trend. With respect to freedom, there is a great concern with the conflict between determinism and freedom because "freedom" is our current fetish. For the moment it is only necessary to say that the opposite of determinism is not freedom, but indeterminism, chaos and disorder. We continue to eschew indeterminism ever since Galileo in many branches of formal knowledge, but cling to it when considering human problems. We do this because our culture cultivates in us a feeling of independence since our society is predicted on the assumption that we are all accountable for our actions. Herein lie many of the contradictions between the science of human behavior and our jurisprudence and penal code.

The argument that our civilization would deteriorate if men were not accountable for their actions ignores the fact that everything has its consequence and men learn by experience. A person who took the view that, since his every action was determined, he could then relax and let nature take its course, would be left to starve. This teaches him that he must act in certain ways in order to expect certain consequences, that in this society it is determined that shirkers don't eat.

A NEW approach to hedging on the role of determinism is to mention Heisenberg's principle of uncertainty. This principle was to give new hope to those physical scientists who could not reconcile their determinism from 9:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. with indeterminism thereafter. Heisenberg supposedly came to the rescue and provided an out. He showed that it was absolutely impossible to obtain an exact measure simultaneously of both the position and the velocity of an atomic particle. It was supposed to follow that if there are some things that can't be known, then there must be others; hence, this leaves room for human freedom, free will, or divine guidance. George Gamow, however, saved us from ourselves.

He pointed out that Heisenberg's formula for uncertainty is equal to Planck's constant  $h$  divided by the mass of the particle. The constant in c. g. s. units equal  $10^{-27}$ . When we consider a particle weighing as much as a milligram, the position can be simultaneously determined within a trillionth of a centimeter per second or 30 microns per century. (Gamow, G., The principle of uncertainty, Sci Amer, Jan. 1958, 51-57). Thus, he says that we can safely ignore the principle of uncertainty and trust the principle of determinism when dealing with matters on the macroscopic scale.

THE OTHER subtle aspect of science is the application of the principle of operationalism. Operational analysis consists of examining ideas and terms to see if they have a "cash value," i.e., a factual reference, and factual reference refers to data of direct observation. Simply, this means that terms or ideas have to be demonstrated or they are meaningless. For example, the word 'creation' is meaningless since it cannot be demonstrated the law of conservation of energy is in direct opposition. I must emphasize that scientific rigor insists that this word is meaningless even when referring to the ideas of 'creation' of works of art. If works of art are created, why don't the Eskimos compose sonatas, or the Hottentots write psalms or passions? It is really silly to think that these things are created. Rather, they develop from previous forms and are the reflection of the training and experiences of the artists concerned. It does no disservice to the arts to recognize this since knowing the factors that lead to composition may serve to increase the amount and quality of all art. I doubt that any musicologist uses the term "creation" in its literal sense.

Returning for a moment to the word, "freedom," we find here a word that fails the operational test on all counts, yet we cling to it as a symbol for our ignorance of 'what' causes 'what'. For example, if I suddenly get the notion to get a drink, I have the feeling that I chose to do so and could have chosen not to; ergo, I am free. But a little knowledge of certain cell groupings in the diencephalon and how they react to salt concentrations in the blood operationally settles the question of why a person drinks, and whether he was free to drink or not.

THE FEELING of freedom, then is due to ignorance. Where knowledge accumulates, freedom is left in the lurch. It is strange with all the talk of freedom that we have more confidence about finding causes than not. We do not think that cancer cells have freedom to strike here and there; we look for carcinogens. Likewise, we are beginning to appreciate that people are not free to choose between responsibility and delinquency; we attempt urban redevelopment. Fortunately, we find a glimmer of recognition among those who hold our fate in their hands that political unrest, agitation and aggression are the consequence of population pressures and economic frustration, instead of the (free) malfeasance of men with different myths.

And finally we notice the disturbance among the hierarchy of Catholicism as the realities of the population explosion collide with medieval doctrines of natural law. Given the false premise that the "purpose" of coitus is procreation, it was supposed to follow that abstinence, complete or partial, was the only legitimate course toward birth control. But, it is becoming apparent that people are free to engage in intercourse or not and exhortations about the exercise of willpower are futile. Thus, the church fathers are now engaging in logical gymnastics to reconcile current necessity with what is said to be revealed truth.

THESE QUESTIONS aren't new and have been discussed many times. Time does not permit, and space cannot be provided here for a more complete exposition of this point of view. My purpose has merely been to stimulate thought. I have tried to explain the reluctance of men to adopt the principles of science for the solution of human problems. This explanation consisted of tracing history of human thought from man's early beginnings to show that for most of man's existence, animism, myth and magic were the dominant themes in his system of knowledge. These themes have been gradually displaced in the physical sciences and in technology, but we cling to them in dealing with more intimate questions. I have suggested that we do this because of childlike misperceptions of our universe which have become institutionalized and strongly perpetuated. Is there hope for the future? Sometimes I feel optimistic and sometimes not. In terms of all human history it is only 0.34% of the time since the formation of the alphabet, 0.33% since Galileo and burning witches, .009% since Darwin, and .029% since the Scopes trial. From this perspective we are doing very well, but I am a little apprehensive since other civilizations collapsed and other species became extinct. We do not know enough about cultural evolution to say whether or not science can and will save the day.

God and "The Caped Crusader"

By DAVID A. PURDY

I was amused by your editorials under the caption "Religion — 1966 Model" in Wednesday's Collegian. The call for a "pray and run" religion for today's fast-paced college student reminds me of a book of prayers just published called Are You Running With Me Jesus? To the plea that we need a spiritual entity, "A Being who can comfort in times of personal grief, inspire in times of intellectual depression, and support in times of ethical conflict," I have an answer: there is such a Being — on Wednesday and Thursday, Channel 40 at 7:30 you can watch BATMAN and BOY WONDER solve the problems of the poor weak citizens of Gotham City.

On the one hand, I suppose I should not be surprised at the desire for a "cosmic Batman" because we human beings always want Someone Else to answer the questions beyond our immediate grasp, Someone Else to make our decisions for us, Someone Else to blame for our problems.

But on the other hand, it mystifies me that in our time, with the secular, technological, and urban patterns before which we live our total life (except in those moments of trouble when we resort to "supernaturalism") any honest person can talk about a Being "out there" who does for us the things Batman does for Gotham city. Not only does the world-view of the 20th century obliterate the picture of God as the Caped Crusader who protects us from the foes who would destroy the tranquility of life, but it must be noted that the Judeo-Christian tradition (when true to itself) obliterates this view too. The announcement of the Old and New Testament is that the God you want is dead and that the Messiah you want is also dead! Look at the God depicted: he is the one who brings nations into being and takes them out of being (the relativity of life), he is the one who uses Assyria to destroy Israel (maybe Red China knows something about the forces of history that we have refused to recognize), he is the one who is described as bringing us naked out of the womb and who returns us naked to the tomb (human beings only have one life and one death; What will they do with these?). And the Messiah, look at Boy Wonder as he ends up being hanged until dead (in those days they did it by crucifixion instead of electrocution) on the public garbage dump. No one will rescue us human beings from living precisely in the midst of life.

Happily, however, we have a slightly paunchy Batman and his enigmatic companion Boy Wonder who utters such mystic phrases as "Holy Doughnuts", to give us security in the knowledge that somewhere good folk are protected from the devils of the underworld.

Legislature to Consider 39 Amendment Proposals

Lowering the minimum voting age in Massachusetts to 18... placing a time limit on the length of legislative sessions... and authorizing the General Court to levy a graduated tax on incomes are among 39 proposed amendments to the State Constitution that may be considered this year by the Legislature, sitting in Constitutional Convention.

Four amendments, approved last year by the second successive Legislature, will appear on the ballot at the state elections this fall, for approval or rejection by the voters. These would provide for the joint election of a Governor and Lieutenant Governor as a team, home rule for cities and towns, procedure to reorganize state agencies by the Governor, and industrial development of cities and towns.

One other proposed amendment, to give the Governor 10 days instead of five in which to act on legislative matters referred to him, was initially approved by the present Legislature during the 1965 session, by the overwhelming margin of 210 to 26. This amendment must be approved by the 1967-68 Legislature before it can be submitted to the voters.

All other matters that appeared on the agenda for the 1965 Constitutional Convention, including one concerning the payment of bonds issued by the Commonwealth which had been ordered to a third reading, were placed on file when the year-long 1965 session expired.

When the present session officially resumes on Monday, the joint committee on Constitutional Law, headed by Senator Andrea F. Nuciforo (D-Pittsfield), will have to schedule the 39 proposed amendments to the Constitution for public hearings. It is from these items that the leadership of the Senate and House will formulate an agenda for a Constitutional Convention in 1966, if it is their desire that such a joint meeting be held.

Senate President Maurice A. Donahue of Holyoke and House Speaker John F. X. Davoren of Milford have announced that the question of taxes will be one of the first matters considered when the session resumes. But several of the proposed amendments filed for action by the committee on Constitutional Law also deal with taxation.

Five of the 39 proposed amendments are similar, and would grant to the Legislature the power and authority to impose and levy a graduated tax on incomes. Another of the legislative proposals would permit the General Court to impose an income tax based on a percentage of the federal income tax.

The question of whether the state should reimburse cities and towns for losses of revenue due to tax exemptions granted by acts of the Legislature has been a controversial issue for several years, particularly since the 1963 General Court enacted the law granting elderly property owners—age 70 or over—a tax abatement of up to $4,000.

But Rep. John W. Sears (R-Boston) has sponsored a proposed legislative amendment to the Constitution that would make it unlawful for the Legislature to create abatements or exemptions from municipal real property taxes unless it provides full compensation, to make up revenue losses to the cities and towns.

Another proposal has been sponsored by Rep. Dave N. Vigneault (D-Springfield), who is seeking an amendment to establish a maximum limit to the rate of tax applicable to real and personal property.

The 1965 session of the Legislature made history, because never before had a General Court been forced to terminate a session by the clock, on the eve of the next legislative year. During the next few weeks, the committee on Constitutional Law will hear testimony on proposals that would limit annual sessions of the General Court to a period of six months, or not longer than eight months. And Rep. Harrison Chadwick (R-Winchester) has filed a proposal that would authorize the Legislature to take a recess if a session went beyond a certain date.

Rep. Harold E. Rosen (R-Dedham) has filed a legislative amendment that would limit the length of sessions, not to a period of months, but by providing the Legislature could only consider certain business during the even-numbered year of the two-year term for which it was elected. The Rosen amendment would have legislature business in even-numbered years limited to consideration of the budget, messages of the Governor, matters relating to the administration of counties and municipalities, and those admitted of an emergency nature.

The voting age in Massachusetts would be lowered from 21 years to 18 by a trio of legislative proposals to amend the State Constitution, filed by Senator Mario Umane and Rep. Royal L. Bolling, both Boston Democrats, and for Francis E. Kelly, former lieutenant governor and attorney general. Still on the subject of elections, Senator Charles V. Hogan (D-Lynn) is sponsor of a proposal that would permit absentee voting in primaries or preliminary elections, instead of just at the main elections as now provided by the Constitution.

At the 1964 elections, the Executive Council—commonly

University Women Plan Smorgasbord And Dance

A smorgasbord of enjoyment is being planned by The University Women in their forthcoming Faculty - Alumni Smorgasbord and Dance to be held at the Hatfield Barn on Friday, Feb. 25. A Dutch treat social hour at 7:00 will be followed by a smorgasbord dinner at 7:30 and dancing from 8-12.

Music for dancing will be provided by the Novel-Aires. Dress is informal (sports clothes). The affair is open to alumni, faculty and administration and their guests.

Reservations, which must be received by Feb. 21, may be made by contacting Mrs. Ward Theilman, 40 Valley View Drive, Amherst. Tickets are $5 per couple.

known as the Governor's Council—was stripped of all statutory powers, and thereby lost its authorization to confirm or reject more than 1,000 gubernatorial appointments in the Executive Department. However, two of the 39 proposed legislative amendments to the State Constitution—one of which is sponsored by former Governor Endicott Peabody—call for complete abolition of the council, with certain gubernatorial appointments to be subject to confirmation by the Senate.

The size of the Legislature would be drastically reduced by an amendment sponsored by Rep. David H. Locke (R-Wellesley), who proposes a 50 per cent reduction in membership of both the House and Senate—the House from 240 to 120, and the Senate from 40 to 20. At the same time, proposals will be aired to divide the state into single representative Districts.

Concern Continues Over U. S. Policy

The fact that students are still very much involved in the controversy—both pro and con—over the war in Vietnam was demonstrated last week when Vice President Humphrey accepted 477,000 pledges of support for U. S. policy in Vietnam.

On the same day, (Jan. 6) some 600 miles south of Washington in Atlanta, the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee charged that the U. S. is following "a murderous policy of aggression in Vietnam."

In accepting the pledges of support on behalf of President Johnson, the Vice President noted that they represented students in 322 colleges and universities. The pledges were presented by representatives of the National Student Committee for the Defense of Vietnam.

Another group, the International Youth Crusade for Freedom in Vietnam sponsored rallies in nine cities during the weekend to show support for the U. S. policy. The group is an affiliate of the Young Americans for Freedom.

The SNCC statement was the first it has issued on the Vietnam war.

The statement cited the death of a civil rights worker in Tuskegee, Ala., last week in saying, "The murder of Samuel Younge is no different than the murder of peasants in Vietnam, for both Younge and the Vietnamese sought, and are seeking, to secure the rights guaranteed them by law. In each case, the U. S. Government bears in part of the responsibility for these deaths."

"Samuel Younge was murdered because U. S. law is not being enforced, Vietnamese are murdered because the U. S. is pursuing an aggressive policy in violation of international law."

The statement was drafted by the SNCC executive committee of 23 persons. SNCC chairman John Lewis said it had been approved without dissent by 130 SNCC staff members during a three-day meeting of the group. (CPS)

Opportunities in Business, Accounting and Finance with SYLVANIA

Sylvania's Financial Training Program, conducted by its Corporate Controller's Department, offers selected '66 graduates with BS or advanced degrees in Business Administration, Finance and Accounting, exceptional career opportunities in accounting, cost control, financial analysis and planning, auditing and related financial activities.

Sylvania is the largest and most diversified subsidiary of General Telephone & Electronics Corporation, whose 1964 sales were $1.8 billion, and whose 1965 sales and earnings will continue to set new records. Sylvania's capabilities extend into electronics, television, radio, stereo, hi-fi, lighting, photography, chemistry, physics, plastics, metallurgy and related fields. The Company is organized into 9 product divisions, with 40 manufacturing plants and laboratories, employing more than 31,000 persons.

Initial orientation includes a seminar covering specifics of accounting and auditing as well as a review of Sylvania and GT&E organizations, financial policies, operating principles and product lines. Also during orientation, trainees are given basic concepts of electronic data processing and application of EDP to Sylvania's requirements. Trainees also spend 4-6 months in Internal Auditing, where, in the course of performing audit functions they become more familiar with the Company's accounting techniques and control procedures and are exposed to many facets of corporate, division and plant operation.

After orientation, candidates rotate through a number of on-the-job financial assignments in various Company locations, preparing them for ever-increasing financial responsibilities. On completion of the training period, graduates of the program are available for permanent assignments anywhere throughout Sylvania's far-flung operations.

Additional opportunities for '66 graduates exist in the Data Processing field. The Data Processing Center is the heart of a corporate-wide information system with advanced computer equipment and 20,000 miles of private wire communications linking all Company locations. Positions are available in computer programming, computer systems design, and systems and procedures covering a wide range of large-scale financial and operational projects.

Make a date to see the Sylvania representative on campus.

F. A. C. Joint Study Committee to Host Open Meetings

In October 1965 the Faculty and Student Senates separately voted to establish a joint committee to "investigate areas in which it is desirable to have increased Faculty-Student communication, and increased student participation in policy formation, and to recommend ways of achieving these goals."

Before making its final recommendations in March, the Joint Committee wishes to solicit from interested members of the university community their advice and views on the proposals which the Committee is considering.

Accordingly the Committee has voted to hold open meetings on February 15 at 2:15 p.m. and February 17 at 2:15 p.m. The meeting of February 15 will be concerned with the Committee's tentative proposals on the questions concerning student representation on Faculty Senate committees, and that of February 17 will be concerned with the proposed Fine Arts Council Constitution. Both meetings will be held in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union.

The joint ad hoc Study Committee, a joint committee of the Faculty and Student Senates, has been asked to consider questions concerning student-faculty communication and student participation in policy formation. The Committee has voted to hold open meetings so that it may receive advice and views on its tentative proposals from interested members of the University community.

A. OPEN MEETING OF THE JOINT STUDY COMMITTEE, Tuesday, February 15, 2:15-3:45 p.m., Colonial Lounge, Student Union.

At this meeting the Committee hopes to receive written and oral expressions of opinion on the following proposals: 1. Should student memberships be unchanged on the Health Council (5), University Computer (0), Committee on Committees (0) Research Council (0), Faculty Affairs (0), Tenure and Grievance (0), Review (0), Rules (0), University Press (0)?

Should two voting students be added to the Library Committee?, one voting student be added to the Scholarships etc. Committee (not to sit on the award of scholarships)?, one non-voting student be added to Academic Matters, Admission and Records, Summer Session?, one voting student be added to University Affairs (to sit on matters connected with the teacher-of-the-year award-?), one voting student (President of the Student Senate or his representative) be added to the Master Planning Committee?; should the student representation on the Athletic Council be changed from the President of the Student Senate to the President of the Student Senate or his representative?

2. Should the appointment procedure and terms of office of all student members of Faculty Senate committees and sub-committees be as determined by the Student Senate? Should all students have the right to attend meetings of all Faculty Senate committees having voting student members and have the right to petition for attendance at others (except when committees are in executive session)?

3. Should the Faculty Senate be asked to adopt a policy of having student members on all committees or sub-committees which the Senate may later establish (where this is appropriate)?

4. Should the Faculty Senate be asked to adopt a resolution supporting appointment of student members on all appropriate building committees, ad hoc committees of the Senate, etc.?

5. Should the Faculty Senate be asked to consult with the Student Senate before making changes in the charges and membership of committees with student members?

6. Should student representatives be admitted to meetings of the Faculty Senate?

B. NOTICE OF OPEN MEETING OF THE JOINT STUDY COMMITTEE, Thursday, February 17, 2:15-3:45 p.m., Colonial Lounge, Student Union.

At this meeting the Committee hopes to receive written and oral expressions of opinion on its tentative proposals concerning a fine arts council.

The Joint Committee tentatively proposes a council of five faculty and five student members, the faculty members being selected as the Faculty Senate directs and the student members being selected as the Student Senate directs.

The Council would be empowered to recommend to the Trustees a University fine arts fee (not to exceed $4 per term) to be collected from all full-time undergraduates, and would have, with only minor differences, the duties and functions recommended by the recent Student Senate policy statement and by the Hicks Committee of the Faculty Senate.

The Council would have an independent constitution which could be amended only if the Faculty and Student Senates concur.

C. The Joint Committee is now working on its proposals for the Student Affairs Committee of the Faculty Senate and its sub-committees. As soon as these are prepared, the Committee will arrange an open meeting for discussion of them.

Careers in Adventure at General Electric

TO: General Electric Company
570 Lexington Ave., Rm. 801-C
New York, N. Y. 10022

Gentlemen:

Show me what it's like to be one of the new generation of idea men at General Electric. Where I might work. What I'd do. What kind of people I'd work with.

Send me my free copy of the 20-page booklet "Careers in Adventure," filled with full-color photographs that show G.E.'s young men—and women—at work in today's most challenging fields: electronics, urban lighting and transit design, aerospace and computers, jet propulsion and nuclear power and all the rest.

Got a pencil?

Frankly, General Electric is after the cream of the 1966 crop of graduates.

Not just the top engineers. And not just the top scientists. But the outstanding graduates in other fields: economics, business, law, accounting and the liberal arts as well.

See for yourself what you could be doing next year. Fill out the coupon for a copy of our booklet "Careers in Adventure."

And talk to the man from G.E. during his next campus visit. Come to General Electric, where the young men are important men.

Here He Is Again—Clarabell!

Ed. note: More about Clarabell—continued from Wednesday's Collegian.

WHEN HE WASN'T UP A tree, on a horse or in a meat counter, Jazz was on the stage.

He and several of his friends had a well-known comedy routine that made many appearances in University campus shows as well as neighboring colleges and night spots.

An occasional trip to the Old succeed in more serious ventures. He became a local tycoon.

Mr. Jasinski established and operated Esquire Cleaners and Launderers. One store was located in a small building just below Kappa Sig. The other store still exists near the Amherst Cinema.

He provided the first quick service dry cleaning and laundry business in Amherst, which developed into a team of forty student agents in both colleges.

Later he expanded to include

When he finally graduated in '52, students hung a large banner over the entrance to UMass. "Jazz made it!"

Upon graduation, Mr. Jasinski ventured into the field of television in New York. He first worked in the promotional department of one of NBC's shows where he learned about the auditioning NBC was doing for the part of Clarabell.

Among the scores of applicants considered for the part were Harpo Marx and Emmett Kelly. Thru his affiliation with NBC, Mr. Jasinski was given an opportunity to audition for the part. He landed the job.

Many factors contributed to why he was chosen, but probably most important was the combination of his youth, education, size, and his fresh new clowning style.

WHEN ASKED IF his years of "clowning around" in Amherst were beneficial, Mr. Jasinski, with his hearty laugh, answered, "Possibly."

He then spent several years working with the show. Some of his comments regarding the work were that it was definitely a young man's job; that the pace of a seven day week schedule, extensive traveling and long hours, required great energy; that he loved every minute of it; that the job and New York were exciting.

How did he feel about doing this kind of work? What was foremost in his mind at all times was the fact that he had spent so many years struggling through college English, language and speech courses and that now Clarabell never spoke a word! Only honked a horn! And what would all his patient professors be thinking!

Needless to say, this is Clarabell. At the bottom of the picture, note Clarabell's autograph and the record of years he spent here.

He has many stories about his Clarabell career. One of his first personal appearances was in Springfield in a United Fund parade thru the sponsorship of Milton Bradley, manufacturers of Howdy Doody games.

THE COMPANY provided an old Ford sedan convertible especially engineered to rear its front end up in the air like a horse. Clarabell didn't know this.

He sat on the top of the back seat and waved to all the children as the car wove up the parade path. When the car reared, Clarabell was thrown out into the street.

Unknown to him, his costume ripped up the back. As he marched thru the remainder of the parade he was amazed at the wild laughter of the crowds, all the while thinking what a great hit he was!

His experience with NBC and the Howdy Doody show gave him an invaluable background for the advertising agency business he now heads as president in the Springfield area, Jasins Advertising Associates.

Connecticut Valley residents will have an opportunity to enjoy classical dancing of India on Sunday, February 20, at 8:00 p.m. in the Amherst Regional High School auditorium. Miss Maya Kulkarni, a noted performer of the several forms of Indian classical dance will give a two hour program.

This program is sponsored by the Indian Association of Amherst. Tickets can be obtained at the door, at the auditorium on the day of the performance from 9:00 a.m. on, or by telephone AL 3-3294 or AL 3-7976. The price of the tickets is $5.00, $2.00, and $1.00.

Miss Kulkarni has performed before many distinguished audiences in India since 1958. She is the winner of the Interstate Competition in Drama and Dancing and has been officially recognized as a state dancer. She is one of the finest performers of Bharata Natyam, the oldest of Indian Classical dances.

During a previous visit to the United States in 1963, she gave several performances in No. Carolina, New York and Connecticut.

FRENCH FILM CLASSIC TO BE SHOWN SUNDAY NIGHT

Probably the best-loved and most famous of all the great French film classics, Children of Paradise will be shown in the Student Union, Sunday evening at 7:00 o'clock.

Children of Paradise is directed by Marcel Carne and written by Jacques Prevert.

The film is both a "triumph of romanticism and a sweeping portrait of early nineteenth century Paris." Centering on the lives of the members of the traditional French vaudeville theatre, Carne's masterpiece develops into a vast panorama of seemingly all the peoples—their lives, their joys and their sorrows—of the Paris of that legendary era.

This is the first time that the complete version of Children of Paradise has been made available in this country. The film with French dialog and English subtitles is sponsored by the Student Union Movie Committee.

CAESURA DEADLINE

The deadline for the winter issue of the Caesura is today, Feb. 11. The second issue of the literary publication will be coming out soon with a completely new collection of poetry, prose, and art work.

Board members urge all creative students to leave their work on the Caesura desk in the Franklin Room, S.U. Don't despair if you are unable to meet today's deadline.

Material will be accepted immediately for consideration for the spring issue. Remember, the quality of Caesura can be only as high as the quality of the work submitted.

Frosh Exec. Votes to Aid Crew Team

Wednesday night's meeting of the Freshman Executive Council was called to order by President Gary LeBeau at 7:00 p.m. In his opening remarks, LeBeau brought up several points of interest to the class.

The first was the question of the class contributing to the crew-team. LeBeau read a report from Ralph Stoddard concerning the prospect of co-sponsoring a benefit concert for the crew team. This event tentatively planned for Greek Week would feature Sammy Davis Jr. appearing in Alumni Stadium.

LeBeau revealed that the three other classes and I. F. C. and R. S. O. were all interested in sponsoring such an event. In the discussion, questions were put to Brian Sullivan of the Soph council who gave details of the plans for the concert. A vote was taken and it was unanimously adopted to give financial backing to the concert.

The next item of business was the toboggan run to be built by the Frosh for Winter Carnival.

President LeBeau read a list of the members of the council and each was assigned to a work group on a section of the run. Volunteers were recruited to pick up equipment and outline the course. Secretary Margie Frey had sent letters to every dorm, fraternity, and sorority inviting them to participate in the races and LeBeau stated that the Scrolls had been asked to time the events.

A debate concerning the actual building of the run followed. Citing the class sponsorship of the event, several members of the council urged that the entire class be invited to participate in construction. LeBeau joined by Bill King, chairman of the event, dismissed this as impractical. Vice-Pres. Doug Green suggested that the officers personally ask the frosh who were not accepted to the council, to come down and help build the run. LeBeau then strongly urged all members of the council to help on the toboggan run. Thursday evening and Friday afternoon were set aside as the work times.

One final bill was presented by Senator-at-large, Larry Marcus. It called for the class to send flowers to the family of a deceased member of the class of '69. Before adjourning, LeBeau called a meeting of the council for next Wednesday night.

ELECTIONS

Vacancies now exist in the Student Senate from Hills South, Knowlton and Brooks House. Nomination papers are now available to residents of these constituencies who wish to become candidates. These papers may be obtained in the RSO Office of the Student Union and must be returned, with the required 25 signatures by Thursday, Feb. 16.

Engineers and Scientists:

Let's talk about a career at Boeing...
50-year leader in aerospace technology

Campus Interviews, Thursday and Friday, February 24 and 25

The most effective way to evaluate a company in terms of its potential for dynamic career growth is to examine its past record, its current status, and its prospects and planning for the future, together with the professional climate it offers for the development of your individual capabilities.

Boeing, which in 1966 completes 50 years of unmatched aircraft innovation and production, offers you career opportunities as diverse as its extensive and varied backlog. Whether your interests lie in the field of commercial jet airliners of the future or in space-flight technology, you can find at Boeing an opening which combines professional challenge and long-range stability.

The men of Boeing are today pioneering evolutionary advances in both civilian and military aircraft, as well as in space programs of such historic importance as America's first moon landing. Missiles, space vehicles, gas turbine engines, transport helicopters, marine vehicles and basic research are other areas of Boeing activity.

There's a spot where your talents can mature and grow at Boeing, in research, design, test, manufacturing or administration. The company's position as world leader in jet transportation provides a measure of the calibre of people with whom you would work. In addition, Boeing people work in small groups, where initiative and ability get maximum exposure. Boeing encourages participation in the company-paid Graduate Study Program at leading colleges and universities near company installations.

We're looking forward to meeting engineering, mathematics and science seniors and graduate students during our visit to your campus. Make an appointment now at your placement office. Boeing is an equal opportunity employer.

To any kid who'd like to go somewhere: We'll pay half your fare.

The idea's not as crazy as it may seem. Anytime we take a jet up, there are almost always leftover seats.

So it occurred to us that we might be able to fill a few of them, if we gave the young people a break on the fare, and a chance to see the country.

The American Youth Plan*

We call the idea the American Youth Plan, and what it means is this:

American will pay half the jet coach fare for anybody 12 through 21.

It's that simple.

All you have to do is prove your age (a birth certificate or any other legal document will do) and buy a $3 identification card.

We date and stamp the card, and this entitles you to a half-fare ticket at any American Airlines counter.

The only catch is that you might have to wait before you get aboard; the fare is on a standby basis.

"Standby" simply means that the passengers with reservations and the servicemen get on before you do.

Then the plane's yours.

The American Youth Plan is good year round except for a few days before and after the Easter, Thanksgiving and Christmas rushes.

If you can't think of any places you'd like to go offhand, you might see a travel agent for a few suggestions.

We can't add anything else.

Other than it's a marvelous opportunity to just take off.

Complete this coupon—include your $3. (Do not send proof of age—it is not needed until you have your ID validated.)

In addition to your ID card, we'll also send you a free copy of AA's Go Go American with $50 worth of discount coupons.

Grads Meet More Grads

In an effort to solve the "I only know people in my department" problem, the Graduate Student Senate is sponsoring a series of Friday Night Coffee Hours. The bimonthly socials, the first scheduled for Feb. 11, are part of the Senate's plan to make the graduate population aware of their common problems and interests.

Before this fall, the new 2,000 graduate students were unrepresented on campus. There was no organization that made their views on housing, degree requirements, social activities or finances known to the administration.

The Graduate Student Senate, created formally in November, 1964, to be this spokesman, has already investigated the language exams, conducted a housing survey, gotten a discount in paperbacks and sponsored a dance.

If the support of both married and single graduate students for the coffee hours is as large as the Senate has expected, more graduate activities will be planned.

The Feb. 11 gathering is scheduled from 8-10 p.m. in the Governor's Lounge of the Student Union.

Loans and Scholarship Sources on the Increase

College costs now range from $1200 to $1500 per year for those who live on campus at a publicly supported school and from $1800 to $2600 for private schools, according to Miss Barbara Higgins, University of Massachusetts Extension family economics specialist.

Predictions are that these costs will continue to go up, she noted.

In the typical moderate income family of today, it will take the combined effort of the student and the parents to meet costs.

What can the student do? Reports show that many students earn a substantial share of their school expenses. Jobs during vacations and part-time work during the school year bring in many dollars.

More and larger scholarships are available to only the few students who can meet the qualifications. The amounts of many scholarships are small and the demand for them is great.

But they are worth exploring, especially during the junior and senior year in high school. The most common ones are available through colleges and universities, business corporations and foundations and state and federal government. After being admitted to a school or college and proving oneself, additional help will be easier to get. Financial need, high grades and promise of outstanding ability will continue to be the basis upon which most scholarships will be awarded.

High school principals, guidance officers and the financial aid officers at the college should be able to give information and guidance about the types available and how to apply for them.

Loans for educational purposes are available from several sources. Some are made by schools and colleges on liberal terms and low interest rates, supervised by the school or college and not as restrictive as most scholarships.

Bank loans are a newer development. They are available through commercial banks at a lower interest rate and for a longer repayment period than for ordinary personal loans—after the student completes the first year at an approved institution.

Federal loans have been available since 1958. They are for those of superior ability who need financial aid and they are handled through the college where the student is registered. Interest starts after leaving college.

Hills Hosts Housing Discussion

by KEVIN DOWNES

At a recent house meeting called for the residents of Hills North and South, Dean Field, Mr. Burke of the Dean of Men's Office and Mr. Wells of the Housing Office, presented an explanation of the University's Proposed Housing Plan for next year.

Following the briefing, the floor was thrown open to comments by the residents of the house. Speaker after speaker arose to express his opposition to the proposed change, causing Mr. Burke to comment, "Obviously we're meeting an overwhelming unit of opinion which we had not anticipated."

The desirability of integrating men's and women's residence areas was questioned and it was generally agreed by the administrative representatives that this was now considered a minor point.

In reference to a clause in the University's Housing Proposal stating that it was the Administration's wish that a student be allowed to spend the remainder of his college career in a dorm that suited him best, DEAN FIELD REMARKED, "IF NOBODY WANTS TO BE MOVED THEN NO ONE'S GOING TO BE MOVED."

When asked if his comments could be taken to mean that Hills would remain a men's residence area as far as he was concerned, Dean Field answered, "That's as affirmative as it can be."

In reference to similar sentiment against the proposed housing change expressed at a meeting in Baker House, one of the administrators mused, "If feeling remains as it has been at Baker and now at Hills, there is likely to be a great stability on this campus."

Frosh Five Out To Break Cornwall Streak

by MIKE GOULD

EARLY DINNER TONIGHT, basketball fans, the freshman hoop contest promises to be a beauty.

The opponent for the powerful Little Redmen this evening is Cornwall Academy, a club which has ripped off 14 straight victories.

CORNWALL IS LED BY former Classical High (Springfield) stars Butch Moreland and Bob Rutherford. This pair scored 26 and 19 points respectively as Cornwall ran its record to 16-1 with a victory over a strong Assumption Prep team.

THE UMASS FROSH will be led by high scoring John Shockro and Mike Gemel. Pete Gayeska, much improved pivot man, playmaker o/e DiSarcina, and a hopefully resurgent Ron Nowakowski round out the starting team for the Redmen.

6:00 STARTING TIME.

Gymnasts Triumph Over Coast Guard

by AL RICE

THE UNIVERSITY gymnastics team downed the Coast Guard Academy Tuesday night 120.55 to 94.50 in a six event junior varsity meet at the Boyden Gym. The UMass team used an all sophomore and freshman lineup except for Dave Lizotte and Al Carver, but it was good enough to take every event but the rings.

UMass copped the first three places in the floor exercises as Lizotte edged Al Speyer 7.20 to 7.15 while freshman Dick Dauphinais took third. Sophomore side horse ace, Bob Leclair, won his specialty with an 8:15 as the scores dropped to 4.8 for Fred Babakian's second place and below four for all the other competitors.

THE TEAM RETURNS TO Eastern League action a week from tomorrow with an important meet at the Naval Academy. Navy offers the best opportunity for another UMass league win which would boost their record to 2-3 before they meet tough Syracuse and Springfield teams in their last two meets. UMass girl gymnasts host high school teams from Andover, Braintree, Longmeadow, and King Phillip Regional tomorrow in a 1 p.m. meet at the Boyden Auxiliary Gym.

INTRAMURAL REPORT

by DAVE JARNES

THE NAME OF THE GAME is defense and anyone who saw the Webster Rams upset the previously unbeaten Baker Barracudas 36-34 certainly would agree. Before this do or die battle for the Rams the Barracudas were considered the best offensive aggregation in the East League. However, the Rams used their tight man to man defense to hold Baker scoreless for the first 7 minutes as Webster took a 7-0 lead. The Rams then found the Barracuda's 2-3 zone difficult to penetrate and Baker was able to rally and tie the score 16-16 at the half. In the second half the Rams were able to spring loose their leading scorer Bert Cady to take a 6 point lead with 6 minutes left. Bob Freed then effectively killed the clock with his superlative ball-handling. Bob Perlmen should also be singled out for this defensive performance against Lenny Mees, holding the Barracuda's star to a mere 2 points while scoring 12 himself.

THE BAKER BUFFALOES remained in contention for the East League title by overwhelming the Grants 59-38 behind Chuck Webster's 24 points. The Rams finished their regular season schedule at 7-1 while the Buffaloes and Barracudas stand at 6-1. The winner of the Buffalo-Barracuda game will play the Rams for the championship. The Rams also beat the Buffaloes 35-27 earlier this season.

ZN RECEIVED A SCARE from Q1V but managed to squeak out a 44-39 victory. Skip Hall's 21 markers weren't quite enough for the losers while the boardwork of Dick Benjamin and Brian Lajoie was the deciding factor.

Bob Ferranti and Jeff Larson combined for 35 points as LCA toppled PSD 53-35 while Bob Foisy was the whole show for PSD with 20 points. In a battle for second place AEPi overwhelmed 1KE 38-17.

THE MODDY BLUES set a record in murdering the Leftovers 110-31. Divenconz with 35 points and Stevens with 30 led the merciless scoring parade. In other independent games the Snubs clobbered the Fribs 53-16 and the Phantoms beat the Mudgets 39-26.

Turning to bowling, the Greenough Grants took 6 of 8 from the Barracudas behind Dick Clarity's 531. In other matches the Bengals, Redwoods, Zeros, and Banshees swept the Birch, Cherrys, Plywoods, and Cellar Savers while the Garfields and Hermits took 6 of 8 from the Hemlocks and Chem Club.

In the recently held handball tournament, Al Caruso defended his championship by beating Mike Duggan in successive games.

Remember, volleyball team entries must be in by this Monday, February 14. All-star ballots have been given out to the teams. The game will be played at the Cage February 24.

Frosh Sextet Undeclared

by DAVE HANSON

THE STREAKING FROSH Hockey squad recorded their second win of the season this week, downing the Deerfield pucksters Monday, and came from four goals down to earn a tie with the Williams sextet on Wednesday.

In the Deerfield game, Jeff Sanborn netted two goals with Eddy Sheehan, Joe Dicleco, Charlie Hanafin, and Don Robinson adding one score apiece. First-liner Al Johnson set up three of the scores and was credited with three assists in the action as the Frosh rolled over Deerfield 6-2.

THE FROSH outshot a strong Williams squad by about 4 to 1 at Williamstown, but had to settle for the tie. Wing Al Johnson put the visitors in the lead early in the first stanza, but William's quickly retaliated and at the buzzer led 5-1.

The defense came alive in the second session, and the offense began to click as the UMies chipped away at the lead on goals by Sanborn, Hanifan, and Johnson. Bill Conway made it all even early in the third period with his first goal of the season and Jeff Sanborn netted his second of the afternoon to put the Little Redmen one up midway through the period.

WILLIAMS CAME BACK with only 1:28 remaining to force an overtime as they tied the score at six all. The 69'ers from U. of M. came out hungry for the win in the O.T. but missed numerous scoring opportunities, settling for a 6-6 stalemate.

Redmen, URI In Showdown Tonite; Maine At Cage Saturday

Sports Information Release

—Stop Rhode Island's high-powered, free-wheeling offense!! That's the cry around the Curry Hicks Cage this week as the University of Massachusetts prepares for tonight's crucial Yankee Conference battle against the league-leading Rams.

Rhode Island, 5-0 in Conference play and 12-5 overall, meets the Redmen, 3-2 and 8-9, at 8 p.m. The UMass frosh play Cornwall Academy in a 6 p.m. prelim.

COACH Ernie Calvery's Rams have rolled over New Hampshire, 104-67, Vermont, 97-63, Maine, 109-68, Connecticut, 82-68, and UMass, 94-67, in the race for YC title. Led by 6'3 senior scoring ace Steve Chubin, Rhody has averaged 93 points per game to rank 8th in the nation. Chubin gets plenty of help from strong 6'4 soph center Art Stephenson, 13.6, Henry Carey, 13.8, Mike Fitzgerald, 10.7, Jim Cymbala, 10.6, and soph guard Larry Johnson, 9.9. Stephenson and Carey rank among the nation's shooting leaders with percentages of .605 and .555 respectively.

ly. Chubin has poured in 120 of 148 free throws for a .810 percentage.

When Rhode Island topped UMass in December the Rams bombed the nets with 35 field goals in 74 attempts and out-rebounded the Redmen, 61-46. Chubin scored 26 points and had 10 rebounds. Fitzgerald enjoyed a hot shooting night with 9 of 14 for 18 points, while Johnson came off the bench to score 16 and Cymbala had 14. The only Redmen to do anything offensively was Jim Babyak who hit 10 of 18 and ended with 24 points. The Rams led 42-28 at halftime and extended the margin in the second half. This was all accomplished while Stephenson sat out most of the game with an injury.

THUS Coach Johnny Orr and his Redmen know what lies ahead. The Redmen will have to be at their offensive best and at the same time come up with some stout defense. Over the years UMass had done well against the Rams at Amherst. UMass has won 8 of the last 9 games at the Cage since 1957.

Rhody's only win came in 1961 when they annexed the Conference championship. The overall series, however, shows Rhode Island on top 25-18.

In spite of the 101-80 loss at power-laden Boston College Tuesday Coach Orr had some kind words for his young team. "We went after the ball and played hard like we did earlier in the season," Orr stated. "Jim Babyak, Billy Tindall and Frank Stewart all played very well. That four-minute scoring lapse in the first half and a bad start in the second half really killed us. But our kids kept scrapping all the way. B.C. has a strong all-around team and John Austin and Willie Wolters played great for them."

UMASS' high-scoring Clarence Hill is closing in on several season and career records. The 6'1 senior has 1,244 career points and needs 14 to break Doug Grutchfield's record of 1,257. Hill also has scored 516 career field goals and needs five more to break Grutchfield's mark of 520.

Wrestlers Fall To MIT

by MIKE GOULD
THE REDMEN VARSITY
WRESTLERS dropped a 28-14 decision to a solid MIT team in Boyden Gymnasium Thursday.

Despite the defeat, star grapplers Jesse Brogan, George Darling, Dave Kelley and freshman flash Gene Paltrineri remained undefeated in dual meet competition.

GEORGE CAISE, competing in the 191 pound class, recorded a quick pin at two minutes of the first period of his match.

UMass will be seeking its third win of the season when it travels to Boston College Saturday.

Sextet Drops Fourth Overtime Decision

by DAVE HANSON

THE REDMEN SEXTET failed to click in the clutch Wednesday evening dropping their fourth overtime decision of the season, this time to the hustling Huskies of UConn. This was the third loss to UConn in as many starts and marked the second time the Storrs pucksters had come from behind in the closing moments to force a sudden death showdown. The Umies made the scoreboard at 13:40 of the first period when Fred "Moves" Molander took a pass from defenseman Rick Feldhoff and slipped it across the crease to center Pete Celi who slammed it by UConn goaltender Joe Toomey. The Redmen took a total of 30 shots in the first two periods but missed numerous scoring opportunities and, after a scoreless second stanza, entered the third frame with the Stone gave the Redmen the lead again when he intercepted a Huskie pass and fired a hard rising slap shot into the upper right corner of the nets at 3:02. The action was hard and fast through the middle of the third stanza but the Redmen defense was firing when Tom Richardson took a pass from Dwight Steeves for the tying tally with only 3:51 to go. With the Huskies on the move, Umie Capt. Ed Quimby drew a check penalty at the 19:34 mark, and only the buzzer prevented the Huskies scoring on the power play.

THE REDMEN COULDN'T put together a play in the overtime and Netminder Bob Eddy turned back 8 shots against only one save for Joe Toomey before Dick Ralston deflected score 1-0.

The Huskies made it all even when Capt. Russ Hintz converted on a rebound off the pads of UMass goaltender Bob Eddy with the assist going to Dan Russ Hintz' pass into the goal for the winning score. UConn with this 3-2 decision has only outscored the Redmen by a total of 4 goals in three decisions. The sextet next travels to Bowdoin for a Saturday afternoon encounter and then plays "away" with Amherst next Wednesday.

Winter Carnival Queen candidates mix summer fun with winter setting. The '66 Carni Queen in this frolicking five will be crowned at the Winter Ball. Following pages give a rundown on the weeks events sponsored by Class of '67.

Snowflakes, Queens and Concerts

The UMass campus is springing out from under the remaining inches of snow these days, but most students are pulling for more—for the annual Winter Carnival running from today through Sunday, Feb. 20.

The snow-seekers are the members of the class of '67, sponsors of the first-of-its-kind week long carnival.

The class of 1967 has planned a fashion show, horror movie, Distinguished Visitors Program, a halftime show at the U.N.H. basketball game, A Winter Carnival Ball, a day-long ski trip to Thunder Mt., snow sculpture contest following a pancake breakfast, a toboggan run for winter olympic spectators, a concert featuring the Four Seasons followed by the Stockbridge Snowflake a Go Go, and winding up with the Sunday concert highlighted by Glen Yarbrough and the Modern Folk Quartet.

The theme this year is "Broadway Premiere", providing a motif of bright lights and theatre excitement for the sculpture entries and other events.

Ski Trip Goes Thunder Mt.

The Junior class has planned, as part of its Winter Carnival Weekend, a skiing trip to Thunder Mountain Ski Area in Charlemont, Mass., February 19.

This ski area, one of the best in Mass., offers 2 chair lifts, 2 T-bars and exciting runs which are easy enough for the beginner and challenging enough for the expert! Snow conditions are excellent and appear as though they will remain so.

Free transportation will be provided, and the cost of all-day lift tickets will be $5.00. Lessons and ski equipment will be offered for those who desire them at a 10% discount.

Those planning to attend must sign up in the Program Office by February 16.

The busses will leave the Student Union at 9:00 on Saturday morning and return to the University at 4:30 p.m. The same day allowing ample time to prepare for the evening's festivities.

This trip offers a wonderful opportunity for the non-skier to share in a totally new sporting thrill and provides the seasoned skier with a chance to test his skill at one of the state's best resorts.

WINTER CARNIVAL '66

Qualified opinions on campus have given the nod to the superiority of the Sunday Concert featuring Glen Yarbrough and the Modern Folk Quartet.

Just about everybody has heard Glen Yarbrough's tenor at one time or another, but few are actually aware of the "total" Glen Yarbrough...

Possessing a lyric tenor voice of startling clarity and warmth, Glenn Yarbrough has set out to fill a long-vacant niche in the entertainment field. In the present entertainment world Glenn is an original—a singer who is more concerned with a beautiful melody and the lyric content of a song than with the latest beat. And yet Glenn's treatment of a song can be as hip and bright as tomorrow morning—a fact that is obvious to anyone who has heard Glenn's RCA Victor albums "Time To Move On" and "One More Round".

Glenn traces the beginning of his singing career back to the days when he was a soloist at Grace Church in New York at the tender age of eight. Since that time he has pursued a fascinatingly diverse and checkered career. He was a student at St. John's College in Annapolis (the "Great Books" college of legendary intellectual toughness) and later studied classical Greek and pre-Socratic philosophy at Mexico City College. In 1955 he studied classical Greek by day and supported himself in a typically bizarre fashion—as night bouncer in a New York City hotel. This job is one for which Glenn is most amply equipped, for he has often been described as "singing like an angel and looking like a wrestler".

Then, after joining the Lime-lighters and making them a top vocal group, Glenn Yarbrough left the group to strike out on his own. He thought at the time that he might not make it. He made it.

Class President Mullin...

As Winter Carni kicks off the beginning of its week-long fete with tonite's Fashion Show and Horror movie, Class of '67 president John Mullin, a government major from Maynard, Mass., thinks this is going to be one of the University's outstanding new entertainment ventures.

"We've got something unique going here," he exclaimed. "Since we started working on Winter Carni more than a year ago, we've been trying to orient the new week long festival toward more cultural, social, and academic areas," he noted.

Mullin and the Class of '67 have set precedents for future years by donating two perpetual trophies for the Powder Puff Hockey Game and the all new men's Rope Pull.

The president explained, "the Rope Pull will be similar to the Spring Day Contests of past years except that there will be lots more slipping and sliding."

Mullin lauded the Class Officers and the Carnival Committees for their work on the seven day gala event, particularly vice-president James Wilkie for "a very good job."

Commenting on future plans for the Class, Mullin noted "most classes roll over and play dead after Winter Carnival. This is one tradition the Class of '67 is not going to follow."

Next year's senior class is planning now for the year ahead with a revamping of the student government organizations and for creating new and active roles for the senior class.

Among one of the outstanding features of the Class of '67's drive toward improvement will be a spring concert at the UMass stadium with Sammy Davis Jr.

Mullin smiled, "we have a revolutionary new Senior Week in the offing. We're considering footing part of the tab for the food, and stuff."

D.V.P. To Present Robert Lewis

Robert Lewis, noted actor, director, author and lecturer, will be guest speaker at the D.V.P. program Wed. Feb. 16 at 8 p.m. in Bartlett Auditorium.

LEWIS WAS graduated from C.C.N.Y. and attended the Julliard School of Music. He has had a wide range of experience in both acting and directing and has taught theatre courses at a number of colleges including: Sarah Lawrence College, Yale University, and Vassar College.

Just a few of the productions he has participated in are: Civic Repertory Theater (actor), London Company production of Golden Boy (actor and road company director), Brigadoon (director), the opera Regina (director), the London production of Teahouse of the August Moon (director), the Lena Horne musical of Jamaica (director), On a Clear Day You Can See Forever (director) and many others.

BESIDES LEWIS' stage achievements he has worked in a number of film productions including: Tonight We Raid Calais (actor), Night Is Ending (actor), The Hidden Eye and others.

His writings include: Method— or Madness and the introduction to Stanislavsky's Creating A Role.

Lewis has run his own theater workshop and has appeared on a number of television shows.

The D.V.P. lecture will be followed by a coffee hour in the faculty lounge in Bartlett.

'Elbow Room' Needed For Fiscal Autonomy

Unless the State Department of Education is given the "elbow room" it needs to carry out acts of the Legislature, the Willis-Harrington report to re-organize the educational system can't be implemented, declared Dr. Owen B. Kiernan, state commissioner of education.

Commissioner Kiernan made the statement during testimony before the joint committee on Education, as he supported a bill to grant fiscal autonomy to the State Department of Education. The measure was sponsored by the former nine-member Board of Education, which was replaced by a new board provided for in the Willis-Harrington Act approved during the 1965 session.

Dr. Kiernan pointed out fiscal autonomy had been granted by the General Court to the University of Massachusetts and other state institutions, and that school committees have enjoyed fiscal independence for a number of years. The department is "a single island of fiscal dependence," he said. He referred to the bill as "fiscal responsibility not fiscal irresponsibility."

Hershey Strikes Gold

Draft To Reconsider 1-Y's

By ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON—The director of Selective Service wants the armed forces to induct more men who have been rejected and put into the 1-Y classification for moral and physical reasons.

Lt. Gen Lewis B. Hershey says he believes "there is gold" in the form of military manpower among the some 2 million men now classified 1-Y—qualified for military service only in time of national emergency.

Hershey said also he believes Pres. Johnson's estimate of 160,000 inductions for the year beginning July 1 is "based on hope." But he didn't say how many he thinks will be inducted.

The military agreed recently to ease up on its mental standards so that generally now a high school graduate is accepted for induction if he meets the other requirements. Local draft boards and armed forces examining stations are reviewing the records of high school graduates previously ruled to be 1-Y who might now be acceptable.

Speaking on a WTOP television-radio program taped for broadcast today, Hershey said:

"I'm certainly going to exert every pressure I can to not only look at the intellectually rejected but the morally and physically rejected."

Asked if the military is rejecting on moral grounds youths who deliberately establish court records by parking violations or other minor offenses, Hershey said he couldn't cite a specific case, "but I do hear far more than I like about people running up criminal records of escape."

"That's one reason I have felt that the armed forces ought to take some of these minor criminals in not to even encourage anybody to think of it," Hershey said.

He said also he feels the armed forces have been rejecting a great many people they are going to have to accept because the public is not going to stand having a lot of people escape military service by minor infractions of the law.

Asked what he thinks will be the attitude of the military toward acceptance of students involved in a sit-in last year at the local draft board in Ann Arbor, Mich., and subsequently convicted of trespass, Hershey said:

"If he violated our law by interrupting the procedures, then the Armed Forces can't turn him down."

"But if he comes up with malicious trespassing in the state of Michigan, they could very well raise the question of violating a law that isn't ours and he therefore was not acceptable."

Hershey said this amounts to "telling our kids to go out and make criminals of themselves and they will not have to serve" and he added:

"Some fine people are doing it."

He said he is "trying to believe" that the students at Ann Arbor were not trying to do that.

UM To Sponsor History Program

A National Defense Education Act Summer Institute in history for high school social science teachers, largest of its kind in the U.S., will be held at the University of Massachusetts June 26-Aug. 12.

Sponsored by the UMass history department, the institute will accommodate approximately 120 high school social science teachers, taught by a staff of 18. The NDEA has authorized a grant of $149,500 to support the project.

A picked staff of college and high school level historians, sociologists and geographers will lecture each morning; six master high school teachers and six visiting lecturers in American art, music, literature, economics, political affairs, and international relations will lead afternoon discussion sessions.

The entire fourth week of the institute will be a series of field trips through New England to enable participants to "walk the ground" of American history from Plymouth Rock to slum clearance projects and SAC air bases.

The session will cover American history from 1607-1966 in 12 major topics beginning with "Puritan Planning and Virginia Feudalism in a Howling Wilderness" and ending with "War as an Instrument of 20th Century National Policy."

The staff will include nationally-known scholars—Daniel Aaron, Smith Co. Prof. of English; Louis Filler, Antioch Col. Prof. of history; Oliver Larkin, Smith professor emeritus of art—and others.

Application deadline is Mar. 21; eligibility is limited to presently-employed, full-time high school teachers in the social sciences who have taught such courses for at least three years and have done some graduate work in a social science discipline. Applicants must be recommended by an outstanding teacher as defined by the NDEA.

"We are seeking the finest high school teachers we can find in the New England area," said Dean Albertson, UM history professor and director. Preference will be given to New England teachers, he explained, but a limited number will be selected from other states.

Participants may earn three UM graduate credits on staff re-communications; stipends and dependency allowances will be paid. Full information may be obtained by writing Dean Albertson, director, NDEA Institute in History, Dept. of History, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, Mass. 01003.

The institute is one of a nationwide series set up under the NDEA Act of 1964 in history and several other subjects to upgrade the skills and enrich the academic backgrounds of selected high school teachers.

This pretty miss and many others will be part of the Winter Carnival Fashion Show to be held in Mahar Auditorium at 7:30 tonight. All the "In" clothes for '66 will be shown.

Smith Selects Pritchett As Writer-in-Residence

Smith College President Thomas C. Mendenhall has announced the appointment of British author and critic V. S. Pritchett as Writer-in-Residence at the College for the 1966-67 academic year. Mr. Pritchett becomes the second writer, succeeding J. F. Powers, under a plan at Smith which is supported by a grant from the Harold E. Thompson Foundation of New York.

Mr. Pritchett for thirty years has been a writer of weekly critical essays for The New Statesman, the paper of which he is now a director. In Britain he is better known, however, as a short story writer, novelist and a traveler. In this country he contributes frequently to The New York Book Review, The New Yorker and Holiday Magazine. He delivered the Christian Gauss Lectures at Princeton University in 1953 and was Beckman Professor at the University of California at Berkeley in 1962. Recently he completed a book on Dublin, which is similar in style to his other two books on cities, London Perceived and New York Proclaimed.

Following a visit to the United States, Mr. Pritchett went to Spain as a foreign correspondent and two years later returned to London to write his first book, Marching Spain, which told of a journey on foot across the peninsula. Next he produced a collection of short stories entitled The Spanish Virgin; then several novels, Nothing Like Leather, Elopement Into Exile, Dead Man Leading and Mr. Beluncle. Several collections of short stories followed.

The Spanish Temper, Mr. Pritchett's second travel book, appeared in the 1950's along with several volumes of criticism of English, French, American, Russian and Spanish writers, collected from The New Statesman and other papers: In My Good Books, The Living Novel, Books in General, and The Working Novelist. A collection of travel essays appeared in this country entitled The Offensive Traveler which described his trips through Eastern Europe, Turkey and Persia.

Camilla Barry, writing in the February 1965 Wilson Library Bulletin, said the Pritchett talent lies "in his ability to characterize people and in the verve and richness of his literary style." He is known to dislike things mechanical, such as typewriters and automobiles and, in fact, he does not drive a car. He and Mrs. Pritchett, who have two children and several grandchildren, make their home in a London Regency house. He says of himself that now he most enjoys talking, traveling and sleeping.

UM Prof. Revisits Native Land; Finds Korea in a 'Sorry' State

University of Massachusetts professor Richard E. Kim finds his native country in a sorry but not hopeless state in "O My Korea," an 8000-word article in the February issue of "The Atlantic."

The author of the best seller, The Martyred, visited Korea for the first time in a decade last summer on a Guggenheim Fellowship. His article, a featured "Atlantic Extra," is based on his observations and on samplings of opinion that range from conversations with students and the poor to an interview with the Korean president.

KIM FOUGHT with the South Korean Army during the Korean War, studied in the U.S. afterwards and now holds master's degrees from Johns Hopkins, Iowa State and Harvard Universities. He teaches English and writing at UMass and is now working on a new book.

Kim sees dangers to Korean stability in the growing numbers of the poor and in the lack of a responsible opposition party.

"The exploding population and the increasing numbers of the poor may eventually pose a far more dangerous threat to the destiny of the country than the Communists in the North," he writes.

HE NOTES: "What Korea needs, for the sake of achieving some kind of political stability and getting something done for the people, is a responsible opposition, which knows when to oppose the government constructively."

Korean politicians seem to be convinced that democracy is a big joke but nice to have around as a respectable front, according to Kim. He notes with alarm the growth of the Korean CIA, which he calls "almost a government within the government," with influence that is "far-reaching and deadly."

The UMass author writes that "The happiest sight in Korea after ten years of absence was to see the children. For the most part they are better clothed and housed and fed than I have ever known them to be."

They are also better educated, he adds, but expresses little optimism about Korean college students. "What I would call a typical Korean college student is a young man who is poor and confused and sees little hope for his future," Kim states.

"The 'bastion of democracy in Asia' is in a sorry state," is Kim's conclusion. "America has pumped billions of dollars into Korea . . . sent armies to defend it and has thousands of her people working in and for the country in all vital areas of the nation's life. Yet a healthy political tradition of democracy has not yet emerged; and the physical and spiritual sufferings of the people have not been lessened."

KIM PLACES the blame for Korea's inability to achieve social and political stability squarely on the professional politicians. "They have not yet discovered that they represent the people, whose welfare and destiny are very important indeed," he writes.

He sees hope for Korea, mainly because of the character of its people. "In Korean life, there is something raw and grimly natural, something that is ultimately gripping," he states.

"Koreans in the South are thoroughly individualistic . . . and their toughness and resilience of independence, though born out of a mutual distrust and self-centered outlook, may someday become the genuine and truly humane foundation of their way of life. There is a hope," he concludes.

San Quentin B. A.

An Educational Opportunity Cellmate or Roommate?

Qualified persons in California penal institutions will soon have the unusual opportunity to attend full-time an accredited college while serving their sentences.

Establishing the prison college will be a project of the University of California at Berkeley, sponsored by a $99,200 Ford Foundation grant.

SAN QUENTIN State Prison in nearby Marin County has been selected as the site for the first higher education facility in the history of American penology.

Classes at San Quentin are expected to begin this fall for selected prisoners, who will be transferred to San Quentin from throughout the California penal system so they may attend the college.

JOSEPH D. LOHMAN, dean of the School of Criminology at the Berkeley campus, will head the project.

Lohman said the prison college "should produce a responsible citizen who understands himself and his relationship and obligations to society."

Christopher F. Edley, a Ford Foundation program associate, saw the prison college as producing two major benefits:

"First, it is a means of preparing prisoners for useful employment and responsible citizenship after their release. Second, it is a wise investment for society since it reduces the chances of prisoners repeating crimes after release, thus reducing the cost to the public of crime and correctional measures."

The grant will be used to delve into the questions of administration, faculty, site location, inmate admissions standards, curriculum and inter-agency cooperation.

THE FORD FOUNDATION also announced a total of $818,000 in grants to combat racial discrimination in the United States and abroad.

The total includes $243,000 to the National Committee Against Discrimination in Housing to expand information and consultant services for local groups; $275,000 to the Institute of Race Relations in Britain for expansion of research facilities and publication; and $300,000 to the Southern Regional Council in Atlanta to strengthen the professional staffs of human relations councils in 11 Southern states.

Air Force Needs Applicants For Officer Training School

Applications are now being accepted for the United States Air Force Officer Training School, it was announced recently by Colonel Jack L. Buckley, commander of the 3501st U.S. Air Force Recruiting Group.

Young men and women may apply for USAF Officer Training School 210-days before graduation from college. Upon successful completion of 90-days of OTS training these college graduates are commissioned second lieutenants on the Aerospace Team, the United States Air Force.

As officers in the U. S. Air Force they receive automatic pay increases, world-wide travel, an opportunity to further their education, annual 30-day paid vacations, and free medical and dental care. These are but a few of the advantages the Air Force of-

Y. I.'s Elect Krinsky; Plan Reorganization

Young Independents, the Students for a Democratic Society chapter at UMass, announces the results of the elections held at their last meeting. The new president is Steven Krinsky, the new vice-president Jane Roland. Secretary, treasurer, and historian are, respectively, Sandra Sobek, Kathy Nolan, and Martha Alper.

The group is currently working on reorganization, with ev-everyone having an equal voice and the burden of work falling on various topic committees.

Monday night, February 14, at Johnson Chapel, four-college SDS is presenting Carl Oglesby, the national president of the organization.

Oglesby, now 30 years old, left a high-salaried job at Bondex to become president of SDS at a sizeably lower pay.

Integration Problem Faces Auburn Soph

Anthony Lee is a 19-year-old sophomore at Auburn University in Alabama. Auburn, like most other state institutions feeling the pressures of growing enrollment, is trying hard to find ways to accommodate and teach its growing student population. But Anthony Lee lives alone in a double room on campus, with a private bath for his exclusive use. The room to the right of his is empty; on the other side is the bath for the dorm floor.

Lee is the only Negro at Auburn. Last year, he and a friend integrated the formerly all-white undergraduate division of the university. His friend dropped out—"I think the academic and social pressures were just too much for him" — and now Lee faces alone the indecisive, still-ambiguous attitudes of his fellow students.

"I expected it to be much worse than it was," the soft-spoken young man said of his first year at Auburn. "There were some catscalls and sneers, but attitudes are changing. I didn't expect any overnight changes. I plan on being here four years; they will see that I'm not going to leave, that other Negroes will be coming, and they are going to have to get used to it. If you take your time, things will smooth over."

Lee's confidence in the ability of his fellow students to adapt to an integrated society is not without some basis in fact. For the first time in their lives many young whites in the South are finding situations in which Negroes occupy the same status as they do—students within a common university. This new experience has stimulated some soul-searching, a groping for a new system of values. Most of the white students who are speaking out in defense of integration are not the flaming radicals and militant demonstrators. They may not even be fully converted yet. But they are painfully aware of the chasm between their parents and themselves, between the whole course of Southern history and its present turn. They are aware, too, of the conscious effort it will take to overcome the well-taught attitudes of the past.

This doesn't mean that in all areas of university life once-segregated activities are now fully integrated, nor that all members of the campus think they should be. At Louisiana State, which has about 50 Negro undergraduates among its 22,000 students, a Negro student was barred from the campus swimming pool last summer because, the story is told, the Alaskan earthquake cracked the bottom of the pool and it had to be closed for repairs. The explanation which was supposedly given for the closing of the pool may be just a myth, but it indicates what many students think is their administration's attempt to avoid controversy and an unequivocal stand.

Why are administrators slow to move in the desegregating on their campuses? The answer is almost unanimous in every state college or university—the state legislature.

Nor are all of the students willing to give up long-held ideas. Jerry Brown, a student at Auburn University, declared that he could not become an integrationist. "It's a question of values; segregation is what I've been taught all my life and I don't want to change."

Scrolls To Be Active In Second Semester

Welcome to the new freshmen! The Scrolls would like to remind you that there are two Scrolls in each woman's dormitory willing to answer any questions and assist in any possible way.

Scrolls are meeting the new girls, arranging a big-little sister program, and planning parties in the dorms for all freshmen. In cooperation with the Maroon Keys, the Scrolls held a dance with the Boss Tweeds Feb. 11. Scrolls also attended a Convocation arranged by the Keys to meet the new students and answer any questions.

At the end of last semester, Scrolls and Keys served at the President's Christmas Party. Also, Scrolls served as hostesses at a Student Government Conference sponsored by the Senate and held a cookie sale to raise money for their scholarship. In individual dorms, Scrolls have held parties and breakfasts. Some dorms worked on Christmas projects for the underprivileged.

This semester Scrolls are planning a program of assistance as Belchertown volunteers and more dorm functions.

New law will hold Ralph

The National Association of Letter Carriers joined several legislators and private citizens in support of a proposal to place a leash law on Massachusetts' books for the "protection of dogs as well as people and property."

There was no opposition to two bills calling for a leash law to restrain dogs from roaming at large, at a public hearing before the Joint Committee on Counties. Under terms of the measures, an uncontrolled dog could result in a fine of $25 or 30 days imprisonment for its owner.

The postmen were represented by John M. Mulhern, who termed such a law "most useful to letter carriers."

Balloon Issue

By JOSEPH ZALKIND, Chairman

Last Thursday's conference concerning Dean Field's proposed housing changes seems to have accomplished a great deal in creating better relationships between students and administration. But, for some reason, maybe because I'm naturally cynical, I can't help but get the feeling that the University Administration was merely conducting an exercise in rhetoric, that regardless of all the guarantees to the contrary, they plan to go ahead with the proposed changes, and that these meetings and hearings serve only to let the air out of the balloon before it explodes.

In other words, the Administration realizes that students have an awareness of their position in the campus community, and that, if students are not allowed to express their opinion, a Berkeley-type situation could result. Therefore, the Administration has established a situation in which it appears that the students are being listened to, but whether or not they actually are, is questionable.

KIM'S QUERY

By ANDY COSTELLO, Editorial Staff

"All my life I have searched for God, Captain," He whispered "but I found only man with all his suffering and death, inexorable death!"

"And after death?"

"Nothing!" he whispered. "Nothing!"

When a minister makes such a statement one begins to doubt. Richard Kim, our own bestseller novelist, caused doubt on campus as well as throughout the world when he wrote The Martyred. The book deals with the religious conflicts of the clergy, the military, and the Korean populace during the Korean War. The setting and plot emphasize rather than provide the actual conflict—God versus atheism. On God's side we have Mr. Kim playing the part of a revived lieutenant aided by the deceived population. A Group of martyred ministers, a living but doubting clergyman and an army captain lead the atheists. Religious issues, which are just as relevant on this campus, are tossed back and forth between the two opposing forces. The army captain proposes questions such as—"If there is a God why does he let you people suffer so?" The doubting minister has no answer and cannot himself understand why his God allows the innocent wartorn masses to exist in such great misery. Perhaps God grants us the freedom to choose our own destinies; thus he does not interfere in our worldly affairs.

Another pertinent question is brought forth and pertains directly to our society. Should the minister, who renounced his faith, deceive his people by convincing them of the existence of a God when he himself is unbelieving? Should the population be given something "that sustains their lives in a world that is a meaningless state" if that something is false? Should the leaders of a society try to subdue restless minds by creating a fairy tale? The Martyred does not answer these questions; it only raises them. The book emphasizes doubt and questioning and the importance of it. When one has found answers to these queries which satisfy himself then he will have formed his religion.

RELIGION, A PALLIATIVE

By REV. JOSEPH QUIGLEY

Some outgoing self-made men in our great country maintain that Religion and Belief are valuable, especially to old ladies and children. They strengthen and reassure those who are about to commence the hazardous crossing of the River Styx. At the same time they have the happy faculty of initiating discipline and order, desirable orientation, for young citizens.

There are other equally successful Americans who hold that Religion is a marvelous aid and crutch for the emotionally weak and insecure. "It gives them something to hold onto" as they flounder about handicapped in the sea of life. However, all of these extroverted Americans will confide that for the virile, the self-sufficient, the rugged individualist Religion has little to offer. The old, the young, the weak, the insecure need palliatives and Religion, it would seem, satisfies this need. Therefore, let's tolerate Religion, they respectably insist, Hinduism, Buddhism, Zoroastrianism, Judaism, Christianity. They are all good for they help many endure life.

The Believer finds this interpretation of Religion awfully strange and negative coming from intelligent men, and can even feel it downright insulting. He recognizes as possible secondary effects of Belief confidence and respect for authority as well as benefits of emotional control. However, the Believer is a Believer because he recognizes that the primary goal of Religion is to answer the fundamental questions every thinking man at sometime asks, Where did I come from? Who am I? What is my purpose? Origin, Identity, and Purpose. Every Religion primarily addresses itself to these questions. A Believer is what he is because he feels his Religion best answers these questions. Religion, a palliative? Absurd!

Why Protest The Protestors?

By GREGORY P. STRATTNER, Editorial Staff

Protesting seems to be the thing to do lately, in light of the increasing concern over the war in Viet Nam. Protestors bearing anti-Viet Nam placards frequent everything from City Hall to the local supermarket. And just as where there is smoke there's fire, so too, where there is a protestor there is inevitably an "anti-protestor" protestor.

What is wrong with the anti-Viet Nam protestor? Is he afflicted with some rare mental disease, or is he just a fluke in a society which has all the answers and he has none? Certainly not. The protestor, regardless of I.Q., social status, race, or religion, is a participant, not just a spectator, in democracy. He generally comes from the ranks of the minority by definition and more often than not faces prejudiced, unintelligent, and crude ridicule. He is charged with being un-American and subversive and all too often acquires the mistaken image of a "super-ethnic Sam" or a disillusioned draft-card burner.

The principle of protesting goes far beyond carrying a sign down mainstreet just because someone else is doing it. It isn't an attention-getting edvice used just for the sake of getting attention. It's not sincere protesting when conducted by show-offs. Rather, protesting and the protestor are democracy and the citizens interacting, the former permitting the latter to sustain it.

How can it be said to be un-American when the very grass roots of American political structure grow out of the recognized need for legitimate protest?

Many people feel that, in reference to the current Viet Nam conflict, all Americans should "fall in step" behind their government. This is indeed an admirable opinion to have toward one's government, or in this case, more specifically, toward the President's foreign policy. Yet, while we all wish to maintain a united, well supported government, we should at the same time realize that the President is not the government, and that there is a great deal of danger in accepting without close scrutiny, any governmental or presidential policy, foreign or otherwise. The President's foreign policy is, after all, not a Papal interdict.

The citizen, then, who chooses to demonstrate against the war in Viet Nam, against discrimination according to race, or against any other situation, idea, or practice, deserves to be listened to. Perhaps his opinion is only partially correct or altogether wrong. In any event, we should recognize not only his right to say what he feels, but also the fact that he could be right. In the final analysis, a country which fosters popular legitimate protest is far from confused or divided, but rather strong and united, and therein derives its strength.

Letters To The Editor

"WITHERING HEIGHTS"

Caesura rots! That may seem to be a rather crude analogy to some people (particularly to those on the Yahoo staff!), but please allow me to expound before you all rise in righteous indignation. I have watched with bated breath and spastic nausea the progressive deterioration of what this campus' literary magazine considers "literature."

Apparently the aspirations of achieving a high literary standard have been supplanted by a lackadaisical indifference which permits, perhaps even encourages, shallow, "thesaurus-styled" prose and poetry under the proposed guise of being "contemporary." Fortunately, however, the magazine's staff did see fit to publish a scattering of good prose and poetry along with what might be labelled, "pseudo-intellectual garbage." (Perhaps there is hope for improvement!)

The students are daily being besieged with (questionable?) pleas from Caesura to submit more material; yet, when the wash is hung out on the line, we students find that more than 40% of the available space for prose and poetry is used to publish small anthologies of the inspired writings of individual members of the Caesura staff! (Mr. Cortese is running a close second to last year's one-man Caesura, David Axelrod.) I believe in giving everyone with any talent a chance to be published, but publishing more than one of any respective individual's works in the same issue seems to me to be doing an injustice to other prospective contributors. Wouldn't it be wiser to select the best of someone's contributions and publish that, instead hoarding space by publishing other works not nearly as good?

Caesura has not "withered away" beyond the point of no return yet, however. A great deal of praise and thanks should go to those "unsung heroes" of the staff who waded through the technical drudgery to produce a magazine that they understandably take a great deal of pride in. Perhaps these people will someday receive all the praise they deserve when Caesura truly becomes a "campus" and "literary" magazine.

Assumption College Pres. To Speak

Rev. Louis F. Dion, A.A., current president of Assumption College in Worcester, Mass., will give a talk entitled "My Three Years in Russia" on Mon., Feb. 14, at 7:30 p.m. in the main lounge at Eugene Field House. Slides will be shown and coffee served. A question period will follow the slides. Public cordially invited.

What's That? Where's This? Who o o o o ?

Believe it or not, a UMass student walked into his dorm very late one night slightly primed. On staggering into what he thought to be his room, right away he noticed two things.

First, it was not his room; it was a broom closet. Second, there was a screech owl in it, greeting him with an unblinking stare of indignation. The student, understandably, was shaken, thinking that he had a long last night off the deep end.

As it turned out, however, the owl was merely a friendly pet, belonging to another tenant of that house long known for its animals.

It seems that the owl, though perfectly quiet during the day, became extremely restless at night, so its owner had taken to storing it in the closet during quiet hours.

As any bird watcher can tell you, a screech owl can generate a sound high enough and loud enough to rupture a human eardrum in a closed room.

Have no fear, however, for the poor bird died after about a week of college life. When asked what he had been feeding the bird, the despondent owner replied, "Oh, just food from the dining commons." We think it died of loneliness, though.

BATMAN BECOMES CAMPUS BATCRAZE

Look. It's a bird. It's a plane. It's . . . no, Batman and Robin are trying to park their Batmobile.

Yes, with a pop, biff, crunch and zip, the comic strip heroes Batman and Robin have come to the University of Minnesota campus, says the Minnesota Daily. A fan club has been formed, an intramural team is named after them, and students adjust their evening schedules so they can watch the new television show.

Territorial Hall has organized the first University Batman fan club. The club with about 50 members, plans to distribute membership cards and Bat insignias.

The craze has also affected athletics. The Sigma Alpha Epsilon intramural basketball team is called the Batmen, who will appear in masks, capes and shirts with Bat insignias at a game Thursday night. Team Captain Gordon Campbell said team members have a few "Bat-tricks" up their sleeves which they hope will completely undermine the morale of the opposition.

Student response to the new series featuring the heroic adventures of the two defenders of law and justice varies from "ish" and "juvenile" to the more-frequently heard comments of "it's great pop art," "marvelous, just like the comic books," "wild," and "better than 'Thunderball'."

On at least one occasion the TV room in Territorial Hall, men's dormitory, was so crammed with Batman fans that latecomers had to go to another dormitory to watch.

The Varsity Theater in Dinkytown recently featured a four and a half hour "Evening with Batman and Robin" which theater officials said was extremely popular and attracted many cheering and booing students. Theater manager said the serials were "so naive and corny that students couldn't help but laugh."

Why is Batman so popular? Scott McNall, assistant sociology professor, said there are several reasons: The show is "camp," the plot is completely unpredictable and the program venerates the irrational and the absurd.

"Camp" is something nostalgic or so ugly that it is "in," McNall said. "Batman fits the criterion in that it calls forth visions of old gangster movies, comic books and a little bit of hood in which one wished himself into the role of Superman, Tarzan or any large-muscled hero so that he could either fly away from his parents, escape boredom, win the love of the girl down the block by performing fantastic deeds or beat up the big kind who had been picking on him."

Walter Gerson, assistant sociology professor who has made a study of the American comic book, reports that there is a trend in our society to the super-hero. He predicted the show should at least finish the year well — probably because "there are so many bad shows this year," he said.

WANTS STUPID CO-EDS

University of Michigan coeds are being asked to lower their grades to save their men from the draft. "Girls: We need your help," was the plea of a full-page ad placed in the student newspaper by a group of college men worried over Selective Service's intention of using class standing as a basis for deferment. "This is not an attack on intellectualism," the ad said. "We merely ask that you withhold your knowledge in exam situations."

OLD FIRST SEMESTER STUDENT LEADER RESIGNS

Ed. Note: This story was written by one of our staffers—who has since resigned.

In the wake of a wave of Student Senator resignations, five in two weeks, an anonymous letter was found in each senator's mailbox shortly before the Christmas vacation.

The senators were presented with a "fill-the-blanks" type resignation form, presumably expedite future withdrawals and provide accurate and concise records for the senate personnel file. TO: RICHARD F. DACEY III, PRESIDENT OF THE STUDENT SENATE FROM: (Fill in your name) SUBJECT: RESIGNATION

I hereby tender to you my resignation as Senator from _____ because: _____ Check One

After discussing my physical condition with my physician, I find that continued involvement in the Senate would lead to:

I find that my commitment to academics, the purpose for which we are ALL here, is suffering in the face of my commitment to the idea of student self-government.

Due to personal reasons beyond my control, I am forced to submit my resignation in order to _____

I have finally made a decision on the statement "Give me liberty or give me DACEY."

The intellectual bareness of Senate proceedings is destroying my hold on reason.

The contumely and obloquy which I daily suffer is too much for my romantic soul.

This last alternative referred to a physical act that the prospective resignee might request of the following persons:

B. Fellow members of the Senate

C. Members of the _____ committee.

D. All of the above. Robert Frost once said: "Two roads diverged in a yellow wood" and because of you, my fellow Senators, I am _____ for the road that I have traveled. Working with all of you in the Senate has given me _____ and made me _____. I can only hope that my involvement in the Senate has been a _____ to you personally and to the Senate as a whole. This is a far, far better thing that

NEWS STORY UNCOVERS RASH OF SIGNATIONS

OUT

I do now than I have ever done before in my Senate career.

Regretfully and respectfully submitted,

Senator

When asked about the form, Pres. Dacey smiled rather weakly and muttered something unintelligible under his breath. Other Senators requested that the paper not leave the hallowed Senate chambers.

In scanning the text of past Senate resignation speeches the phrases in the comprehensive form seemed comfortably familiar.

Senate elections have occurred so frequently that the Collegian has fouled up a number of election notices and write-in candidates have had a field day.

The resignation of Senators is second only to that of Colle- gian staffers in the current UMass resignation race. Figures show that this particular student body of student editors may well be the most fluid in the history of the young University.

The Collegian faced the new year with a full complement of editors who childishly thought they might brave the semester together. Feature Editor Sherry Spear gracefully stepped down to make way for Tom Donovan. Shortly thereafter Dan Glosband, editor-in-chief, returned to Adelphi and his pre-law pursuits.

The delicate balance of the hierarchy began to sway but Paul Rodman, erstwhile business manager, ascended temporarily to the top slot and pushed out a 20-page Homecoming special. During those days that Paul was editor Howie Davis departed, recommending that John Cunningham replace him as Sports editor. He did.

Not to be outdone, Photo Editor Ron Goldberg went back to the books and gave his darkroom key to Fred Pilon. Meanwhile a special election was brewing to duly place in office a new slate of editors.

Ellen Levine was elected to fill the Managing Editor position left vacant by Pete Hendrickson who was elected to Editor-in-Chief and Jim Foudy moved up to the News Editor slot left vacant by Ellen. Stability was theirs for a few weeks but the Photo Editor is now Terry Stillson and the Sports Editor post is manned by soft-spoken Mike Gould. Joel Hartstone handed his Editorial Chairmanship to associate Joe Zalkind.

Throughout the game of musical chairs the business office maintained its composure, keeping the same officers.

Finals may again set the game in motion and spring elections are but two months away. Perhaps a Collegian resignation form will appear after some especially cruel deadline is barely met.

Virgin Desks Promote Security?

HELL!
I HATE THIS CLASS!
SEX-HEX
BOBBY
BOB LOVES SUE DESK WRITING
BY DONNA KAHN
FEATURE STAFF

Surely everyone is familiar with these little tid-bits!

They are the fascinating engravings you read while sitting through a boring psychology class in Bartlett Auditorium or listening to a non-stimulating history lecture in Goessman.

Nothing can be more philosophically stimulating than imagining what illustrious student wrote the nasty word staring mischievously at you; or what fool wrote the ditty, SEX-HEX; or, who was this Bobby character anyway, that etched his name so deeply and boldly that the whole desk seems to scream "Bobby sat here, and I've never been the same!"

The poor virgin desks are never the same after they have been unmercifully exploited by the bored students.

But, — is the only reason for boredom? Or, are there other devilish reasons festering in his mind?

Three reasons can be given for the committing of this criminal act.

The first is the student's need for security.

Each student likes to feel that he belongs somewhere; to something that claims him as a member. By engraving his name on a desk, he has made it his desk. Now he is no longer alone, but a member of a small esoteric, non-sanguine group (namely him and the desk).

The second reason for the engraving comes from the physical release felt during the act.

It can be likened to the creating of a work of art, in which the artist feels in an aesthetic frenzy as his artistic intuitions finally realized.

It is the philosophy of digging into the desk for the desk's sake.

The third reason is the most logical of all. It is the wish for permanence which seems to pervade the UMass population quite strongly. UMass students fear The Bomb will leave them no worthwhile deeds to be remembered for.

Unconsciously their only desire is that if the bomb falls, that one desk in Bartlett Auditorium be preserved—so that future generations will at least know that BOB LOVED SUE.

N's Generate Personalities and Failures

Our life dominated by I.B.M. machines? Power in awe and respect every time you see an I.B.M. card? As computers perform more tasks than humans used to handle, we are inheriting some human qualities. A programmer at the computer center of an I.B.M. computer singing. Curious, he went to the console to see what was wrong. The card was lost and could not understand it was to read next. So it had typed that card next? The programmer typed "D," the computer ran it through quickly, in a quandary asked once more, "What?" The programmer replied sixty one. The computer ran the card through and asked what the next card was.

ROUGHLY EXASPERATED, the programmer typed out, "NEXT CARD." The computerizing that something was obviously replied, "I beg your pardon?" In a desper- neuver, the programmer decided to reverse the situation and proceeded to ask the computer what was next.

oughly conditioned at this stage, the computer replied, "60." Persevering under great pressure the programmer continued his questioning. After the computer replied that the next card was the next card, the programmer typed "I beg your pardon?"

ing that he was working with an idiot, the programmer thought a millisecond and replied, "ABANDONED," and went to sleep.

BARTMOUTH COLLEGE, the I.B.M. computer treated with all the respect and dignity of a full professor with tenure. It is listed in the phone book with a telephone number. To work the computer one dials the Operator, asks for the computer—a lapse of silence occurs followed by clicks and bells, telling you you've reached your party. When you say "hello" the computer types out "hello" and then proceeds to type out the rest of the data.

A sophomore English class has finally been caught right in the middle of the university's "infallible" I.B.M. system. To have a class but not to have a room . . . that is the predicament!

FOR THE PAST WEEK, a multitude of students has been seen walking from the new Morrill Science wing to the School of Business Administration Building and from one room in SBA to another room in SBA. All assigned rooms have been found occupied.

Wednesday, things appeared brighter. A room in SBA was left behind and the same multitude of students took another long walk back across campus to Hasbrouck Hall. Upon their arrival, their new room was, as predicted, occupied!

But, have no fear, fellow students!

"In general, the situation is improving. The I.B.M. machine is beginning to focus on the Hasbrouck area." Within these walls, somewhere, somehow, a free room, in need of some sophomore faces, shall beckon.

THE I.B.M. MACHINE is really interested. It does care. So, do have faith. Someday, you will find a room. Those long walks will cease and life will settle down to a normal routine.

Sophomore problems will disappear. The only possible worry, then, could be what to do with that class which wanders in claiming the room as theirs. Then you may turn and say, "Walk on!"

Financial Aid

Amherst College students are receiving financial aid exceeding $600,000 for the current academic year—roughly ten percent more than last year—reflecting recent increases in college expenses and enrollment.

According to estimates compiled by the College, undergraduates this year will receive approximately $550,000 in scholarships and loans distributed by the College, as well as an estimated $65,000 awarded and distributed by outside sources such as the National Merit Scholarship Corporation, foundations, corporations and community organizations. Approximately 465 of Amherst's 1200 students (39 percent) are receiving aid.

Weekly Stockbridge News Events Reported

BY BOB GORMAN
FEATURE STAFF

Following an editorial in the Friday, February 4 Collegian, a dorm meeting between Middlesex and Berkshire was called for Wednesday, February 9, to study the ideas of Stockbridge students in Middlesex and Berkshire houses on the proposed integration.

The floor was open to general discussion, and a heated debate ensued. One of the complaints raised against integration was the effect on Stockbridge School. These ideas are understandable because Stockbridge School activities sometimes vary from the University's. The thought of dispersing some of the traditions long belonging to Stockbridge was not encouraging. However, the hope of meeting fellow University students is more intriguing.

Almost all the residents of Middlesex and Plymouth are looking forward to the move into newer dorms. It was pointed out that the freshmen of certain majors could not sign up for the newer dorms because they leave for summer placement on the first of April.

Following the discussion, a vote was taken. The outcome was a note sent to Dean Field stating that Stockbridge students are in favor of integration.

The Stockbridge Senate meets Tuesday, February 15, to start work on the 66-67 budget. Stoso, Stockbridge School Organization, will award four scholarships for all eligible students.

Seminars on THE FREE SOCIETY

ATION FOR WHAT?: A discussion dealing with the nature of the University in the 20th century, its purposes, its perversions, and its possibilities. Middlesex (Student Union) and CONTEMPORARY VALUES: A discussion of sexual practice and the life emerging from the "sexual revolution" with particular emphasis upon the student and the university environment. Nantucket (Student Union)

PSYCHOLOGICAL IDIOM and THE MAN OF FAITH: A discussion which attempts to test the integrity of religious experience in the light of psycho-criteria, and to ask whether the psychological idiom can do justice to the experience in all its depth and range. Norfolk (Student Union)

POSE OF THESE SEMINARS is to provide the participants with the concept and lively discussion of issues vital to life in our time; to introduce methods which might produce the guidelines for unique responses to societal trends; to open up the possibility of relating university "course work" to the whole enterprise.

FREE SEMINARS WILL MEET on Mondays at 3:30 for seven weeks beginning February 28. Coffee will be served before the seminars in order that participants converse informally with those in the other seminars.

INTERESTED IN THE SEMINARS should sign up in 12 Old Chapel or by phone at the seminar of their choice.

Applications Available For Qualified Counselors

Women students of the classes of 1967 and 1968 who feel that counseling can add a new dimension to their experience and who wish to be of service are invited to apply. Application blanks may be secured from Heads of Residence or the Office of the Dean of Women. They should be returned on or before Wednesday, Feb. 23.

Applications are screened by present House Councils, Heads of Residence, Faculty and the Senate Committee on Women's Affairs. Selections are made on the basis of personal qualifications, maturity, leadership, dependability and scholarship.

Residences for U.M. women undergraduates in 1966-67 will include most of the present houses (specific plans to be announced about March 1st) and, in addition, will definitely include three towers in the Southwest—Tower 1 (part of the Residential College) and Towers 4 and 5 (each with three "Houses") which will be organized in much the same way as traditional houses are now yet offering challenging and exciting new possibilities. A second Dining Commons near Towers 4, 5, and 6, also scheduled to open September 1966, will include a snack bar and social lounges for area activities.

Wherever one serves as a "House Counselor" the position is one of honor and responsibility. There are routine duties pertaining to opening and closing of residences (daily and at beginning and end of terms), but the centrally important aspect of counseling is being an available friend and guide to the residents on your floor and being a part of the "team" of Head of Residence and Counselors who work with elected Senator, Social Chairman, Treasurer and other officers to promote a cooperative, congenial environment where every resident student can be known as an individual and participate as she chooses in the affairs of the house.

Quotes from former Counselors:

"Being a House Counselor is much more than an honor; it is a responsibility and an opportunity. Like anything else worthwhile it isn't all smooth, but it's an experience not to be missed. I feel that I shall be grateful for this experience all my life, not the least when I start trying to bring up a family of my own!"

Soph Executive Council Aids Crew Club

Crew coach Dave Clark solicited the Sophomore Executive Council for financial aid at a meeting held last Thursday.

According to Clark, the club has had to rely on borrowed or donated equipment due to insufficient funds.

DEAN Tunis, class advisor and a member of the University Athletic Council explained that the council has been unable to give more than its present $250 donation due to the stadium deficit.

The sophomore council voted to donate $625, as did each of the other class councils.

Ralph Stoddard, a member of the Freshman Exec Council, originated the idea of a spring concert in the stadium under the direction of the four classes and the I.F.C.

Also discussed at the exec council meeting were plans for the traditional Sophomore Banquet set for March 15, with a folk group—The Four Women Only—entertaining.

New England Poets To Be Featured on WFCR

Robert Lowell and Peter Viereck, two of New England's most distinguished poets, will be featured on Four College Radio—WFCR (88.5 mc) this week.

On Tuesday, Feb. 15 at 10 p.m. (repeat Friday, Feb. 18, 4 p.m.) Robert Lowell reads and comments on his poems, among them "The Union Dead," "The Lesson," "Law" and "The Spartans". Then he turns to a discussion of the work of other poets, in particular "The Shield of Achilles" by W. H. Auden.

On Friday, Feb. 18 at 7:30 p.m., Mt. Holyoke's colorful poet-historian Peter Viereck comes before the microphone to offer his views on Russian literature in a program called "Russian Revolution of the Heart: Conspiracy of Feelings".

Atmosphere of Impermanence

Perspective on UM-Boston

The University of Massachusetts opened a branch in Boston last September. Its "campus" is a Park-sq. office building formerly occupied by the Boston Gas Co.

Although the building is a great old-fashioned rock of a structure, more stone than glass and rising 13 stories, a tower among "campuses," there is a feeling of impermanence to the university.

This atmosphere of impermanence and change may be attributed to any one of several reasons. The building's renovation is not yet completed and workmen carrying a variety of tools mingle with the crowds of book-laden students who wait for elevators or dash down corridors; it is a commuting college with no resident student body and so, like an office, it empties each night and fills up each morning; there are only freshmen students, no upperclassmen, and so instead of seeing all four college classes at once you see only the first and youngest group and realize that it is they who must change and grow to become sophomores, juniors, seniors and, finally, graduates.

Like a Railroad Station

The lobby, which takes up most of the first floor of the "campus," is like a railroad station. It has a high ceiling of sculptured yellow plaster, brass-trimmed glass doors and a dark, resonant marble floor. Lights hang down in dark iron chandeliers and pay telephones and glass information booths bank the dim walls. Clusters of chairs and stand-up ash-trays are arranged in the center of the room.

All day students, like commuters rushing to catch trains, hurry in and out to classes, or like travelers stranded between links of a voyage, sit waiting for lectures to begin. Their voices and footsteps echo throughout the lobby.

The lobby, like a railroad station, is permanent and immovable, yet it is a place for transients. In it the arrivals and departures, students coming to learn and leaving to work, matter not.

A boy with the face of an opossum, small and slender in a maroon hooded jacket, stood in the lobby before a group of his seated classmates. He was not really part of their conversation, for he kept his eyes directed toward one of the doors, but from time to time he would reach out, poke one of his friends and make some remark.

Come to Get Husband

When we walked up to him he was swaying slowly from side to side and singing to himself: "Passing through, passing through, sometimes happy, sometimes blue, but I'm only passing through."

We asked him why he had come to college.

"You have to, if you want to get any kind of a job," he said immediately. "You have to have a degree. That's why. Ask anybody here, they'll tell you the same thing. 'Cept the girls. They come to get husbands."

We asked a little girl in a soft white sweater.

"Why did I come to college? Well, I guess because I want to be a teacher. I've always wanted to be a teacher."

The "campus" lunchroom is on the third floor. Through a window in a door we could see a new cafeteria with huge silver coffee machines and metaltray-tracks, but it was not yet ready for use. Wires dangled here and there and a painter's drop cloth covered one counter.

A picnic lunch was being served in an adjacent room. Long tables were spread out with cellophane-wrapped sandwiches, doughnuts and frosted pastries. There were small bags of potato chips, little cans of fruit juices and cardboard cartons of milk. There were triangles of pie on wedge-shaped paper plates with red plastic forks, and an open-topped deep freezer of ice cream bars and sundae cups.

At the dining tables, students sat amid a rumple of paper bags and wrappings to eat or to play cards. There were so many card games going on that the dining room sounded almost like a gambling casino.

"Whist. It's like bridge, only faster. Less time. That's what we all play here," one of the dealers said.

On one table, a transistor radio was playing: "He's a well-respected man about town, doing the best things, so conservatively..."

A Joke or Not

From a window we could see a Park-sq. hotel, a wedge of grey stone with darker grey square, the windows. In one window a maid, who had perhaps paused in readying the room for its next occupant, was leaning her elbows on the sill to watch the traffic below.

Classes were in progress on a floor above the lunchroom. In one room a professor dressed in a blue gabardine suit was saying to his class:

"In many ways it's pointless to argue whether Falstaff was playing a joke or not. Still, it may be worth debating."

In a classroom across the hall a professor dressed in a tweed suit was telling his class:

"What Dante says is that man is so sinful, that if God were a god of justice, all mankind would be damned. That's where the Messiah comes in."

By an elevator on the fourth floor hung a street map of Boston. Someone had circled the location of the "campus," at the junction of Arlington and Stuart sts., and written beside the circle: "U.MASS." Below that, in a different handwriting were three red letters followed by an exclamation mark: "GAS" A "gas" is something funny, something light and entertaining.

From windows on the top floor of the building we could see that three sections of the city meet roughly at the spot marked by the University of Massachusetts "Campus."

Prefer Boston and Others

To the north and west lies established proper Boston: Beacon Hill, the Public Garden, Commonwealth ave., Newbury st., Copley sq. and the Back Bay.

To the south lies the start of the South End of Boston, an area of deprivation, poverty but, perhaps more striking, an area of both public and private renewal.

To the east lies the entertainment district, streets of theaters, cocktail lounges and night-clubs.

As we left the university "campus" it occurred to us that when a student leaves the building at the end of each day he must travel in one of the directions he will have to follow in adult life when he leaves the academic world forever. How much choice he has in selecting the direction depends on many things. Sometimes he has no choice at all.

Once through college, however, a young person must select, either willingly or compulsively, between several worlds. He can enter the established business world, a world of more obvious, dramatic service to society, a world of unemployment and poverty (either material or spiritual), or a world where entertainment, the passing of time in a gay, light manner, is the most important thing.

Doesn't Make Sense

We also thought: students enter classrooms so that in four or more years they can enter offices of one kind or another. But here, at the University of Massachusetts at Boston, the classrooms were once offices. The "campus" building defied the usual progression of life: from classroom to office, and students in these "classrooms" are already in offices, in effect, they have reached their destination without knowing it.

Bzzzz. It didn't quite seem to make sense. We walked down Stuart st. to Fayette st. and through "Bay Village" where lovely, old Beacon Hill-type houses have been renovated.

It was a sparkling noon and the sky was that deep blue that makes you keep taking deep breaths, as if to inhale all that pure, cold Winter freshness. We could smell and breathe the distant sea.

At the corner of Fayette st. and Broadway, at the start of the entertainment district, we saw, on a building across from a popular music radio station, a blackened old bronze plaque. The plaque said:

"Near this spot 19th January MDCCIX was born Edgar Allen Poe, romancer, poet and critic. This tablet placed here in his memory by the Boston Author's Club."

When we think of Poe, we think, of course, of "Nevermore," the Raven, but also of a fragment from a poem whose name we cannot remember: "While from a proud tower in town, death looks gigantically down."

Redmen Disappoint Fans in Losses to URI and Maine

by GLENN BRIERE

Throughout the season, it has become evident that UMass is capable of both excellent and inept basketball. Unfortunately, ineptness overshadowed excellence this weekend as the Redmen dropped two games at the Cage. Friday night's game was an 88-64 trouncing at the hands of Yan-Con leader Rhode Island. On Saturday night the Redmen were stunned by Maine, 70-63, despite a strong but belated comeback.

THE TWO GAMES were similar in several ways. In neither game was the Redmen's offense able to click. In each game, the UM shooting percentage was poor, and their opponents took advantage of their laziness and sloppy ballhandling. And in each encounter, the team fell into streaks of thoroughly inept basketball which cost them the Maine game and prevented them from threatening in the URI game. With the two losses, the record of the faltering Redmen fell to 8-11 on the season.

The Rhode Island game started out quite auspiciously, with UM scoring the first five points. Then the team fell into the first of its doldrums, and the Rams chalked up the next 13 points. With soph center Art Stephenson controlling the boards, Rhodey moved out to a 25-11 lead with 11 minutes left in the half. UM finally came around and played Rhode Island evenly for the rest of the half. The score at halftime was 48-33 in favor of the Rams.

IN THE SECOND half, the Redmen might have made it close had it not been for two minutes of terrible basketball. Once again, the Redmen lost their touch, missing several easy shots from underneath, as Rhodey built up a 63-41 lead. With 12:56 left, Clarence Hill scored on a short jumper to set an all-time UM scoring record. But this was all the Redmen fans had to cheer about because UMass never came close again.

Hill led all scorers in the game with 21 points, but the real star was Rhode Island's Stephenson, who netted 15 points and took 22 rebounds. Steve Chubin, the Rams' ace, had an off-night, but the balanced Rhode Island team made up for this. Henry Carey led the URI scorers with 17 points. The team statistics tell the story of the game. URI outrebounded UM, 61-47, and shot 48% while the Redmen hit for a miserable 31% from the floor. It was the sixth straight conference win for the red-hot Rams. For the Redmen, the sole bright spot was the play of much-improved Gary Gasperack, who performed well in his new forward position.

ON SATURDAY night, UM was completely surprised by a hustling Maine team, and they dropped their third straight. As in the previous night's game, their performance was not alert and their shooting was extremely cold. The Black Bears took advantage of this to build a sizeable lead, later holding off a UM onslaught to win, 70-63. In this game, the Redmen waited until the last four minutes to come alive, making a spirited but belated move.

Maine's aggressive zone resulted in some sloppy ballhandling by UM in the early stages. Led by Jim Babyak, the Redmen came back and went ahead for the first time with less than five minutes to go in the half. They led by seven with two minutes to go, but their attack fizzled out, and they held a slim four point halftime margin.

CONTROLLING the boards, the Black Bears caught fire and scored the first eight points of the second half, led by guard Bob Brewer and center Guy Strong. There were 15 minutes left in the game, and Maine held a one-point lead when UM began to break apart. Falling into one of their inept streaks, they became unalert and Maine became hot. All of a sudden, the Black Bears held a 49-38 lead with 12:17 left and Coach Johnny Orr called a time out. This proved useless as Maine upped their lead to 60-41 with six minutes to go.

With about four minutes to go, the Redmen caught fire. Clarence Hill, who had been non-productive, led UM in a hot streak that brought them to within six with two minutes left. With a minute and a half to go, John Lisack came off the bench and scored three crucial baskets. Maine led by a mere three points, 66-63, with 45 seconds left. But with 30 seconds left, Maine's Dave Hale hit twice on a one-and-one, and that all but wrapped it up.

The next game will be at the Cage on Thursday night against New Hampshire, in conjunction with Winter Carnival.

FROSH FIVE STREAKS TO FOURTH STRAIGHT

by TOM FITZGERALD

It was a profitable weekend for the UMass Freshmen cagers, who picked up their third and fourth straight victories and ran their record to a glittering 8-3.

FRIDAY NIGHT, the Frosh broke the game open in the third quarter and handed Cornwall Academy an 81-67 set-back, snapping a 14-game winning streak for the Cavaliers.

A basket by Cornwall's Butch Moreland knotted the score at 38-all with three-and-a-half minutes gone in the second half. A free throw by Eddie Griffith and a two-pointer by Joe DiSarcina shot UM ahead, 41-38. After Cornwall had regained the lead on a spectacular driving basket by Bob Rutherford, Lonnie Lehrer curled the cords, giving UMass the lead to stay.

JOHN SHOCKRO's nifty running hookshot pulled the Little Redmen to a 60-51 advantage halfway through the second half. The fast-breaking Frosh counted off 10 more consecutive points after the 10-minute mark, settling the issue. With slightly over four minutes to go, UM held a 20 point lead.

In the first minutes of the tilt, Rutherford executed some dazzling off-balance scores, propelling Cornwall in front, 8-2. Sparked by Shockro, the Frosh hustled back to a 15-15 dead-lock after one quarter.

UM outscored the prep-schoolers, 20-13, during the next 10 minutes and gradually took command with a sound, alert defense. Shockro was high man in the game for the Little Redmen scrapping for 24 points.

OTHERS in double figures for UM were Ron Nowakowski with 16, Lehrer, gaining poise game by game, with 13, and DiSarcina with 10. Rutherford, who kept Cornwall in the game with some seemingly impossible shots, paced all scorers with 26, while Pope had 21.

SHOCKRO did an encore with 27 points on Saturday night, 15 from the foul line, as the Frosh whipped Chamberlayne Junior College of Boston, 81-66. Although a three-point play by Peter Gayeska with six minutes gone in the second half had lifted UM to a 27-point spread, 53-26, it took another three-pointer by Big Pete with three-and-a-half minutes remaining to apply the crusher when Chamberlayne had rallied to a 65-57 deficit.

UM was on top, 15-12, after the first ten minutes, 38-20, after firing 16 of the last 18 points of the first half, and 56-39, after three quarters. Chamberlayne got hot too late.

Following Shockro in the scoring column were Lehrer, the forecourt reserve, with 17 and Gayeska with 13.

Pucksters Lose to Bowdoin; Frosh Remain Undefeated

by DAVE HANSON

Despite a four goal performance by Junior Ed Polchlopek, the Varsity sextet dropped their eleventh game of the season, 11-5, to number one ranked small college, Bowdoin at Brunswick, Maine before a sellout crowd of 4000. The Redmen played their best game of the year despite the absence of starters Ed Quimby, Matt Connolly, and John McShane. Goaltender Ed Sanborn, playing his first game this season, had thirty-eight saves but the slick passing in front of the net by the Polar Bears gave Sandy little chance on most of their eleven tallies.

JUNIOR ED GRANEY accounted for the other Redmen tally. Bill Skowrya picked up three assists, Jim Mahoney two, and Dave Eaton and Fred Molander one apiece. Molander helped keep the Polar Bears honest with his fine fore-checking and scrambling in the corners. Eaton, 5'-5", 130 pounds, took a beating on the boards but showed his stuff on offense with good passing and a lot of hustle.

The pucksters meet Amherst in a 3 o'clock afternoon encounter on Wednesday. A win by four goals or more by the Redmen would insure the return of the large Silver Cup signifying hockey supremacy in the Pioneer Valley to Coach Steve Kosakowski's trophy cabinet. The Jeff's have defeated the Redmen twice already this season by scores of 6-3 and 6-5 (O.T.).

A third period unassisted goal by former Malden High star Charlie Hanifan broke a 3-3 tie with 42 seconds left to play and gave the Little Redmen sextet a victory over a strong Worcester Junior College squad at Amherst's Orr Rink Saturday afternoon.

In first period action, Eddy Sheehan hit the scoreboard for the home team early in the stanza on a wrist shot from about 5 feet out and Al Johnson added another off a rebound by Worcester goalie Van Buskirk. Worcester Junior rebounded quickly with a tally early in the second period and tied the score at two-all at the 6:25 marker in the third frame.

THIRTY SECONDS LATER shots by Hanifan and Robinson failed to hit the nets but Jeff Sanborn tucked the puck into the corner for the Redmen's third score. Worcester was not about to give up as Jim Anastas slammed a shot from the point past netminder Bob Balcom.

Hanifan's goal boosted him into the lead in the Frosh scoring statistics and pushed the Freshmen's record to 3-0-1. Netminders "Corky" Cochrane and Bob Balcom combined for a total of 45 saves against 36 for Vanbuskirk.

THE 69'ERS WILL attempt to extend their unbeaten streak against Deerfield at Deerfield Wednesday and Amherst at home Thursday at 7:00 p.m.

IM REPORT

by DAVE JARNES

TWO STUNNING UPSETS highlighted activity in the South Dorm league. The Black Bears knocked the Mills Birch out of a first place tie with a 46-45 decision. Meanwhile, the lowly Redmen (2-6) eliminated the Comanches from any title hopes with a 31-30 squeaker as Berry and Cominski combined for 20 points.

The Cherrys remained in contention by whipping the Lemons 53-41 as Stillman hit the nets for 34 markers. The Colts' final game will be against the always dangerous Comanches (4-3). The Cherrys, Birch, and Black Bears all have 6-2 slates. The Cherrys and Birch play each other Tuesday while the Bears play the Redmen.

TURNING TO THE NORTH LEAGUE, the Patriots continued to roll along with a 71-46 whalloping of the Phallics. Ray Stanolis, who is averaging 36 points per game, paced the attack with 28 points while rugged Bill Carthy chipped in with 24. The Aces continued unbeaten by bombing the Hemlocks 65-34 as Jack Thomas hooped 28. In a battle of the also-rans the Redwoods topped the Hawks 53-34.

The Flaming A's must beat the Aces on Tuesday to effect a three way tie which will include the Aces, Flaming A's, and the Patriots. If the Aces win they will cop the title.

Moving to the West League, the Maples kept their record unblemished by beating the Hi-Lo's 49-30 while the Hoovers, who started the season slowly but have come on strongly as of late, edged the Pines 34-27. The Maples must beat the fourth place Pines in their final game to win their league crown. The Oaks stand in second place with one loss.

IN INDEPENDENT GAMES, the Zero's continued unbeaten and tied for the National League lead with the Moody Blues by toppling the Hot Rod Raiders 44-23. Hart and Rothera led the scoring parade with 20 and 19 points respectively.

TKE blasted PMD 69-44 in a make-up game. Ron Merrill set a fraternity high for the season by scoring 41 points.

Tracksters Trample Bowdoin

by DAVE JARNES

Captain John Medeiros led the University of Massachusetts track team to a resounding 78-35 victory over winless Bowdoin at Brunswick, Me. on Saturday. John had quite a day as he coped three firsts, one second, and a third. He set a meet high jump mark of 6-1 and tied the low hurdles record at 5.8 seconds.

During the meet, seven records were set and one meet record was equalled. The Redmen took every first with the exception of the weight events. Stephen Burrell led a Massachusetts sweep of the 40 yd. dash with a meet record of 4.6 seconds. In other record performances Bill Thoms won the 1,000 yd. run in 2:24.2 while the UMass mile relay team was clocked in 3:37.6.

Bowdoin's duo of Alex Schulten and Charlie Hews was impressive in the weight events. Schulten set a meet record by heaving the 35 lb. ball 60' 3/4" while Hews bettered the previous shot put mark by more than 6 feet with a toss of 51' 5 1/2".

Swimmers Defeat UConn, UVM

by GLENN BRIERE

IT WAS the sweetest victory in a long time for the UMass Mermen when they outclassed UConn Wednesday night 48-47. The team, shaken by their loss to Coast Guard Academy, were set so high, nothing could stop them.

The crucial opening event, the 400 yd. Medley Relay, worth seven points, was manned by the powerful combination of Nowak, Severn, Levy and Wilson. They swam against, and beat, the best Conn. offered.

CO-CAPTAIN Dick Daniels, competed well against probably his fastest rival in his career. He was forced into second place in the 200 yd. and 500 yd. Freestyle events.

Chip Wyser swam and won the 50 yd. Freestyle. Dick Lennon came in first in the 200 yd. Individual Medley.

Steve Levy swam his most exciting race when he came from behind in the last 20 yds. to win his event. Team mate Bob Rapaport surprised everyone by pulling a second place out of nowhere and taking a most valuable one point.

CHIP WYSER took a second first place when he won the 100 yd. Freestyle. Ken Nowak easily outdistanced his opponents in the 200 yd. Backstroke.

Dick Lennon broke another University record in the 200 yd. Breaststroke.

Coming from behind in the last four events, the UM swim team defeated Vermont 53-42, at Burlington Saturday. The Redmen were led by Dick Daniels, Dick Lennon, Chip Wyser and Ken Nowak.

THE SCORE was 46-42 in favor of UM with only the 400-yd. freestyle relay remaining. The UM foursome of Nowak, Lennon, Daniels and Wyser won the event with a time of 3:35.2, giving their team the victory. In addition to the relay, these four each won an individual event. Daniels won the 200 yd. freestyle and the 500 yd. freestyle. Lennon captured the 200 yd. individual medley and the 200 yd. breaststroke. Wyser, in addition to swimming the anchor in the relay, won the 50 yd. freestyle. Nowak took his specialty, the 200 yd. backstroke.

UMass is now 8-3 on the year. In the freshman meet, the Redmen also won, 48-45.

"FAIR LADY"--SPRING

While the Junior Class is anxiously hoping for a long-awaited, snow-filled Winter Carnival, there is already a touch of spring in the air.

At least Nugent's of Hadley says there is, as they sponsor and present the opening event of the carnival tonight in Mahar Auditorium—a spring and summer fashion review.

"My Fair Lady" will be the theme of this year's show.

Dressed in the prettiest fashions of the coming seasons, UMass co-eds as models will take you with them and Eliza through the English streets.

Nugent's is offering a door prize and fashion booklets will be distributed.

A hardworking committee and Nugent's manager promise some fabulous new fashions for a variety of occasions.

CARNI OPENS WITH HORROR SHOW

On Monday, February 14, Edgar Allan Poe's Tales of Terror will be shown at Bowker Auditorium at 8:15 p.m.

This is part of the official opening of Winter Carnival Week and promises to be an exciting, horror-filled evening.

The movie is a trilogy of tales:

Morella: tells the terrifying experiences of a beautiful girl and her father in a gloomy castle with a dead body.

The Black Cat: the movie in which a cat exposes a murder.

The Case of M. Valdemar: a hypnotized corpse rises from the dead to save his wife.

The "Tales" feature such long-time favorites as Vincent Price, Peter Lorre, Basil Rathbone, Debra Paget, and Scotty Brown.

Admission is $25 and includes the Winter Carni fashion show which begins at 7:00 p.m.

So bring your tranquilizers and come to see Tales of Terror, a horror show you'll never forget!

Sticky Stuff

As a traditional part of this year's Winter Carnival weekend, The Revelers are sponsoring a lively awakening for all UMass students, their dates, and their maiden aunts.

Complete with butter and syrup, the Pancake Breakfast in the Student Union Ballroom will begin at 8:30 and will end when the last UMass pancake hog burps and decides to call it a morning.

This year, the Reveler's policy is "all you can eat for $.50," with absolutely no stipulations.

The recipe is guaranteed to satisfy the most discriminating of appetites and provide stamina for the Saturday afternoon Winter Olympics contestants.

All proceeds from the Pancake Breakfast will go toward the Reveler's Scholarship Fund.

Tickets will be sold at the door this Saturday morning in the Student Union Ballroom.

Olympics On Ice

The Winter Carnival Olympics of 1966 will take place at the Campus Pond on February 19, at 1:30 p.m.

The first event of the afternoon will be a Women's Speed Skating competition in which the skaters will be vying for individual trophies.

The Powder Puff hockey game will follow, with dormitory women trying to defeat the sorority girls in a hot hockey game. The usual hockey sticks and puck will be replaced with brooms and volleyball when our cool coeds take to the ice.

It is rumored that the girls of both teams will be wearing pillows strapped to their backs to prevent damage to the playing surface.

A perpetual team trophy will be awarded the winning team in addition to an individual trophy to be presented to the Most Valuable Player.

It will be the Greeks versus the dormitory men in the final event of the afternoon, a Rope Pull on ice. The perpetual trophy to be awarded the winning team is now on display in the SU Lobby.

This is a new event and promises to provide an exciting climax to an afternoon of Winter Olympics.

Basketball Game Thursday

On Thursday, February 17th the UMass cagers will challenge the UConn basketball team to a second round battle.

During the game, section cheering will take place; noisemakers will even be provided by the Winter Carni Committee.

There will be a fabulous half-time show where the Carni queen candidates will be presented along with the Flying Redmen and the Precisionettes.

Winter Carnival Queen candidates eagerly look for more snow.

Winter Carni Ball--"Wonderful Town"--features Central Park, Broadway, Coronation

At long last, Wonderful Town is coming

Friday evening, February 18 at 8:30, the Class of 1967 invites you to dance to the music of Bobby Kaye and his orchestra at this year's Winter Carnival Ball.

The Student Union Ballroom will be transformed into downtown New York.

You will be swept into the midst of a "Central Park" with benches, street signs, trees covered with colorful posters telling of the latest theatre hits on Broadway . . . and then Broadway itself.

Stepping off Broadway and slipping through a canopy, you will enter the Commonwealth Room—turned-night-club complete with tables and chairs.

Favors and programs will be given out at the door. You will receive a small glass favor stamped with "Wonderful Town" and an etching of the New York skyline.

During intermission Lt. Governor Elliot Richardson will crown this year's Winter Carnival Queen, adding to the excitement of Wonderful Town.

Bloomin' Fashion Show

"My Fair Lady", as sponsored by Nugents of Hadley, presents UMass damels in the streets of London.

Casual to formal apparel highlight Nugent's first spring collection on the UMass campus on Monday, February 14, at 7:00 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium.

The English mannikins will be: Maija Bergs, Sandy Holm, Liz Ferry, Pat Meehan, Jean McCarthy, Judy Sturtesvant, Sandy Pierce, Margo Marsten, Barbara Taska, Diane Dube.

The stage is set in old English decor of the Tudor period. Also, musical selections from the original Broadway Production "My Fair Lady" as interpreted by Lois Leventhal will accompany the evening showing of the fairest clothes in the land.

Among other attractions, there will be door prizes and a fashion booklet on what's new and refreshing in spring and summer wear.

All are invited to attend with a slight cover charge of 25¢. Tickets are available in the Student Union.

Sculptures Revived:

For the first time in three years the University's Winter Carnival will have some sculptures.

Dormitory, fraternity and sorority units will begin work on their sculptures early this week in order to have them completed by the Feb. 19 deadline.

All the sculptures will be based on the Winter
Carni theme "Broadway Premier." My Fair Lady, Camelot, Can Can and West Side Story are among the early entry ideas.

The rules allow for the use of colored snow, moving parts, sound effects and special lighting.
Manufactured snow, however, may not be used.

Judging will begin at 9:00 on the morning of the 19th. Sculptures must be completed by 7:00 that morning. This year's judges will consist of Dean Hopkins, Assistant to the Provost Kenneth Siud, Prof. of Geography Terence Burke, and other members of the faculty and student body.

Three awards will be given in each of the four divisions: fraternities, sororities, men's dorms and women's dorms.

A FREE AND RESPONSIBLE PRESS

VOL. XCIV, NO. 48

UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS, WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 16, 1966

Glen Yarbrough who will appear this Sunday afternoon at 1:30 in the Curry Hicks Cage. See story below.

Popular Folk Artist To Perform Sunday

When is a famous folk singer not a folk singer? When he's Glenn Yarbrough, former member of a popular folk group who feels he has outgrown folk music.

Now on his own as a single performer, Glenn will be the featured artist at the University of Massachusetts Winter Carnival Concert this Sunday afternoon at 1:30 in the Curry Hicks Cage.

GLENN YARBROUGH doesn't think of himself as a folk singer any more, even though he still has many fans who consider him one. His attitude and fame come from five years of success with one of America's most popular folk groups, The Limelighers. He left the group in 1964 and struck out on his own.

Now, two years and five albums later, Glenn says "I don't want to be categorized as a 'folk singer' because I am not. I sing songs with a folk flavor, but I will sing any song as long as it means something to me musically and especially lyrically."

Regarding his split with The Limelighers, Glenn says there were no bitter feelings. Their five years together were a "great success," he comments, but such an association "never satisfies the artistic needs of any one member. Art is not a collective process."

Yarbrough's continued success as a single performer has been impressive. In 1965, Glenn appeared on five national TV shows and made over 50 personal appearances in college concerts throughout the United States. His recording of "Baby the Rain Must Fall" reached the number 12 spot on national popularity charts, and he continues to be enthusiastically received wherever he appears.

THE YARBROUGH CONCERT will climax a week of Winter sports, traditional semi-formal ball and another in-person concert. Also on the program Sunday will be the Modern Folk Quartet. The other concert, Saturday night at 7, will feature the Four Seasons, Simon and Garfunkle and the Rovin' Kind, three currently popular rock and roll recording groups.

Robert Lewis D. V. P. Guest Speaker Tonight

Robert Lewis, noted director, actor, and founder of the Actors Studio in New York City will be speaking tonight at 8 p.m. in Bartlett Auditorium, as D.V.P. guest lecturer.

Lewis's topic at the combined Winter Carni - D.V.P. lecture will be "Theatre, Show Business or What?"

Since his days as an actor and director with the Group Theatre, Lewis has run his own theatre workshop, appeared on television, and founded the Actors Studio. As one of the founders he ranks as an authority on the method from its original inception to the present.

Senate to Survey Meal Tickets, Book Store Bills at Tonight's Meeting

by KAREN ROSE, Senate Editor

A bill to form an ad hoc committee in connection with the integration of Stockbridge students with four year students will be brought to the floor tonight by Sen. Burt Freedman (Baker).

The committee will be composed of three Stockbridge students and three University level students who will work on formulating a specific detailed proposal for integration.

A motion that the Student Senate recommend to the Faculty Senate that one student be allowed to sit on the academic matters committee and another be allowed to sit on the summer sessions committee on a trial basis will be introduced tonight by Sen. Jerry Benezra (Fraternities).

THE STUDENTS on these committees will have speaking privileges but no voting power.

Sen. Jim Allen (Commuters) will be bringing up a motion that the Senate have a foreign student as an ex-officio non-voting member.

The reason behind this bill being that the foreign students make up a sizeable portion of the student body and at present have no effective form of representation or formed communication with the student body as a whole.

TWO OLD BILLS will be brought up again tonight for final action. The first concerns a recommendation to the Board of Trustees that the present policy concerning meal tickets be changed and that students be allowed to do as they see fit with their meal tickets.

Sen. Mike Garjian will bring up the second bill concerning student bookstore prices.

His bill stipulates that an ad hoc committee be formed specifically concentrating on the prices paid by the bookstore for students' used books and also on the prices for which these same books are resold.

UMass State Employees Sign Petition List of Unfair Practices

Approximately 500 nonprofessional workers of the Massachusetts State Employees Association (MSEA) at the University of Massachusetts have signed two petitions charging unfair labor practices in hiring and pay raises.

One of the petitions has been sent to Western Massachusetts legislators, asking that they "look into the injustices that have occurred and continue to occur" at the University.

A spokesman for the workers said today the group will meet tonight at 7:30 in Shattuck Auditorium in the Public Health Building on campus to air their views.

The petition, which will be sent to John W. Lederle, President of the University, lists six major grievances.

Mr. Lederle in 1964 asked the legislature to withdraw a bill putting UMass nonprofessional workers under Civil Service. The President stated in a letter to workers at that time that the legislators granted the President's request so that the University could "maintain the autonomy and flexibility" needed to continue the University's growth.

The President also said that the University would, in effect, create its own system which would parallel that of the Civil Service system.

The six grievances listed in the second petition are as follows:—

- (1) The listing of promotional opportunities for all employees frequently omits bona fide promotional opportunities;
- (2) Some promotional opportunities listed are in fact filled;
- (3) Despite the fact that testing is said to be a prerequisite for employment, there have been instances where this has not been adhered to;
- (4) It is our belief that in many instances testing does not give proper weight to the practical experiences, skills, achievement and work of career unduly weight to formal book knowledge;
- (5) We have been informed that the administration does not have to select a prospective employee according to his grade. Truly, then, of what genuine value is testing?;

(6) In many instances, employees have not been properly informed as to their rights by the personnel office. The office has been particularly deficient in informing employees of their retirement and industrial accident rights.

The second petition has been signed by more than 350 workers with more expected by tomorrow night. Heading the list is William P. Gurski, institution committee man, MSEA.

The MSEA has about 900 members according to a spokesman at the university. Although some of the members are professional workers, the bulk of the organization represents non-professional workers, including janitors, maintenance men and farm workers.

Merchant of Venice

Mary Grace Pennisi as Portia and Francois-Regis Klanfer as Shylock, examine the bond.

Roles Cast For U.T. Production

The University of Massachusetts Theatre is proud to announce casting for its fourth major production of the season, The Merchant Of Venice.

The best known roles of this Shakespearean comedy are Shylock and Portia, and they are lock and Portia, and they are dents Frank Klanfer and Mary Grace Pennisi. Frank and Mary are well known to UT audiences from their work in The Fantasticks as the lovable team of El Gallo and Luisa.

Merchant is full of romance, and where there is romance there are lovers. William C. Segal and Eileen Goldstein as Lorenzo and Jessica make a perfect "love sick" couple. Dan Weir as the playboy Bassanio competes with Frank Foley — The Prince of Morocco, and Pat Freni—The Prince of Arragon, for Portia's love.

The merchant whose life is in danger is played by Philip Fisher. A Shakespearean comedy would not be complete without clowns and Merchant has its share of them. Peter Stelzer as Launcelot Gobbo, and Tim Sloan as Old Gobbo clown their way around the stage with the energy of a hurricane.

Others in the cast include Jane Lavin—Nerissa, George Dimock—Solanio, Pedro Silva—Salerio, Philip Mallet — Gratiano, John Urban — The Duke of Venice, Mike Hench — Tubal, Joanne Drexler—Leonardo, Debby Keller — Balthasar, Art Steinberg, Robert Pero, Joseph Cassola and Eugene M. Sheehan.

The Merchant of Venice is directed by visiting professor Dr. Walther R. Volbach, and original music composed by Bruce MacCombie. The production will be presented March 3, 4, 5 at 8:15 p.m. and March 5 at 2:15 p.m.

Get a Job...

by SHARON PALERMO, Staff Reporter

The draft threat has caused a nationwide falloff in the number of job interviews being taken by graduating students, Miss Antunes, Guidance Director for Women, said.

Statistics of this dropoff will not be obtainable until the end of this year.

However, Miss Antunes explained, the number of organizations coming for interviews is increasing; there were 475 last year and 499 this year, not including Ph. D. recruiters.

Students are encouraged and recommended to go for interviews by these organizations, even if the student has not fulfilled his military obligations. Some students will be classified 4F; the files of the other interviewees will be kept on record.

Assumption College President Talks on Experiences in Russia

by PAM METAKAS, Staff Reporter

"Travel in Russia can be interesting but you can't call it a vacation," commented Rev. Louis F. Dion, A.A., current president of Assumption College during a talk Tuesday night at Eugene Field House. He was discussing the three years he recently spent in the U.S.S.R. as a practicing American clergyman of the Roman Catholic Church.

The Rev. Dion began by distinguishing the difference between the U.S.S.R. and Russia. The U.S.S.R. is composed of 15 "so-called" republics. One of these republics is Russia. Some of the other republics include the Ukraine, White Russia and Armenia. He compared the size of the U.S.S.R. to a combination of North America, Central America and part of South America.

He also emphasized that contrary to some prevailing opinions there "is ample religious persecution in the Soviet Union today."

Not everyone realizes that "since the 10th century the Russians have been Christian-members of the Russian Orthodox Church." They look to Constantinople where the head of their church resides. Presently in Russia there are some 50 operating places of worship—and they have and are undergoing what the Reverend calls "strangulation."

After the war Khrushchev attacked religion which had been "free." He did this in two ways:

• THE EDUCATIONAL SYSTEM—There was a complete separation of the school from the Church. The entire system was anti-God oriented. Every teacher from the beginning grades on tried to prove God doesn't exist. And in college there were specific courses a student took to further instill these ideas in his mind.

• Propaganda machine—This machine was used 100% of the time by all the mass media. Material such as atheistic propaganda was also aimed at removing God from the minds and hearts of the people.

Both of these "methods" are still in use today.

The Rev. Dion said that those who remain church-goers despite these methods "must take the consequences." These consequences may include inability to secure a good apartment and to graduate from college if the parents or the children are church-goers. Since devious means are used, not open force, he calls the religious persecution "strangulation"—a type of slow, silent death.

"I'm convinced that within 20 years organized religion will have disappeared from the Soviet Union," added the Rev. Dion.

He pointed out one needs two attributes to travel in the Soviet Union—a sense of humor and a lot of patience.

"I was there legally and I dressed the way I do today...they wouldn't recognize me as a clergyman," he remarked. To them, a priest wears a black robe, a beard and a pectoral cross.

In traveling in the Soviet Union "you can go 25 miles without any special request," but you must indicate where you are going, how long you are staying, how you are traveling and when you plan to depart and return.

The Rev. Dion describes traveling there as "most discouraging. To organize a trip it takes weeks," he said.

He added that there is an annoying preoccupation with exactness in traveling time. If you say you plan to stay three days somewhere, you may not return before or after three days. You must remain exactly three days and then return.

"If they refuse you anything, you have no one to appeal to," he concluded.

After the talk the Rev. Dion showed several slides taken during his three year stay.

Provost Announces 29 Faculty Promotions

Twenty-nine faculty members have been promoted and six granted tenure by the University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees, Provost Oswald Tippo announced today.

John T. Conlon, was promoted from assistant dean to associate dean of the School of Business Administration. Thurlio F. Johnson, assistant professor, was named assistant dean in the same school. David P. Lawrence was promoted from assistant to associate dean of admissions.

Promoted to full professor from associate professor were: Harold D. Boutelle and Hans R. Fischer of the mathematics department, Hans C. Duus of chemical engineering, Charles R. Stumbo of food science and technology and John W. Zahradnik of agricultural engineering.

Religious Opportunity

Group Begins on Campus

Student Religious Liberals, better known as SRL has RSO standing as of this semester. This religious group connected with the Unitarian Society of Amherst plans to meet twice monthly on Sunday evenings.

The group is Unitarian-Universalist oriented, open to all those interested in a creative rational approach to religion and life. Meetings are not meant to be religious ceremonies but rather are planned around the interests of the members.

In the past they have had cost suppers with speakers including Dr. Gage, Dr. Janowitz, and Dr. Greenbaum. In October members attended a conference at Dartmouth College sponsored by the DRL.

Plans for the semester include Professor Henry Yost speaking on "Why I Chose Not to Be a Christian," Sunday, February 27, 1966, at 7:00 in the Worcester Room. Those interested in the organization are invited to come at 6:30 for the business meeting. Further plans include cost suppers in Farley Lodge.

Everyone is welcome at any meeting. The only requirements for membership are participation on some level in the four-college community and being between the ages of 17 and 27. Dues are $1.00 per semester. Anyone interested in further information contact Karen Shelley, President, 545-2609.

SMITHIES SWITCH

The Southern Student Exchange Program began this week as 17 Smith College students left Northampton on February 6 for schools in the South and 11 southern students arrived to spend a week at Smith.

The six schools participating in the exchange include the University of North Carolina at Greensboro, the women's branch of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill which has just become a four year college; and Centre College, Danville, Kentucky, a coeducational college of about 1,000 students.

Also participating are Berea College, Berea, Kentucky, a work-study school in Appalachia, where most of the students work to pay their way through college; Paul's College, Lawrenceville, Virginia; Talladega College, Talladega, Alabama; and Clark College, Atlanta, Georgia.

The Southern Student Exchange Program, organized by the students, is designed to provide a tangible means for students in both the North and South to compare views, culture, heritage and environment, firsthand. Each visitor stays in a college house with a student hostess with whom she attends classes, meetings, social events, and other college activities.

Students participating in the Exchange have no expenses except their transportation. The principal qualification required for an individual's participation in the program is a deep interest in furthering an understanding of the peoples, forces and issues which make up the present American scene.

On Monday evening, the southern visitors met and talked in Mrs. Thomas C. Mendenhall at formally with President and a gathering at the Mendenhall home.

Fourth in Three-Part Series

And the Times They Are A-Changing, Says Politella

by Dario Politella '47
(Ed. Note: This is the fourth in a three-part series by the Collegian editor-in-chief, 1947. The first three articles, in which Dr. Politella reminisced about his editorship, proved so popular that the Editors have prevailed upon him to round out the series by contemplating on what he would do as editor in 1966.)

Somewhere in this series, I wrote that the not-so-halcyon days of my editorship in 1947 "would have been better, had I known then about journalism what I know now."

On second thought, I'm not so sure. For in the almost 20 intervening years, I have been convinced that the ingredient for success is simply enthusiasm. So, no matter how much one learns about his profession, his success will have been marked by his enthusiasm. And we certainly had that in 1947.

If I were editor of the Collegian again, I would surround myself with enthusiastic staffers. They would be of the energetic calibre of Av Romm and Ed Cynarski, who hitch-hiked to Boston to cover our Big Story. And they would have their kind of enthusiastic imagination, which nosed us into history with the stuff of memories. One example is their choice of extension phone numbered 533 from which to report that S-533 had passed us into our new University status.

Were I given a second chance at the Collegian editorship, the difference would be more in how I'd do things than the things I would do.

Certainly, the same BIG STORIES still abound. But they are hidden in a community of some 10 times more students than we had in 1946-47. Dredging these stories would be more difficult and time-consuming. And the editor himself couldn't become as involved in them. Editors-1960s are too busy being administrators.

The New Breed spends much much time at the top levels of stories. Contemplating one's navel may well lead to wisdom and inner peace, but it restricts communication with readers. Editors need to become more involved with their staffs and their stories. Because they don't, we have few reporters on college newspapers. Everyone is an editor of some degree.

As a Modern Editor who can apply on-the-job training of some 20 years, I'm sure I would establish for myself a four-point goal.

First, I would study my readers to find out exactly who they are, how they read, what they need to read in a newspaper and what they want to read there (within limitations). I didn't need to do this as a small-time weekly editor for a community of about 1,200 students, since we all knew each other well.

The study would also include a self-evaluation of purpose. Therefore, I'd remember that Marquis Childs, the Washington columnist, told a group of student journalists in Indiana a couple of years ago that the function of a GREAT newspaper is "to comfort the afflicted and to afflict the comforted."

This Child-like philosophy is singularly appropriate to a newspaper catering to 12,000 anonymous young people who need to express themselves rebelliously. Within bounds of responsibility and accountability. I think it's good for them to have a vehicle for revealing their indignations (imagined and real). One thing for certain—faculty and administrators might never otherwise know that all is not heavenly on the camp.

Second, as a white-haired student editor, I would organize my reporters into a system of beats to cover the vast network of news sources which exist on every college campus. There are at least 100 sources of legitimate news which should be checked at least once a week.

Regularly-scheduled contacts by beat reporters who would of necessity become specialists in the subject area would inevitably yield a mother lode of information. The vital result: a satisfaction of the needs and desires of the reading campus community.

Third, I'd surround myself with the best potential writing and editing talent the campus has to offer. I'd start with flushing out of the freshman dorms every student who had ever worked on his (her) high school paper, yearbook or magazine. I'd turn myself into a kind of fraternity pledgmaster, who would supervise every comma the embryo staff would type in... encourage every contact with a news source... guide every reporter to the successful completion of his appointed round.

Fourth—until I had my organization so melded as to be able to achieve this best of all possible campus newspaper worlds, I'd cut down on the number of editions of the newspaper I'd publish. For I realize that I'd rather put out one excellent newspaper a week than three or four mediocre ones. There's no room here for the old saw, "If ya can't sing good, sing loud."

MASSACHUSETTS COLLEGIAN FORUM

EQUAL WORK RIGHTS

The state of Massachusetts proudly proclaims that she does not discriminate. Unlike our counterparts in the south we offer equal educational facilities, equal voting rights and equal employment rights—except at the University of Massachusetts.

The minimum work wage throughout the state is $1.25 an hour; at the University the work wage goes as low as $.90 an hour. Most state employed, non-professional workers are put under Civil Service and are protected from unfair practices by the Civil Service Laws; at the University there is no such protection for employees.

Perhaps the University feels that students are more financially secure than the rest of the state's population. This, obviously, is not true, since most student workers must prove financial need. Perhaps the state does not feel that the particular work is not worthy of the minimum wage. Again they are wrong as student labor in the dining commons and Hatch could in many cases be classified as heavy labor and deserves more than the minimum.

Or perhaps the University feels that its custodians, maintenance people, secretaries, and clerical workers do not desire the protection afforded all other state employees. This also, is obviously not true, as is shown by almost 500 signatures on a petition, requesting various changes in the present system of employment.

If laws and standards are to be made they must apply to all. Equality cannot exist in specific locations for selected people, for then it becomes discrimination.

Letters To The Editor

The Collegian editorial staff welcomes your comments and questions. It is requested, however, that all letters be typed at 60 spaces per line, and that only one side of the paper be used. All letters must be signed with your real name and address—withheld upon request. All letters should be addressed: Letters To The Editor, Collegian, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, Mass. Your cooperation will be appreciated.

O. K.!

To the Editor:

This morning I received five copies of the Collegian (all of the same issue). This is the first time I have received the paper since September.

It might interest you to note that I agree with Jerome Horvitz ("The Antiquity of Finals") and Bill Rodes ("Make Finals Optional"). For the past sixteen years I have excused the A students—as of today I shall announce to my senior class in Exercise Physiology that B students will also be excused. You see, this second thought just occurred to me—it was triggered by the COLLEGIAN.

Open Letter to Dr. Feldman

Dr. Feldman:

I FEAR THAT IT IS YOU who is suffering from "childlike misperceptions of our universe." Your articles displayed the behaviorist's typically limited concept of knowledge. You speak of knowledge as though reality were of one level and type only—that which is amenable to scientific investigation. And you wonder why so many people do not "wish to bring this method to bear on our more intimate social problems." You ask for the displacement of religion by "better knowledge systems"—specifically, the scientific method. But is this really such a superior curative of man's imperfect relations with man?

If you are familiar with Martin Buber's term, I-THOU (the social stance of the truly religious) and IT (the stance of the scientist), you may understand the nature of your error. Somehow you have construed the failure's in man's relation with man to be solely accountable to the realm of IT—that which may be described, measured, and observed. Granted, the physical ills such as epidemics, population explosions, and slums may be attacked via scientific advancement. But the fundamental crisis—today and since the dawn of technology—lies in individual relationships between individual persons. Man's tongue is becoming so knotted with "isms" that he is growing incapable of uttering the primary word — "I-THOU." And no amount of elaborate psychoanalysis, hypnotic suggestion, improved standards of living, or whatever, can alone enable a person to view his fellows in the "I-THOU" relationship. The act of addressing oneself lovingly to another human is ultimately irrational; it is art, not science. And the reality of that relation cannot be discovered or inspired by scientific procedure; science can help to clear the way for communication, but it can't prompt communication itself.

THE SPLENDID TECHNOLOGY which you would have even more splendid in order to save man from himself has—for all its wonders—already heavily incriminated its initiators by fostering an insidious process of dehumanization. The very malady which science claims it will cure—human misery—has been subtly aggravated by the curative. In what way? Certainly we have been expertly deodorized, sterilized, tranquilized, pasturized, etc. Our nerves have never been better drugged, our sex lives have been so free of responsibility, our bodies have never been so well-immunized, and so on and so on. But science has circumvented its allegedly social aim: it has oriented masses of human beings into mutual objectification. It-ification. We've become thing-ized. Even the bewildered and hurt parishioners of Amherst's Congregational Church were cutely thing-ized by your distinguished department's Santa Claus experiment. This bland usage of what to some is sacrosanct and perhaps even the mainstay of their emotional lives is an affront to dignity. Now, dignity can't be demonstrated through a litmus paper test—neither can those homilies of respect and compassion. But they are no less real than electron spin and osmosis.

Let me make it unmistakably clear that I, as one human being, refuse to be a thing. And I would dare to hope that more and more people might assert their disdain of thinghood. In effect, to protest and obstruct the wholesale encroachment of science upon those areas of human experience which sustain faith in the personal worth and preciousness of every human life. This encroachment includes unsolicited, indiscriminate experimentation on people who have a right to know who is using them and why.

DOES THIS SOUND LIKE AN APPEAL for man to be permitted to live in the fatuous, indulgent fantasy worlds of his chosen mysticism? That is not what I mean. What I am appealing for is an enlarged scope of our definition of reality. It takes as much moral and intellectual courage to burst the fetters of rigid scientific orientation as it requires to surrender myth to logic. Science is a means, but it must not become an end, as it is dangerously close to being. Science can make empirical judgements about experience, but it can never substitute for experiential reality. This reality is as respectable as that of atomic configurations. But the former is not accessible via the route to the latter. That is why science is not art.

The ability to love is not a science, it is an art. The capacities to dream, hope, persist, endure, and to wonder cannot be indoctrinated by facts. At best, they can only be inspired. Science does not enable—it impersonalizes. Science does not inspire—it organizes. Like every other "knowledge system"—it is limited. May each intellectually honest man worthy of his discipline have the modesty to acknowledge what it can and cannot do. Dr. Feldman—compassion cannot be formulated.

AN UNALLOYED SCIENTIFIC means of advancing human happiness ultimately defeats its purpose. Since this method utilizes the human subject, transforming him into an object, it promotes a philosophy of detachment, a dehumanizing attitude which already threatens contemporary man.

Eric Hoffer's view seems fitting here (Sat. Review of Lit. Feb., 1966):

"WHY SHOULD POWER CORRUPT THE INTELLECTUAL more than it does other types of humanity? One of the reasons is to be found in the assumption that education readies a person for the task of reforming and reshaping humanity—that it equips him to act as an engineer of souls and a manufacturer of desirable human attributes. Hence when power gives him the freedom to act, the intellectual will be inclined to deal with humanity as with material that can be molded and processed. He will strive to arrange things so that he will not be thwarted by the unpredictability and intractability of human nature. The anthropomorphism of the intellectual in power is not a function of his humanity. An elite of intellectuals is more vowed to the service of mankind or of a nation than any other elite. But a savior who wants to turn men into angels will be as much a hater of human nature as a monster who wants to turn them into slaves and animals. Man must be dehumanized, must be turned into an object, before he can be processed into something wholly different from what he is. It is a paradox that the idealistic reformer has a mechanical, lifeless conception of man's being. He sees man as something that can be taken apart and put together, and the renovation of the individual and of society as a process of manufacturing."

May the Robert Feldmans never come to power.

'GREEN' WATER

by JEROME HORVITZ, Co-chairman

Tomorrow the philanthropic hand of the Student Senate will be asked, once again, to dip into its pocket for funds to be appropriated for the Scuba Club. It is hoped this that this action will direct a driver of 'green' to this organization, and to all other 'smaller' organizations on campus.

It is an unfair situation when the more prestigious organizations are able to attain funds for operations with more ease than their smaller brothers. Should prestige or power determine the direction of the money banks? Or should membership, mode of activity, and accomplishment determine the direction?

By the Senate appropriating funds to the Scuba Club a precedent will undoubtedly be set so that other 'smaller' organizations can reap necessary funds for their existence. The dam should be opened. It is a drought year you know.

'International' mixer set to go!

by M. AARIF GHAYYUR

A monthly "international" mixer is the main new feature planned by the UMass International Club this semester.

The first mixer is scheduled for Friday, Feb. 25 at 8:00 p.m. in the Farley Club House behind Machmer Hall. Mixers from now on will be held on the last Friday of every month.

Both Americans and foreign students from Smith, Mt. Holyoke, and Amherst College will participate in the dance party.

The purpose of the program, according to club president Alladin Hashim, is to create better understanding among students from every corner of the world.

"The atmosphere," he said, "at the regular Wednesday coffee hours has been very congenial and relaxed; the same favorable setting and spirit should prevail at our 'international' mixer."

For this, Alladin feels that participants should come in an "informal" mood to really enjoy the evening and enhance international friendship.

Beside the mixer, programs concerning the "Land and People" series were finalized at the last cabinet meeting of the club.

In the following weeks, UMass students and Amherst residents will have the opportunity to see color slides and hear talks on the Philippines, Berlin, Malawi, Pakistan, Switzerland, Kenya, India, Israel, and the Bahamas, given by American and foreign students at the regular Wednesday coffee hours.

Nigeria Discussed

Underlying causes of the recent military takeover were discussed during the last Wednesday coffee hour by two Nigerian students.

Since the revolution is a shift of power from the northern to the southern region, the Nigerian students, Abdullah Ibrahim and Sylvanus Odurakwe, represented the two areas respectively.

Sylvanus Odurakwe thought the new regime would help eliminate the corruption which is rampant in all aspects of national life; whereas Ibrahim emphasized that assassination of Nigeria's Prime Minister, Sir Abubakar Tafawa Balewa, was a great national loss. Balewa was a respected and sincere national leader.

Exotic Pakistan Dances

Residents of Amherst and

UMass students will have the opportunity to watch the exotic dances and listen to the enchanting songs of Pakistan—the fifth largest country of the world (population-wise)—in the "Land and People" series on Wednesday, Feb. 16, at 6:15 p.m. in the Governor's Lounge, S.U.

The program has been arranged by the International Club and is the eighth talk in the series.

Mian Abdul Oayyur, a UMass graduate in engineering, will show color slides of the northern region of Pakistan, which is famous for its natural beauty. After the slides, there will be two color movies; one on the dances and songs of Pakistan and one on the city of Lahore. A short introductory talk will be given by M. Aarif Ghayyur, a graduate in sociology.

All are cordially invited to attend the program.

Resourceful... that's him!

by PHIL GOEPP, Feature Staff

Among the seemingly endless myriad of James Bond imitators, there has at last emerged a worthy competitor for the title "World's most worldly, ingenious, dangerous, romantic, versatile and resourceful spy."

He is Derek Flint, portrayed by James Coburn in the movie "Our Man Flint."

Facile in all forms of the martial arts, particularly Karate, and armed only with his ingenious cigarette lighter ("It performs 82 functions... 83 if you wish to light a cigar"), he sets out to do battle with the diabolical GALAXIE, an organization bent on world domination.

Throughout the picture, the viewer is treated to a flow of mechanical devices, astute observations, ingenious stratagems and gallant heroics issuing from the person of Mr. Flint.

If you have a pliable and tolerant imagination, this picture is highly recommended.

Looks like coffee house atmosphere at the "broken egg" as Barbara Webster, one of its originators, entertains.

Come "blow your shell"

by LOIS COHEN, Feature Editor

It was music, coffee, atmosphere, and pretzels with mustard at the opening of the broken egg coffee house last Friday night.

It was also SUCCESS to the group of energetic, enthusiastic, and hopeful UMass students who created, worked for, organized, and ran the basement coffee house with the idea of furnishing a place for students to go and "blow their shells" on Friday evenings after a long week of studying or...

"We want the people on campus to feel it's theirs," says Barbara Webster, who was one of the originators. She also worked on the setting-up of the two rooms in the basement of a house on North Pleasant Street where many people on campus did enjoy the place as their own Friday night.

Along with Barbara's singing and guitar playing, other entertainment was furnished by Ron Oakland, a UMass student.

Since the broken egg is completely for students, any donations in the art and decor line will be displayed. Anyone who can sing, play guitar or piano, and wants to entertain will be welcomed at any of the sessions.

Regular hours from now on will be on Friday nights from 8 to midnight. Future success of the coffee house will depend on students' enthusiasm and cooperation.

Being a non-profit organization, the broken egg cannot "live on customers alone."

There must be hosts and hostesses there to serve the custom-

Ron Oakland sings at the "broken egg" Friday night. ers. This can be as much fun as just sitting around there, and anyone interested in helping out will be welcomed.

The broken egg is open for you—if you have any questions, if you want to help, if you want to know more about it,—call Ron Oakland in 422 Greenough.

It's taken me 20 years to learn it—guess I'm a slow study. But that's what I'd if I had a second try at the Collegian editorship.

But times have changed. And the thrill now would be to guide the enthusiasm (that hasn't changed) of the host of honest-to-god reporters who would really be living it up. Only they wouldn't know at the time that it will never be quite the same when they themselves become white-haired editors, the second time around.

UM Press to Publish "The Lyman Letters"

The University of Massachusetts Press has announced the publication on Feb. 15 of The Lyman Letters: New Light on Emily Dickinson and her Family by Richard B. Sewall of Yale University.

First published as a special supplement in the Massachusetts Review, Prof. Sewall's study of the 30-year friendship between Joseph Bardwell Lyman and the Dickinson family adds significantly to the body of knowledge about the much-discussed Amherst poet, according to Leone A. Barron, director of the press.

Many a biographical puzzle is illuminated, including Emily's attitude toward her father and sister, her first reading of the Bible, her first sense of the power of words and her much-discussed enigmatic "terror since September."

Especially important, according to Mrs. Barron, are passages from Emily's letters to Joseph Lyman, which he copied into his letters to others. These "snatches" as he called them, are an important addition to the Emily canon.

PROF. SEWALL teaches English and is Master of Ezra Stiles College at Yale. He made his discovery through the alertness and generosity of a Yale student, Joseph Bardwell Lyman III, who had found the papers in the Lyman family archive.

Prof. Sewall has written extensively on literary and educational subjects. His book Vision of Tragedy has become one of the standard works on the subject.

The UMass Press, now in its second season, is devoted to publishing worthwhile scholarly and creative works that are often too specialized for commercial presses.

Recent publications include Come Out Into the Sun, by poet Robert Francis; Between Wars and Other Poems, by Anne Halley; and The Urbanization of Japanese Labor, 1868-1955, by T. O. Wilkinson.

Graduation was only the beginning of Jim Brown's education

Because he joined Western Electric

Jim Brown, Northwestern University, '62, came with Western Electric because he had heard about the Company's concern for the continued development of its engineers after college graduation.

Jim has his degree in industrial engineering and is continuing to learn and grow in professional stature through Western Electric's Graduate Engineering Training Program. The objectives and educational philosophy of this Program are in the best of academic traditions, designed for both experienced and new engineers.

Like other Western Electric engineers, Jim started out in this Program with a six-week course to help in the transition from the classroom to industry. Since then, Jim Brown has continued to take courses that will help him keep up with the newest engineering techniques in communications.

This training, together with formal college engineering studies, has given Jim the ability to develop his talents to the fullest extent. His present responsibilities include the solution of engineering problems in the manufacture of moly-permalloy core rings, a component used to improve the quality of voice transmission.

If you set the highest standards for yourself, enjoy a challenge, and have the qualifications we're looking for — we want to talk to you! Opportunities exist now for electrical, mechanical and industrial engineers, and for physical science, liberal arts and business majors. For more information, get your copy of the Western Electric Career Opportunities booklet from your Placement Officer. And be sure to arrange for an interview when the Bell System recruiting team visits your campus.

"My Fair Lady"

Winter Carnival Week '66 got off to a good start Monday night as the Class of 1967 presented a movie and fashion show.

A la "Broadway Premiere", the theme of this year's Winter Carny, "My Fair Lady" featured fashions, modeled by UMass' own lovely misses, that characterized the current trends in Winter and Spring fashions popular with the fair ladies of the collegiate world.

Accompanying the fashion show was a horror movie that featured a series of Edgar Allan Poe's favorite stories. "Tales of Terror" combined the best of Poe into a full length movie.

Monday evening marked the beginning of a week packed with events planned by the Class of 1967 to offer enjoyment to the entire University community. Included in the schedule of Broadway Premieres for the week are the basketball game with a half time show, the ball, fireworks, pancake breakfast, Ski trip and concerts.

Thirty-Six Areas Make Plans For Mental Health Centers

Reprinted from the Springfield Union

Calling for more community participation and planning in the area of mental health, Dr. Haskell R. Coplin, professor of psychology and clinical psychologist at the University of Massachusetts, addressed the 14th annual meeting of the Mental Health Center Association at Hotel Northampton Thursday evening.

Serve Smaller Areas

In a talk entitled "The Therapeutic Community," Dr. Coplin outlined plans for comprehensive community mental health centers serving smaller areas than the present state hospitals, and catering to the local needs of the smaller localities. Referring to the Massachusetts Mental Health Project, a recently completed survey of the needs and aims of the mental health services in the suggested establishment of 37 area mental health centers in state, he said the study group the commonwealth, each oriented toward the particular needs of the communities involved.

The proposed centers would have facilities for inpatient and outpatient clinics, children's services, day and evening care, rehabilitation of former patients, and other programs. They would be smaller than the present state facilities, and would be equipped to serve the less chronically ill patients. Under the project plan, the present state mental hospitals later would be converted into area mental health centers.

Dr. Coplin said that those areas which make progress toward improved mental health services through their own efforts usually receive more favorable treatment from legislative bodies granting funds. A coordination of local projects, he added, is a necessary basis for state or federal action.

The Mental Health Center Association opened a center in Holyoke in June. At the present time it is seeking to extend its services through the establishment of a "satellite" center in Northampton. It has obtained the use of a house on Chapel St. owned by the state hospital, and is equipping the house with the facilities necessary for an outpatient clinic. Staff members from the Holyoke Center will man the Northampton clinic for about a year, until the new project is firmly established.

The therapeutic community focuses attention on individual problems, Dr. Coplin said. The time of "warehousing the mentally ill into big, monolithic hospitals is over," he added. In the therapeutic community, interaction with all the members and the staff participating bring about a quicker return of the patient to community life, he added.

However, some problems do exist, the speaker said. The lack of funds from state and federal agencies is a hurdle, he said, but their budgets are due to increase soon. A major problem, and one of the most difficult to overcome, according to Dr. Coplin, is the stigma which is sometimes transferred to any institution treating mental problems.

The speaker concluded his speech with a call to members of the association to take the initiative in establishing and developing area mental health centers. He said that those who would start such centers should first define community needs as the residents see them, develop the resilience and autonomy necessary to initiate meaningful local programs, and not to be satisfied with programs modelled exactly after those used in other needs.

Two UMass Students Hurt in Auto Collision

Reprinted from the Springfield Union

Two UMass students suffered facial injuries in a two-car collision Sunday morning and were taken from the University Infirmary by the town ambulance to Cooley Dickinson Hospital, Northampton.

Eugene L. Bass, 18, of Main St., Amherst, was going north on North Pleasant St., and at the intersection of Fearing St. had a head-on collision, according to the police report, with an au-who was driving south. Miss Lois Manierow, 19, of 176 Colbert St., Worcester, a passenger in the Olsen machine, suffered facial injuries.

Bass also suffered facial injuries. He and Miss Manierow were given first aid at the University Infirmary and then taken to Cooley Dickinson Hospital for further treatment.

Olsen did not report any personal injuries. Both machines had to be towed. Special Officer John Taylor investigated.

Student Vote Not Needed For Hatch Expansion

Expansion of the basement facilities in the Student Union are not subject to student vote as indicated in the cutline beneath the picture on page three of Monday's issue.

Funds to be expended are University funds and are subject, therefore, only to approval of the Student Union Governing Board and the Board of Trustees. Both bodies have given their approval.

The proposed increases of food prices in the Hatch reported in the Friday front page story are necessary, the SUG board reported, because 40 per cent of the cost in labor.

Mermen, Tracksters, Sextet in Action Today

by GLENN BRIERE

Although the UMass athletic teams are coming into the home stretch of their winter schedules, there is still plenty of action left on the sports scene.

THE BASKETBALL team has five games remaining. On Thursday night they will host the UNH team at 8, with a Winter Carnival halftime show. Then on Saturday, they travel to UConn for a return match which will be available locally on TV at 2 on Channel 22. On Tuesday, powerful St. John's invades the Cage to meet the Redmen at 8, preceded by a big frosh game against Leicester Jr. at 6. The last two games will be away, at Holy Cross on Feb. 24 and at Maine on the 26th.

THE VARSITY hockey team has five games left. On Saturday they host a strong UNH team at Amherst's Orr Rink starting at 2. After a match at Vermont on Feb. 22, the pucksters return home for a game against MIT on Fri., Feb. 25 at 2. The next day they travel to Norwich, and on Tue., Mar. 1, they host Colgate, one of the best teams in the East, starting at 7. The frosh will play Amherst in a home game on Feb. 17 at 7.

THE UMass swimming and wrestling teams have all home meets remaining. The mermen meet WPI tonight at 7:30, Bowdoin on the 25th at 8, and MIT on Mar. 1 at 3. All of these meets will be held in the Boyden Pool. The matmen host WPI on Saturday at 2:30, Dartmouth on next Wednesday at 2:30, and URI on Mar. 1 at 8. These wrestling meets will be held in the Boyden Auxiliary Gym.

Three away meets fill up the remaining varsity gymnastics schedule. On Saturday the team travels to Navy, on Mar. 22 to Springfield, and on Mar. 26 to Syracuse. The track team also has three away meets, against Tufts, Northeastern and UConn.

St'kbridge Shooters Split with Ivies

Firing at the Yale University Range, the Stockbridge Rifle Team suffered a loss to the Yale freshmen. The match was a nip and tuck affair through the first two relays, but in the third and final relay the Yale Pups pulled away to widen the victory margin to sixteen points. High pun for the match was Voutas of the Stockbridge team with 226 points.

Bouncing back, the team invaded Cambridge and came home with topscore in its match with the Harvard freshman team. The team effort of the Stockbridge-men produced a winning margin of eleven points. Don Enselek was the hot gun for Stockbridge.

Skiers Conquer Flu, Master Vt. Slopes

The UMass Ski Team had a tough week end in Vermont. Leaving Amherst with half the team sick with the flu, the team hit a 300 pound boulder which had fallen into the road from the steep rocky road bank. Though there were no injuries to the team, first aid to the car used up several hours of sleep and was followed by a flat tire caused by the accident. The sick team, full of pills, was put to bed about 12:00 o'clock for a restless night.

NEXT DAY Collin Garstang '68 was too sick to make a good second run in the Princeton two run slalom and finished 53 out of over 90 skiers. Tom Pittendreigh finished 5th, Fred Foster '67 finished 8th, Co-Captain Don Piezza '66 and Pete Plastridge '66 finished 16th and 23rd. To place UMass in second place for the day. Hanno Fontaine '68 in his first varsity race finished 45th. The first four teams by order of finish were 1. B.U., 2. UMass, 3. Iortheastern, and 4. Tufts. Seven other teams also ran.

With gallons of fruit juice, cough syrup, more pills, and a 10 hour night's sleep, the team was up for the Brown U. Giant Slalom at Glen Ellen on Sunday.

PITTENDREIGH CRASHED through with a fourth. Garstang was eighth, after making one "pit stop" to get gas and check the air in his tires. Fred Foster was 9th to complete his fourth race within the top 12, his first year in varsity competition. Hanno Fontaine finished 34th to round out the UMass top four. Co-Capt. Piezza had a brilliant run, but the timers misused him and he had to re-run. He could not do it a second time. There is a large scar in the mountain and a smaller one on Piezza's chin.

The order of team finishers were 1. New England College, 2. B.U., 3. UMass, 4. Northeastern, 5. B.C., 6. Princeton, 7. Tufts, 8. Brown, 9. Amherst, and 10. A.I.C.

THE WIN-LOSS ratio now stands at 3 wins and losses, and the 7 UMass team stands second in the eleven college league. UMass Winter Carnival races against the same colleges will be held at Mount Snow on Sat., Feb. 19 at 10:30 A.M. and Sunday, Feb. 20 at Thunder Mountain. UMass hopes for the win which has so far eluded them at the Winter Carnival Races.

IM Report

by DAVE JARNES

Monday's basketball activity was rather light, and the only significant game saw the Baker Barracudas edge out the Baker Buffaloes 35-29 to gain a tie for first place with the Webster Rams.

In a spirited game, the Greenough Garfields nipped the Greenough Grants, 39-35, in a battle for first place. A basket by Bill Thomas, who led all scorers with 14 points, broke a 35-35 tie in the last minute.

LCA SHOWED impressive balance in whipping a good TEP team 59-43. QTV jumped on winless SAM to the tune of 66-27 as Skip Hall hooped 29.

In independent games the Hot Rods topped the Shlubs 63-44 and the Midgets bombed the Leftovers 62-24 behind Fitzgerald's 22 points.

FIVE CRUCIAL games highlight tonight's card. The Webster Rams play the Baker Barracudas in a playoff for the north league championship. ZN battles KS for the fraternity title while LCA plays AEP for third place in the IFC. The undefeated Philosophers and the mighty Untouchables will meet to see who plays the National League finalist, which will be determined by a playoff between the Moody Blues and the Zeros.

WRESTLING tournament entries must be in the intramural office by this Friday at 5 p.m.

Tom Pittendreich shows the driving form in the Princeton slalom which won him fifth place in that event.

R. Lewis Lashes Broadway

by NANCY ABRAMS
Feature Reporter

"The Broadway audience is . . . corrupt, stupid, fat, and lazy."

"Broadway is a jungle." So said Robert Lewis, who gave a humorous and frank DVP lecture Wednesday night on "Theatre—Show Business or What?"

Mr. Lewis, a founder of the Actors Studio in New York, an actor, a college teacher, and a director with a production entitled On a Clear Day You Can See Forever now playing on Broadway, is very pessimistic about the professional theatre in this country.

HE FEELS one problem of the theatre is that "an actor who might be very good in a part almost never gets it."

The actors who get parts are the show-offs who make a good first impression but have no ability to develop a good characterization. An actor with honesty and integrity doesn't fit in with the rest of the cast and is the first to be fired.

"We have the best actors in the world, but they cannot do classical plays or plays from another period or country. The accent has been so much on personal truth that we find ourselves in the greatest dilemma of our theatrical lives. We have to combine giving a truthful presentation of emotion with the style of the play being done.

"ACTORS have made fetishes of aspects of Stanislavski's theory (the so-called Method Acting) and ignored other aspects that go into making a good performance. The characteristic behavior of these actors limits them rather than frees them as a good technique should. These actors make the theatre smaller than life, which is worse than the old-time overly-theatrical actors who made the theatre larger than life."

"It's a terrible tragedy when Broadway actors go to Hollywood and never come back. Marlon Brando was one of our

Senate Eats Up Transferable Meal Tickets

by KAREN ROSE
Senate Editor

The Student Senate resolved Wednesday night to recommend to the Board of Trustees that meal ticket privileges be left to the discretion of the ticket owners.

This resolution, if approved by the Trustees, will enable students to sell, lend or use their meal tickets as they see fit.

The possibility of a ticket price increase was discounted when Senators John Greenquist (Thatcher) and Bette Chambers (V.M.S.) pointed out that the Commons came out with a $40,000 profit last year and thus could easily absorb a loss.

SENATOR BOB CRIPPS

(Mills) was quick to point out that ticket prices rose only two years ago with the promise of larger portions, better food and seconds.

It was further pointed out that in the new Southwest Commons, where all residents have to buy tickets, the Commons is having some financial difficulty. "You can require a student to buy a meal ticket, but you can't force him to use it," commented Senator Arnie Kaufman (Greenough).

THE SCUBA CLUB was voted a $1,090 appropriation for the purchase of a high pressure air compressor after Senator Mike Garjian (Southwest C) pointed out that this group would go out of existence without Senate aid.

The tentative academic calendar for 1967-68, as drawn up by the Academic Affairs Committee of the Faculty Senate, received a vote of support from the Student Senate at the meeting.

The calendar changes (below) include more reading days and the elimination of the present lame duck week between Christmas vacation and finals.

SENATOR BURT FREEDMAN'S resolution to create an ad-hoc committee to formulate a specific detailed proposal for the integration of Stockbridge students with the four year students passed unanimously.

Also at Wednesday's meeting one new Senator, Herb Lach (Fraternities) was sworn in and two Senators Mark Tobin (Wheeler) and Richard Wimberly (Brett) resigned.

Musgrave to Propose Revamp of Collegian

Collegian staff members will meet Sunday evening at 6:30 to discuss a proposal for the realignment of editorial structure.

Dr. Arthur Musgrave, professor of journalism, will present his plan to reconstruct The Collegian. Musgrave says that he has a plan that will provide a first class paper without exploitation of editors or staffers.

IT IS IMPERATIVE that staffers attend as the acceptance of the proposal would necessitate a different format for the March 3 election of editors.

Peter Hendrickson, editor-in-chief, will defend the current system and explain how a compromise might be reached between the two plans, he said today.

AT THE CONCLUSION of the meeting the Elections Procedures Committee will meet briefly to discuss qualifications for candidates. Nominations will open next week and close shortly before the election.

All elected positions will be open to the campus undergraduate body but only the staff will vote on the candidates.

MUSGRAVE'S PROPOSAL would create 13 co-equal editors to grant more rewards for those in managerial positions. He said that this system would stabilize the staff and attract more qualified upperclassmen. He would have each editor be an editor-in-chief of his particular section of the paper. Thus each paper would have a news, sports, feature and editorial editor who would have both authority and responsibility for his particular issue.

The current system provides an overall editor for each department with day editors for the individual issues.

Staff members will have the opportunity to discuss the various systems and voted on their future at the Sunday meeting.

Students cast their ballots in yesterday's Student Senate election for Class of '67, '68 senator-at-large.

Classes Still On

Flu Bug Bugs Campus

by FRED PILON, Staff Reporter

"I hear there's no classes on Monday. Everybody told me that Dr. Gage asked Pres. Lederle to call off classes so that the Infirmary could give flu shots in the Student Union," so spoke the unknowing.

"Pres. Lederle and I haven't discussed the subject," said Dr. Gage, referring to the possibility of calling off classes due to flu.

There is no serious flu epidemic on campus, but Dr. Gage reports an "increase in respiratory infection, slightly above the seasonal number that we expected."

"Our occupancy in the Infirmary is only slightly over what it was last semester at this time, however," Dr. Gage continued, "this increase of about 10% corresponds with a 10% increase in the student population."

Dr. Gage expects that Winter Carnival weekend will increase the total number of in-patients, and quipped, "We'll have a banner week next week."

Should a severe epidemic of any type strike the campus, the Infirmary can handle 120 in-patients before being forced to utilize other facilities. In 1957, when an Asian Flu epidemic struck campus, the Student Union and Knowlton House were used to house patients.

Regarding the expected increase of patients next week, Dr. Gage feels that the Infirmary will be well prepared. "We have additional nursing help lined up so that we can call them."

Should a severe flu epidemic occur at this time, Dr. Gage pointed out that calling off classes on Monday would accomplish nothing. The only action possible that would be effective is the cancelling of all Winter Carnival events, for flu spreads rapidly when numerous people congregate.

Since there are 60 patients presently in the Infirmary, visiting hours have been curtailed at times in the past week. However, Dr. Gage suggests that anyone wishing to visit a patient should call the Infirmary after six o'clock to find out if visiting hours are being held. The staff will have decided at that time whether it is prudent or not to have visiting hours.

Service Indispensable

ARCON "Here To Stay"

by RITA GOTOWALA
Staff Reporter

Campus Guides are not only conspicuously aware of just where the University of Massachusetts is expanding, but also of the absolute need of their guide service here. The exceptional enthusiasm that spurred the formation of APXON is still felt by the Administration and participating students.

BILL NAGENT, a Senior at the University last year and a member of Beta Kappa Phi, got the ball rolling for the formation of this Greek male guide service.

The idea was first brought to the attention of the Inter-Fraternity Council who helped to pass it on to the Administration. Dr. Noffsinger, coordinator of student activities and Ken Suid, assistant to the provost, gave added impetus to the idea and assisted in the interviews last spring.

After a convocation for all interested Sophomore men, interviews for 200 men were scheduled. On Student Leaders Night last year 19 Sophomore men were "tapped" and prepared to begin a rigorous orientation before the 1965 fall semester began.

TWO DAYS before classes started last fall, the Guides attended various meetings with the Dean of Women, the Dean of Men, the Provost and various administrators from the Admissions office.

Dan Melley of the University News Service compiled a Fact Book for the members of APXON which includes the cost and history of all buildings on campus, the number of students here, pertinent geographical statistics of the campus and a historical perspective of the University. The group utilizes the data from this book whenever they conduct their bus tours of campus.

Herb Lach, a member of Kappa Sigma and Chairman of APXON, admits the tremendous support from the Administration. Buses and drives for tours are supplied by the Maintenance Department. This department constructed the birch booth in the Student Union lobby which is the center of operations for the Guides. Here the various members schedule tours from 1:30 to 2:30 p.m. on weekdays and from 9:00 a.m. to 12:00 p.m. on Saturdays. Most Guides devote at least two hours a week to their organization.

While the Guide is behind the booth he is willing to give directions and pass on information about the University in addition to scheduling tours. According to one member, Rick Molander, Zeta Nu, "The Guides know just about as much as anybody does about campus."

THEIR SERVICE is indispensable. Last semester a total of 1,350 people were conducted on tours. Members of these tours not only included the High School guests, but also new members of the faculty, the faculty of UMass Boston, fraternity, sorority and dormitory housemothers, administrators' wives, legislators, educators, and members of the press. 85% of these 45 minute tours were bus tours, while the remainder were conducted in the visitors' own cars.

Al Hoban, a Guide from Q.T.V., regards the organization as "excellent . . . worthwhile . . . necessary".

The members themselves are impressed with the enthusiasm of such a new group and their already certain success can chiefly be attributed to the spirit.

What can be said of the future of APXON? At least five of the present members are willing and will continue on next year. If they do, the Guides will be a Junior-Senior group. The problems of new selection and term of service are two which the group faces now.

Fortunately for UMass it looks like the Guides are here to stay and function as an integral part of the University's student services.

Reorganization Planned For Interdorm Forum

Plans for reorganization of the Men's Interdorm Forum were discussed at a meeting of the Student Senate Men's Affairs Committee held on February 7.

In addition to the members of the committee both Mr. Brooks of the Dean of Students Office and Mr. Burke from the Dean of Men's Office were present.

Chairman Vin Puglia cited the need for representation as the main cause for forum reorganization. Student Senator John Greenquist emphasized the need for arousing student interest in campus activities.

The forum was originated five years ago to coordinate interdorm activities but has since become relatively inactive due to the apathy of those involved, according to Puglia.

Puglia stressed the potential role of the Forum as a liaison between the dormitories and administration—an integrator of social events between men's and women's dorms and an exchange of ideas and problems within the dorms.

The SWAP conference revealed that 20% of the males on campus are members of fraternities. These fraternities have an effective coordination of activities and it is hoped that the dorms can adopt a similar system. The possibility of working with the Women's Interdorm Council has also been discussed.

Mr. Burke stressed the importance of assessing present opinion concerning the revamping of the Forum to assure the willingness of students to work for the success of this forum.

At a meeting held last week the Forum discussed its own plans for rejuvenation and decided to invite a member from Women's Interdorm Council to its next meeting.

Students Baked By Heat
In Southwest Commons

by Mike Ross

Jane Schmahner and Pat Gardner of Melville House didn't know what to expect when they entered the new Southwest Commons on that cold January 31 morning. It's not what they did find but what they didn't find in the new dining commons that causes comment. As the Commons Bulletin stated " . . . during the first few weeks there will be a few things missing."

Thus Jane and Pat found that the chairs, tables, curtains and carpets were not there! Someone had realized that chairs and tables were necessary, so furniture was provided by the School of Advanced Design Research, e.g., tables with advanced single-body units construction, with finely contoured and wisely placed legs for maximum seating comfort and chairs aptly designed to facilitate effortless perambulation through the labyrinth of tables.

Pat and Jane no longer needed their coats since they were inside the Commons, for, as the Commons Bulletin prudently stated, "the heating system is in the process of being adjusted; at the present it is too warm inside . . ." Stewed prunes took on a new look.

STUDENTS WERE pleased to note that the new commons was provided with semi-automatic bread dispensers. Students actuated the mechanism and a member of the staff handed them a slice of bread.

Moving down the line past the main course Jane and Pat's fellow connoisseurs didn't fail to notice the sudden chasm which robbed many students of their gourmet delights.

A STUDENT POLL revealed that students were both enthusiastic and optimistic.

Concerning the new commons, students commented that there is no finer dining facility in the area. The poll established that six hundred girls approved and the remaining two hundred Southwest residents were in favor by the majority.

As one observer put it, after such a short period of "breaking in", it is good to see the commons crew operating as swiftly and efficiently as the tray conveyor.

greatest actors. Now he's a bum. He's a tycoon—owns a factory. It's like losing our national treasures.

ANOTHER PROBLEM . . . of Broadway, according to Mr. Lewis, is the quality of the plays being written. "Good writers aren't writing for the theatre. Why should they spend two years of their life on a play that someone will ruin in three days? Off-Broadway is just like Broadway, only they don't pay as much. No artist can work unless he has the privilege of failing and still being considered an artist."

The outspoken director also complained about the audiences who go to Broadway plays. "The audience is so corrupt, so stupid, benign, fat, and lazy after these years of being brainwashed that I don't know what will save them. They just sit there waiting for the dirty parts."

Mr. Lewis feels that college theatre is the only hope for saving the theatre as art. "Broadway," he mourned, "doesn't have a prayer at the moment."

by MARIE FLANDERS, Staff Reporter
According to Mr. Robert M. Agard, Asst. Librarian of Readers' Services, "the University Library is trying to balance the needs of both the undergraduates and the graduates."

"It is difficult to build a good library, for one can only get materials as they become available," he commented.

Agard explained that UMass's emphasis changed around 1950. Previously, the Library was well equipped only with volumes concerning agriculture, chemistry and entomology.

PRESENTLY, the Library is trying to build a strong liberal arts collection. Even with a tremendous amount of money, it would be impossible to quickly reach the complexity of schools which, for over 100 years, have had the same curriculum.

The library could easily add new volumes, but the backlog, which is important for a good research library, is hard to find and expensive.

There are about 395,000 volumes in the Library. Of these, 50,000 - 75,000 being bound periodicals, do not circulate. Of the remaining, 85 - 90% circulate.

Compared with statistics taken from the fiscal year 1963-64 (the latest available), Amherst College had 365,399 volumes, the University of Michigan had 3,224,063, and the University of Illinois had 3,747,871.

Because of a slowdown in the budget, this year the Library added only 60,000 volumes. The slow down is due to the inability of the State Legislature to pass a tax bill.

A NEW EXTENSION is planned for 1970-71. The present library building will be remodeled to serve as a central service for undergraduates.

Hopefully, this section, to serve the basic needs of the undergraduates, will have open stacks. There is also talk of smaller branches in each of the dormitory complexes.

A twenty-two story, two million volume library is also planned to serve largely for graduates, faculty, and Central Services Offices.

It is the philosophy of the Library staff, however, that "any student who needs to use the materials in this new library, and can demonstrate need for it, can use it," Agard explained.

Before the present new wing was added, the Library had open stacks. They were closed, however, to provide a more practical arrangement for such a growing student body. With the present layout, it would be impossible to reopen them.

WITH OPEN STACKS, there was a great loss of books, and the shelves were in poor condition. Now, only about 50-75 books are lost by students a year. From 200-300 "just plain disappear."

About $2,000-$3,000 in fines are collected yearly. Contrary to popular belief, fines can accumulate only to $5 per book. Both fines and lost book money are turned over to the General of the Commonwealth in Boston.

IN REGARD to the faculty's privilege to keep books indefinitely, an inventory last May found 4,000 books out. Mr. Agard said that "there is no book available to faculty that students can't use under some circumstance."

If a student wants a book which has been out for two weeks, the faculty member is asked to return it. This is usually successful, although sometimes, especially before a vacation, there is a time shortage.

Only in about six cases has the faculty been allowed to keep a book that a student wants. The faculty is required to bring all books into the library once a year.

Study hours have been extended this year which leaves the study rooms and reserve desk open on Saturday night until 10 p.m. and the library opening on Sunday at 1 p.m.

ACCORDING to Agard, "there has never been need for full services on Saturday night." Because the budget situation is so tight, there are not enough funds to further increase the hours.

Many students study in the library because they find it much quieter than their dormitories or houses. Some, however, find it a little too noisy and crowded, especially at the time of final exams.

Still, others go to the library to avoid falling asleep while studying, or to have the atmosphere of other people around. One student suggested that isolation booth, or at least partitions be put up to make smaller, quieter study areas.

In general, the students seemed to feel that the members of the library staff are very willing to assist, and that the study facilities are satisfactory.

Phony Schools?!

Better Business Bureau says . . . Swindlers fleece the gullible with promises of quick education and instant jobs . . . Many of these schools promise fantastic earnings after only six weeks or less of training. They often give "aptitude tests" and you easily score "above average" . . . The Bureau has one example of a man who went to a training school and graduated eight weeks later with "high honors."

. . . This man then asked the placement office of the school to help him find a job . . . He was told to contact employment agencies . . . This man finally realized that he was one of thousands being gypped every year by education quacks who promise high salaries and glamorous jobs in a wide variety of fields . . . Phony schools charge exorbitant fees, offer superficial training by incompetent instructors and promise immediate placement in jobs . . .

Before you enroll in any training school, check its reputation and background. Do not be pressured into signing contracts or making down payments until you have all the details.

CAMPUS RENEWAL

By PATRICIA S. WINSHIP

The campus has been an exciting place to be this fall, with numerous topics bearing directly on student life being discussed. Women's rights, the Dining Commons wage raise, the dossiers, etc. come to mind immediately. It has been exciting, too, to see what concerted effort on the part of individuals united in common cause can do. This has been a healthy reply to those who talk of student apathy. My own undergraduate days last year are too close for me not to react defensively to such charges. I don't deny that there are apathetic students, just as there are apathetic professors, but that is only part of the story.

The other part is that there are factors that can help to induce apathy. A sense of powerlessness is certainly one. More subtle than that are tokenism and paternalism. These three things operate to a high degree here at the University and seduce more than just the student body into believing that some of the most denigrating aspects of university life operate in their own interests.

Item: The House Councils are set up to serve the purposes of both advisor, and policeman—a bad marriage if ever there was one. If the counselors are given free room and/or board, are subject to the approval of the Head of Residence (rather than being elected—by their peers), they are, in fact, paid representatives of the administration, not the student body. In its operation, the House Council meets secretly with or without the Head of Residence in attendance. This is in the name of protecting the student. Therefore, the student, unable to bring any witness or advocate with him, is not provided with the safety factor of an open hearing or with a known body of law under which he is tried. This is true all the way up to the University Discipline Board. This is protection? More like star chamber proceedings.

Item: In a variety of instances, student groups have petitioned the proper administration officials in order to present their claims. When change has been effected, they have been told they could not take any credit for it. This is clearly an attempt to deprive them of any feelings of their own effectiveness and fails to recognize the right of students to participate in decisions affecting their lives.

Students are expected to leave the University as responsible human beings with adequate social conscience and some commitment to the body politic. They are supposed to learn in the total University context which means both within and without the classroom, yet can we possibly teach responsibility by denying it? Faced with the enormous problems connected with the growth of the University, it would seem in the best interests of all to promote the development of student self-government that is truly that and not in name only. Any body has its creative capacity emasculated at the outset through suppression of its power.

Not the Berkeley Type

By BETSY SINGER

There seems to be a great deal of misunderstanding among the majority of our student body about Dean Field's proposed housing changes. The general consensus seems to be that student reaction is encouraged for the sole purpose of "letting the air out of the balloon before it explodes." This is an entirely unjustified and ungrounded assumption.

First of all, we must realize that the administration has no obligation to consult the students regarding housing changes. In the past they have decided upon and enacted changes in men's and women's residence halls without consulting students.

Such was the case two years ago when Thatcher was converted to a men's dormitory. Such could very well be the case today. Not only has the administration given us the opportunity to express our opinions about the proposal, but they have spent many long hours in meetings and conferences with students and amongst themselves. It seems to me ridiculous to think that the administration would waste so much of its time, as well as students', if they know that they were going to enact the original proposal.

The Time Wasters

By KAREN ROSE, Senate Editor

The Student Senate, despite its campus leader image, is degenerating into little more than a course in extemporaneous speech.

Recent Senate meetings have lasted into the early hours of the morning, not because of the tremendous work load incurred by bills brought to the floor, but rather because the Senators have failed to do the work expected of them.

The time to read the agenda and question the proposed bills is not on the floor during the meeting. This practice is by far the most time consuming and senseless one the senators have adopted in recent months.

Among the remaining time wasters the Senate chooses to give irrelevant analogies to explain bills on the floor. This felony is compounded by the number of examples stated.

Practices otherwise considered part of parliamentary procedure become spite moves in the hands of the Senate. A roll call vote is no longer taken to clarify the votes of the senators but rather to embarrass individuals. The roll call itself further degenerates into a contest to see who can pack the most emotion in his 'aye' or 'nay'.

The responsibility of controlling the Senators lies with the president who has done an admirable job. Unfortunately, President Dacey, when recognizing a person on a parliamentary point cannot always foresee how this person is going to use or abuse this privilege.

The Student Senate has a job to do. It is expected to represent the student body with some degree of intelligence, interest, and maturity. The time to start is now.

"Caesura Rots?"

To the Editor:

Every year the Editorial board of Caesura comes under critical attack by various students who maintain that the magazine labors under a nepotism which is unfair to the majority of the student body. We feel it our particular duty to reply to the letter entitled "Withering Heights," which appeared in the 14 February issue of the Collegian.

The anonymous writer of this letter maintains that according to his standards of literature, "Caesura rots," but nowhere does he indicate his standard of literature and nowhere does he intelligently criticize the work published in Caesura against this presumed standard. "Pseudo-intellectual garbage," which is the term he uses to describe Caesura, apparently represents the apotheosis of his critical ability. Sophomoric paragraphs employing cute colloquialisms sound impressive but say nothing.

For each issue Caesura receives approximately 250 manuscripts to be considered for publication. But of this figure poetry usually outnumbers prose 20 to 1. A university is in a sad creative state when out of 10,000 students only 2 1/2% bother to contribute to their literary magazine. It is an even sadder fact that from these 250 manuscripts only a handful are worthy of publication.

The Editorial Board of Caesura attempts to recruit the best new critical and creative talent on campus and does not hinder their efforts to publish along with other established members of the university community.

All material is judged anonymously (having been coded by number by a non-voting manuscript secretary) and if a small coterie of authors repeatedly finds publishing space in the magazine, then it is because the Board follows a qualitative rather than a quantitative standard. To implement our anonymous critic's plan to consider submissions by their authors in preference to their quality would negate the present system of anonymous consideration and necessitate a lowering of the magazine's quality.

Contrary to what the writer contends, there are no "unsung heroes" on the staff of Caesura, unless the anonymous critic himself is a would-be hero. If his disgruntled stance resulted from a Caesura rejection of his work, then he has our condolences, our possible suggestions to improve his writing, and even our encouragement to resubmit.

Should the writer wish to be objectively critical of the magazine, to discuss legitimate grievances, the Editors would be more than willing to talk with him. But Caesura will never profit by the inane criticism of those who sit by with nothing more to do than "watch with bated breath and spastic nausea" the attempts of a portion of the student body to produce a quality literary magazine.

Dr. Feldman Replies

Sirs:

I was pleased to note Genevieve Reall's reply to my comments because she proves my point so well. Also, I was amused by the paradox of her inquisitorial and strident defense of love.

She states that "the fundamental crisis today . . . lies in individual relationships between individual persons." Ignoring the redundancy of the statement, I think she means that people don't get along with each other. Further she implies that science can't help matters much; and indeed, science has encouraged this predicament in the first place, "by fostering an insidious process of dehumanization" as she put it. She even accuses me of being a partner to "(my) distinguished department's Santa Claus experiment in a local church." While our department is certainly distinguished, it had nothing to do with that dim witted episode.

The important point, however, is that she categorically denies that interpersonal relationships are a legitimate matter for scientific investigation. She admits that physical things like epidemics and overpopulation can be studied objectively, but holds that "the act of addressing oneself lovingly to another human is ultimately irrational; it is art . . ."

Now, the central point of my argument was that we are not making much headway in certain problem areas because of the persistence of the mistaken belief that, in Miss Reall's terms, "love, the capacities to dream, hope, persist, endure, and to wonder" emanate sui generis from what is called the human spirit. This antimistic notion generally leads to a further belief that those attributes can be encouraged or restored by exhortation, incantation, "by refusing to be a thing," and possibly lessons in art.

I doubt that Miss Reall objects to being a thing, or thinks she is dehumanized when she is told that she is probably lacking certain antibodies and ought to have some polio vaccine, but she apparently resents being told that her thinking needs a little up dating.

As I said, the notion of freedom and individuality stem from ignorance of what causes what. The aim of a science of human behavior is merely to seek out and accurately state the antecedents to such things as love between some individuals and explain its lack between individuals and explain its lack between some others. To equate this modest aim with a "wholesale encroachment of science upon those areas of human experience which sustain faith in the personal worth and preciousness of every human life," is prejudice and reasoning that is pathetic. It is pathetic because in the name of love and the preciousness of life, Miss Reall obstructs an intelligent approach to them and commits them to the realm of ghosts and goblins.

Dept. of Religion?

Sir:

There certainly should be full and open discussion of the place of a department of religion in a university.

It will be important to be clear about one thing from the beginning: there is no obvious constitutional block. Not only has none arisen in the very numerous instances so far of such departments in state colleges and universities; it is hard to see how academic instruction in religious studies could be unconstitutional, especially considering the Supreme Court's 1963 decision in this area. So let us not waste time here.

It probably is equally clear to everyone that such a department will serve the ends, not of religious bodies, nor of religion in general, but of the University. Doubtless religious bodies have a stake in the matter, as does society as a whole; but the decision belongs solely to the University faculty, administration, and Trustees. The only consideration should be simply how to further our common aim of making the best University possible.

In my view that goal does entail a department of religious studies. Its faculty should be selected according to the same standards as all others are, and then left free to pursue their discipline, in a manner appropriate to it, for the same purpose as guides all other faculty and students in our common work: that is, the developing of increasingly mature, sensitive, and acute inary 14, he stated that "the administration realizes that students have an awareness of their position in the campus community, and that, if students are not allowed to express their opinion, a Berkeley-type situation could result." Nothing could be farther from the truth. If a Berkeley-type riot were to occur, it would be more likely to take place if student opinion were encouraged and then ignored, rather than if it were merely not considered. As a result of a result of the proposal, students have crystallized their views and have become committed to a cause. Now that they are involved, they are more prone to a Berkeley type riot if their interests and desires go completely unheeded, than they would be if a statement of definite housing changes were suddenly decreed. I hate to be cynical, but I honestly and sincerely believe that the University of Massachusetts students do not "have an awareness of their position in the campus community," as Mr. Zalkind says. We do not have students of an intellectual caliber comparable to those at Berkeley. Among the vast majority of our students there is no intellectual commitment. Look around sometime. Talk to your peers about international, national, or even local problems. Little do they generally know or even care about the pressing issues of the day. As much as it bothers me to admit it, there are undoubtedly very few students on our campus who have any sort of commitment to their community, and who care enough to protest those regulations and rulings they feel are unjust.

Not Berkeley Type . . .

For those of you who still are unconvinced by my argument, I must present one further point. The proposal is presently in the process of being changed. Since the proposal was released many things have been made evident. One is that the Stockbridge students do not want to move as a unit, but desire to be integrated with university students. Therefore, when the proposal is rewritten early in March, one of its provisions will be the integration of Stockbridge students into University dormitories with University students.

Many other things are now evident to the administration as a result of this proposal—and I emphasize the word—including the desire of the students to maintain the status quo and remain in their present dormitories, and the desire of many girls in the Quad to keep it exclusively a women's residence area. I firmly believe that the Administration is sincere when they say that they are keeping the desires of the students in mind.

Engineers and Scientists:

Let's talk about a career at Boeing...
50-year leader in aerospace technology

Campus Interviews, Thursday and Friday, February 24 and 25

The most effective way to evaluate a company in terms of its potential for dynamic career growth is to examine its past record, its current status, and its prospects and planning for the future, together with the professional climate it offers for the development of your individual capabilities.

Boeing, which in 1966 completes 50 years of unmatched aircraft innovation and production, offers you career opportunities as diverse as its extensive and varied backlog. Whether your interests lie in the field of commercial jet airliners of the future or in space-flight technology, you can find at Boeing an opening which combines professional challenge and long-range stability.

The men of Boeing are today pioneering evolutionary advances in both civilian and military aircraft, as well as in space programs of such historic importance as America's first moon landing. Missiles, space vehicles, gas turbine engines, transport helicopters, marine vehicles and basic research are other areas of Boeing activity.

There's a spot where your talents can mature and grow at Boeing, in research, design, test, manufacturing or administration. The company's position as world leader in jet transportation provides a measure of the calibre of people with whom you would work. In addition, Boeing people work in small groups, where initiative and ability get maximum exposure. Boeing encourages participation in the company-paid Graduate Study Program at leading colleges and universities near company installations.

We're looking forward to meeting engineering, mathematics and science seniors and graduate students during our visit to your campus. Make an appointment now at your placement office. Boeing is an equal opportunity employer.

The foreign students on campus are very interesting when you get them talking about their homelands. M. Aarif Ghayyur can tell you anything you want to know about his homeland—Pakistan.

Aarif moved from New Delhi, India to Karachi, Pakistan just after the division between India and Pakistan took place. Karachi is a fairly large city—it was the capital of Pakistan until 1959.

The school Aarif went to included grades one through twelve. It was relatively large, having over 2,000 students. The main difference he finds between that school and our grammar and high schools here is that most of the teachers there are men.

When he moved to Karachi, he attended a governmentally run school. The only real difference between it and his former school was that the mother tongue was used here while in India English was the spoken language.

In regard to family life, Aarif finds that in his country the children are more submissive to the parents than they are in America.

Compelling War Drama

The agonies of the Civil War will be recalled Sunday night in a WMUA special production of John Brown's Body, the novel-length dramatic poem by Stephen Vincent Benet.

Dan Weir will air the dramatic reading from 7:30-9:30 on his bi-monthly Reflections show. The poem won the Pulitzer Prize in 1929 and the recording features Tyrone Power, Judith Anderson and Raymond Massey under the direction of Charles Laughton.

The artists are accompanied by an capella chorus under the direction of Richard White.

Brooks Atkinson of the New York Times said of the poem, "The Civil War was not an isolated incident in American history but a wilderness in the heart of America—savage and desperate on both sides but also an expression of pride and conviction. In a series of poems he told the story of a terrible ordeal without heroics or sanctimoniousness."

Augie—the man and the myth

by GERALDINE COTE
Feature Staff

Augie's Tobacco Shop has long been one of the favorite haunts of college students in the Amherst area. The Collegian thought it might be interesting to find out a little bit more about the man behind the business.

August Wolcekoski was born in North Hadley. After spending six years in the service, during which he witnessed the attack on Pearl Harbor, Augie married a Hadley girl. He farmed tobacco for a while, and for four years was in the milk business. He has been a resident of Amherst for the four years and belongs to several organizations and clubs in the area.

In addition to his bookstore, he dabbles in real estate and he built the Hadley Open Air Theater.

When Augie first opened his store, he had intended to carry strictly tobacco and paperbacks, but due to increasing demand, he began to carry jewelry, writing tablets, and a wide variety of other reading materials. As you may have already guessed, Playboy is Augie's biggest seller, followed closely by Batman comics and Mad magazine.

His philosophy is that you can make customers by making friends. And that he does. He has a friendly greeting for everyone that comes into the store.

The college population of Amherst constitutes a large part of his business. However, Augie says that he has very few female customers and would like to have more. Girls seem to think it's a men's store and are a bit timid about going in. Penny candy is a big seller among the girls. In regard to books, most of them purchase the classics and love novels, and a few buy Playboy.

One of Augie's biggest problems at the present is pilfering. From his observations he feels that 95% of his customers, if given an opportunity to steal, would take advantage of it.

Augie feels that if the students knew how much was being taken or knew the actual profit of the retailer, they would think twice about walking out with stolen merchandise. In fact, one of the main reasons that retailers and businessmen in a college town jack up prices is to compensate for the losses due to stealing.

Augie has the true college spirit; he attends all home games at UMass and Amherst. He likes college kids, and enjoys talking with them. Augie, you're O.K.

Frosh Seeks Work

Dear Mr. Hatch,

Presently a freshman at the University of Massachusetts, I am interested in joining your youth in action program. I first heard about this excellent agency through one of my friends, a third semester freshman, who has done volunteer work for several years. He brought me down to the plant one day to introduce me to some of his co-workers who were performing various tasks: one was dissecting a cheeseburger, another was reading between the lines of a daily newspaper, and a couple, seated near the door, were discussing the necessity of cutting down the draft.

I was most intrigued, however, by the group that were evaluating new merchandise with whistles, stares, and cheers. This is the section to which I should like to belong.

My extra-curricular activities include smoking, joking, and "coking." I am a faithful class-cutter and was a frequent customer to our high school hangout. Among my personal characteristics are unambition, loquaciousness, and sex appeal.

I have received basic training in the Library Smoking Room and at "Tap a Keg o' Beer Fraternity." Thanks to a spread-out class schedule, I would be able to spend approximately five hours a day working for you during this spring semester.

Yours truly,

New "Critique" Takes Shape

Remember filling out some questionnaires at the beginning of the semester? No! They hadn't been thrown away. As a matter of fact, "Critique" is now in the process of publishing the results of these questionnaires.

It's a long process, and the filling out of the questionnaires is just the first step. After the students who have volunteered to distribute the questionnaires return them to the "Critique" office, the next phase of the operation begins.

These completed questionnaires, which contain student opinion about the courses in which they have participated, are now ready to be computed by the I.B.M. data processing machines.

After the data has been compiled, the next job is to write summaries of all the computed information.

In the interest of getting an objective evaluation of courses, only students who have not been connected in any way with the professors of the course are asked to write up the summaries.

Finally, the last stages of completing art work, and arranging the format of the magazine are reached.

The publishing of "Critique" is an involved process which requires a lot of work, but the service is important. It helps the student choose his courses and serves as a guideline for the faculty.

SPRECHEN SIE HEBREW

The Student Committee for the Advancement of Hebrew has just completed a compilation of the Hebrew Questionnaires filled out last week in the Student Union.

THESE QUESTIONNAIRES filled out by the more than 800 interested students and faculty members, were created in order to determine student and faculty interest in Hebrew as an accredited area of study both to fulfill requirements and to be employed as an elective.

The results include the following:

17% (who have not fulfilled their language requirement or are in the process of doing so) would consider taking Hebrew now.

40% (who have fulfilled their Language requirement) would have considered taking Hebrew to fulfill the requirement had it been offered.

36% would consider taking Hebrew as an elective even if it did not satisfy the language requirement.

OF THE OVER 800 questionnaires completed, the Committee noted that more than 60% of the entries were non-Jewish.

The Committee meets with Dean Wagner of the College of Arts and Sciences next Tuesday to discuss these results and steps for future action.

Sorry, Folks

The Collegian has made a mistake, and we would like to correct it. On page five of Wednesday's paper we printed a picture of a University student entertaining at the "broken egg" coffee house with the captain, "Ron Oakland sings at the 'broken egg' Friday night."

The singer was NOT Ron Oakland. It was Don Stuart. We're sorry.

This house is located on North Pleasant Street just to the University side of the University Motor Lodge. Its basement used to be just a regular basement—until the "broken egg" took it over and it became a coffee house, open every Friday night from 8 p.m. till midnight.

Pick Your Own Favorites

Thanks to the many interested and responsive people who voted in this the first week of the Goldie Oldie Countdown, WMUA's old tune kings compiled a list of the top 10 favorites from out of the past.

The winning ballot was turned in by Brad Thompson of 347 Davis Street in Greenfield. Brad gets a free record album courtesy of WMUA.

Don't forget to cast your ballot next Monday-Wednesday at the lobby counter of the Student Union.

DON'T FORGET to listen to WMUA, radio 91 FM between 7 and 8 tonight for the exclusive playing of this week's GOLDIE OLDIE COUNTDOWN.

1. Louie Louie by the Kingsmen (12)
2. In the Still of the Night by the Five Satins (14)
3. Rock Around the Clock by Bill Haley and Comets (13)
4. Don't Be Cruel by Elvis Presley (9)
5. Peggy Sue by Buddy Holly (6)
6. Sea of Love by Phil Phillips (4)
7. Johnny Angel by Shelly Fabares (4)
8. Telstar by Tornados (3)
9. Walk Like a Man by the Four Seasons (3)
10. Lonely Boy by Paul Anka (3)

Struggle In Brazil

A foreign film, "The Given Word", a winner at Cannes International Film Festival, will be presented Feb. 20 at 7 p.m. in the S.U. Ballroom. It was filmed in Brazil and has Portuguese dialogue.

"The Given Word" is a study of the struggle of the spirit against the materialism and convention of our modern way of life.

This universal theme has been brought to life in the Brazil of today where diverse cultures intermingle and Christian and pagan religions exist side by side.

The story evolves around a poor Brazilian farmer who has promised to carry a huge Crucifix thirty miles in order to place it in a cathedral, but he is refused entry because of circumstances surrounding his pledge.

During his trials, various social groups, seek to exploit his misery, and his tragic end becomes inevitable.

Work By UMass Artists Shown At Hub Exhibit

Works by two University of Massachusetts artists are part of the Art for U.S. Embassies exhibit now being shown at the Institute of Contemporary Art in Boston.

The works are an untitled tempera and watercolor on paper by Walter Kamys, associate professor, and a painted wood relief by John Townsend, assistant professor.

They are part of a group of 38 works by New England artists loaned to the art in embassies program. After the Boston show, they will be part of a national exhibition in Washington, then be hung in U.S. embassies all over the world for two years.

Townsend's work is also being featured currently in a one-man show in New York City.

Who is Ale Man of the Year?

Will these girls pick you?

These three girls are on a manhunt on campus for the next two weekends—an Ale Man-hunt! Who are they? Left to right: Carol Sowers, Gina Testa and Sandy Pierce.

Be sure these girls get a good look at you. It can mean a one-week vacation for you at a posh Bermuda hotel. Ballantine will pay the bill, including your PanAm VIP jet flight.

For two weekends, these girls will search the campus looking for three outstanding men to nominate as Ale Man of the Year. Then the whole campus will vote for the winner. You'll see ballot boxes at strategic spots. The biggest vote-getter will be Ale Man of the Year.

So look your best, and be on the lookout for the girls in the green Ale Man jackets. Good luck! Hope you win that Bermuda vacation. And, if you're the lucky devil, you'll also win a gen-yoo-ine Ale Man button-hole ribbon and medal (plus worsted Ale Man jacket to pin them on) and an ale mug. If you don't win, cheer up! You're an Ale Man in any gal's book as long as you drink Ballantine Ale.

Pro's and Con's Going Strong; Hoover Blasts Protest "Front"

A crowd estimated at 10,000 sat in drizzling rain last weekend in Atlanta's new stadium to hear Secretary of State Dean Rusk tell them that peace rested with Hanoi, not in Washington.

This was the big rally promised by a group called Affirmation Vietnam. The group was originated on the campus of Emory University and spread across the state so that it reached 54 campuses.

The sponsors of the organization announced Saturday (Feb. 12) that they now plan to organize a nationwide series of rallies in support of U. S. foreign policy.

"We want to show foreign countries that Vietnams and peace marchers don't speak for the great majority of college students," Rema M. Sutton Jr., an Emory senior, told reporters before the rally. He is general chairman of the organization.

SECRETARY RUSK praised the students for organizing the rally and pledged that the United States would not "retreat from its commitment to South Vietnam."

"The integrity of the pledged word of the United States is the principal pillar of peace around the world," the secretary said.

Sutton said that with the big rally behind it, the organization would now commit its staff and "resources" to helping "colleges in other states organize similar rallies."

IN ADDITION to adding 54 affiliate groups, the organization raised more than $60,000 in contributions from corporations and individuals, plus a ruling from the Internal Revenue Service that would make the contributions tax deductible. The budget calls for $64,000.

Meanwhile, three national firms with headquarters in the Atlanta area—Sears, Roebuck and Co.; Cluett, Peabody and Co.; and Lockheed Co.—made executive planes available for the students and their speakers.

All but one of Atlanta's many banks gave $1,000 each. Delta Airlines gave $800 and the Georgia-Power Company and the Southern Company, a utilities holding company, each gave $1,000.

INTEREST WAS also high among politicians. George Gov. Carl Sanders was among the first signers of the petition as was Georgia's Sen. Richard Russell, chairman of the Senate's Armed Services Subcommittee. Sanders also gave $1,000.

In Hollywood, comedian Bob Hope, fresh from his Christmas tour of Vietnam, prepared a 30-minute program that was widely shown in Georgia to drum up support.

Protestors

MEANWHILE, protests against the war continue around the nation. During the Atlanta rally a group of demonstrators marched outside the stadium carrying signs saying, "Affirm peace—Not War."

More than 100 students at Bryn Mawr, Swarthmore and Haverford Colleges, along with several professors, have just finished an eight-day fast in protest of U.S. policy in Vietnam.

On the advice of doctors before the fast, they drank orange juice to protect their health. They continued to attend classes and met daily to discuss Vietnam. The schools are all in the Philadelphia area.

ANOTHER spokesman said a fast was decided upon so that no one could say the protest was "just for kicks."

At Stanford University, about 30 faculty members and 10 teaching assistants left their classes to protest renewed bombings in North Vietnam. Most teachers returned to their classes after one afternoon—during which two rallies were held to protest U.S. policy—and most teachers on the campus said classroom obligations would be met.

THE RALLIES were the largest and most orderly held at the university for several years, according to one university spokesman. There was no heckling of speakers, most of whom received moderate applause.

At Yale, an ad hoc group of faculty and students announced that it hopes to shut down Yale for one day in protest to the war in general and the renewed bombings specifically.

In an open letter to the university community, Robert M. Cook, assistant professor of sociology and leader of the group, said the idea was to have everybody at Yale "stop whatever they are doing" on the announced day and participate in a protest rally in the law school auditorium.

THE GROUP has distributed a second letter signed by 28 Yale students and faculty members. This letter calls for everyone at Yale "to join us . . . in our call for an immediate halt in the bombing and a full and open debate in the Congress."

Hoover Says

The latest group of demonstrations against the war in Vietnam has prompted J. Edgar Hoover, director of the FBI, to issue one of his occasional reports charging that the current "insurrectionary climate" on American campuses is serving the Moscow cause.

Writing in his monthly letter to U. S. law enforcement officers, the FBI director said that the college student today "is being subjected to a bewildering and dangerous conspiracy" through "a feigned concern for the vital rights of free speech, dissent, and petition."

HOOVER SAID the Communist Party is "jubilant" over the developments on the American campus and is exploiting them with a two-part movement: "a much-publicized college speaking program and the campus-oriented Communist W.E.B. DuBois Clubs."

He said on many campuses the Communists are helping create a "turbulence built on unrestrained individualism, repulsive dress and speech, outright obscenity, disdain for moral and spiritual values, and disrespect for law and order."

To any kid who'd like to go somewhere: We'll pay half your fare.

The idea's not as crazy as it may seem.
Anytime we take a jet up, there are almost always leftover seats.

So it occurred to us that we might be able to fill a few of them, if we gave the young people a break on the fare, and a chance to see the country.

The American Youth Plan*

We call the idea the American Youth Plan, and what it means is this:

American will pay half the jet coach fare for anybody 12 through 21.

It's that simple.

All you have to do is prove your age (a birth certificate or any other legal document will do) and buy a $3 identification card.

We date and stamp the card, and this entitles you to a half-fare ticket at any American Airlines counter.

The only catch is that you might have to wait before you get aboard; the fare is on a standby basis.

"Standby" simply means that the passengers with reservations and the servicemen get on before you do.

Then the plane's yours.

The American Youth Plan is good year

round except for a few days before and after the Easter, Thanksgiving and Christmas rushes.

If you can't think of any places you'd like to go offhand, you might see a travel agent for a few suggestions.

We can't add anything else.

Other than it's a marvelous opportunity to just take off.

Complete this coupon—include your $3.
(Do not send proof of age—it is not needed until you have your ID validated.)
In addition to your ID card, we'll also send you a free copy of AA's Go Go American with $50 worth of discount coupons.

Tell Him You . . .

The ten most important facts you should tell prospective summer employers about yourself were revealed in replies received from a questionnaire sent to selected resorts and camps throughout the United States by National Directory Service, Cincinnati, Ohio.

- 1) What is your past work experience and training?
- 2) Are you willing to work and cooperate with others?
- 3) Are you mature, punctual? Do you exercise good judgment?
- 4) What is your age? (Minimum age is of most concern.)
- 5) What dates are you available to work? If applying to a resort, the sooner you can report and the later you can stay, the better.
- 6) Give three or four good references. Please, no friends or relatives. Teachers or faculty members and former employers are the best.
- 7) Give assurance that you will fulfill your work contract until the end of the working period.
- 8) Be pleasant and cheerful.
- 9) State any special skills you have—something you can do or can teach others to do.
- 10) Give your reasons for wanting a summer job.

With this information included in your application, go get that summer job!

If you would like a book of detailed information on 45,000 summer job openings throughout the United States and Canada, ask for "1966 Summer Employment Directory" at your bookstore, or send $3 to National Directory Service, Box 32065, Cincinnati, Ohio 45232.

Hockey Sat. vs UNH

The Varsity Hockey team will be seeking revenge over a strong UNH team tomorrow afternoon at 2:00 P.M. The University of New Hampshire, well stocked with foreigners from the northern reaches of North America, will be pitted against the UMass team, all of whom boast Massachusetts as their legal address. Earlier in the season, UNH walked the UMe 14-1 when the Redmen were skating without the services of key personnel. The pucksters are now at full strength and will be looking for the upset in tomorrow's til. Game time is a 2:00 P.M. at the Walter S. Orr rink at Amherst College. Admission by I.D.

WOULD YOU BELIEVE REORGANIZATION

There will be a meeting for all staff members Sunday at 6:30 in the Collegian office to discuss plans for Collegian reorganization. Dr. Musgrave will present his ideas on the structure of the college press and offer suggestions for improvement of the Collegian.

Selectmen Vote Parking Ban

Confronted with the problem of University construction workers' cars clogging Town streets, Selectmen Tuesday banned day-time parking on certain streets near the Southwest dormitory complex.

Affected from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. are McClure St., Sunset Ct., and the north side of Fearing St. between Lincoln and Sunset Aves. The ban would last a year or 18 months, when the dorms are expected to be finished.

Restrictions still must be formally approved by the state Department of Public Works.

Residents of the area complained about the large number of construction workers' cars parked on streets, Torrey said. "There is hard-surface parking for 2000 cars within five minutes walk," he pointed out.

The parked cars present traffic problems on the narrow streets, he said. With the construction project along Sunset Ave. "just beginning" and the spring "mud season" soon to come, the situation would worsen without Town action, Torrey indicated.

TRACK . . .

 ney, Andersen, and Moroney won with a time of 3:41.

THE FIELD EVENTS were even more successful for the Redmen. Bob Murray, slowed down with a slight muscle pull, simply waited until all his opponents had jumped out, then jumped once at 11 feet, cleared the bar and won the event. Waterman captured a third with a 10 foot vault. The Johns-Medeiros and Hall teamed up again to share a three way tie in the high jump with Anadu of Tufts, at 5' 10". Court Bassett and Tony Divver took first and second in the weight throw, while Paul Freedman tossed the shot 43 feet to capture that event. Bassett was third.

The next meet for the Track Team is tomorrow against a powerful Northeastern squad. The Huskies have gone 25 dual meets without a loss. The last team to beat them was this same UMass team in 1963.

The Ale Man Is Here

"Who is the Ale Man," the ubiquitous AM-FM query, is about to be answered here at UMass.

"It may be you," challenges the ballad which is true, if you win the favor of three local coeds chosen to lead the Search for our Ale Man.

The girls will choose three male nominees (over 21, of course). The ladies' eyes will be peeled for excellence. Neatness counts, and so will wit, verve, visage and mien. Ballots will be printed and all of us (male and female) will vote. He who amasses the most votes will be the Ale Man and depart to Eermuda for an Easter vacation, courtesy of P. Ballentine / Sons.

The local Search is one of five the famous ale brewers are sponsoring this spring on university campuses in the Northeast.

New Institute Coming

A faculty of distinguished scientists will staff an institute for college botany teachers this summer at the University of Massachusetts, sponsored by the Botanical Society of America and supported by a National Science Foundation grant.

Applications by qualified teachers of college botany are being accepted now through Feb. 15 for the institute, to be held at the Morrill Science Center June 20 to July 15. Information may be obtained from Dr. Edward L. Davis, director, botany department, Morrill Science Center, University of Massachusetts Amherst.

The staff includes Gleb Krotkov, professor of botany at Queens University, Canada; Irene Manton, professor of botany at Leeds University, England; Keith R. Porter, professor of biology at Harvard University; Ralph E. Cleland, professor of botany at Indiana University; Herbert G. Baker and William A. Jensen, both professors of botany at the University of California, Berkeley, and others.

The noncredit institute, sixth in an annual series, is to acquaint botany teachers with new research and give them a forum for the exchange of views with colleagues. Stipends and travel and dependency allowances will be provided under the NSF grant.

Teachers of one or more college-level botany courses who have taught at the college level for at least three years, are eligible.

Volpe Announces Contract Bids

State House News

Gov. Volpe today announced that contracts have been awarded to low bidder for construction of new farm service buildings and poultry plants and labs at the University of Massachusetts at a cost of $645,908.00.

Located in the University complex, the farm will be built by the Peabody Construction Co. of Boston at a bid of $316,608.

The poultry plant and labs, which will continue the research in poultry breeding, will be built by Leo F. Stranese of North Hampton at a bid of $329,300, the Governor said.

ZN TIPS KS FOR FRAT CROWN

by DAVE JARNES

ZN withstood a late rally by a game KS team to win the fraternity crown in a 48-45 thriller before a crowd estimated at 300. ZN led by as many as 8 points in the second half but Kappa Sig refused to quit. Bob Gogick, who led KS with 15 points, and little Bob Detore brought their team to within one point with 35 seconds left in the game. KS had possession of the ball but Brian Lajoie came up with a big steal and drove the length of the court for the game's final score. Lajoie, who scored a game high of 22 points, and Dick Benjamin were able to control the backboards against their smaller adversaries.

AEP took third place with a surprisingly easy 47-32 win over a lethargic LCA quintet. For the first half the game was close but AEP's hustle blew LCA off the court in the final 20 minutes. Alan White led a balanced attack with 14 points while Jeff Larson was the whole show for LCA with 21 points.

The Webster Rams came from behind to nip the Baker Barracudas 37-36 in a playoff for the East League Championship. With five minutes left in the game the Rams trailed 34-28 and Bob Perlman and Bert Cady, their two big men, had four fouls on them. However, Bert put on a scoring spurge to carry Webster to victory. This was the Rams' second win over the Barracudas this season.

THE FLAMING A'S upset the Aces 46-43 on Tuesday to set up a three way tie in the North League amongst the Aces, Flaming A's, and Patriots. Verrault and Brown combined for 27 of the Flaming A's points. The Flaming A's then played the Patriots and were beaten 46-30, although the losers were within 3 points with 5 minutes left, thanks to a full court press which capitalized on the Patriots poor ball handling. Ray Stanelis of the Patriots, who carried a 37 point per game average, was held without a field goal for the first half and a season's low of 10. However, Grayson's fine defensive effort was nullified by Plymouth's vast superiority in height and a complete collapse in the last five minutes by the Flaming A's.

The fourth place Comanches, who couldn't beat the last place Redmen, upset the league-leading Colt 45's 42-40 to effect a three way tie in the South League. Goltz's 22 points were instrumental in this upset. The Cherrys and the Black Bears, the other two teams involved in the deadlock, played each other for the right to meet the Colts and the Cherrys came out on top with a 43-39 overtime decision. Kirton's 14 points paced the Cherrys while Ionelli led the Black Bears with 15 points.

THE GORMAN MAPLES were the only dorm team to win their league without a playoff, although the Pines gave the unbeaten champs a battle before bowing 45-40.

The Untouchables weren't their usually coldly efficient selves on offense, but they were superb on defense while repulsing a strong Philosopher team 41-35. John Yates led the undefeated winners with 14 points while Jack Schroeder topped the losers with 17 points.

In a playoff for the National League championship the Moody Blues pummeled the Zeros 47-18 behind Gagner's 15 points.

ALMOST all of the playoff games this week were exceptionally well played and next week's final playoff games promise more of the type of ball such as that displayed by Zeta Nu and Kappa Sig. On Monday the Rams play the Maples. The winners of the Patriot-Aces and Colt 45's-Cherry games will play each other, while the Untouchables play the Moody Blues. All games will start at 6:30.

The big news in bowling was that the Flaming A's proved themselves to be human by losing their first game in two years of competition. Jim Pease's 223 game enabled the Maples to take the second game, but the Flaming A's won 6 out of the eight points. The Baker Buffaloes continued unbeaten as they swept their closest challengers, the Greenough Giants.

Pucksters Drop 7-4 Decision To Amherst

by DAVE HANSON

Superb goaltending by Amherst College Junior Teasdale gave Amherst a hard-fought win over the Redmen, 7-4, at the Walter S. Orr rink Wednesday night. The Jeffs hit for a score only 12 seconds after the beginning of the first period and added a second tally at 2:38. Greg Stone retaliated for the Redmen with a marker midway through the stanza, and Frank Buckler made it all even at 2:10 of the second frame. Amherst took control at that point and added four more tallies in the next 23 minutes of action.

The Umies came alive at the 14 minute mark in the third period as Ed Polchlopek and Bill Skowyrz added a pair of goals to the pucksters score before Amherst's Dick Pierpont ended the scoring for the evening at 18:54.

THIS WAS THE REDMEN'S third loss to Amherst this year and pushed the all-time series total to 24-23-3 with the UMass pucksters holding on to a slim one game lead.

In other hockey action the undefeated Frosh extended their streak to five as they squeezed out a 4-3 decision over Deerfield in the last second of play on a goal by Ollie Siebert.

Redmen In Turnabout,
Pulverize UNH, 104-66

by GLENN BRIERE

Breaking a three-game losing streak, the Redmen had a Winter Carnival of their own as they demolished a poor New Hampshire team, 104-66, at the Cage last night. A small but noisy crowd of 1250 was on hand to see UMass register its ninth win against eleven defeats.

THE WILDCATS, who have suffered through a 2-18 season, offered little resistance to Johnny Orr's team. UMass returned to the running style of play that it used during the first half of the season, and UNH was completely routed. The visitors could hit very little, in contrast to the hot hand wielded by the Redmen. UMass broke it open early, and the reserves wound up playing the last ten minutes. In addition, the noise-maker-blowing fans provided the Cage with plenty of enthusiasm.

Clarence Hill led all scorers with 21 points, and he engineered a fine 13 assists. Jim Babyak chipped in with 18 points. But the subs looked almost as impressive as the starters. Hagan Andersen, who has seen very little action this year, scored 13 points in thirteen minutes. Another reserve, Jim Girotti, shot five for six and scored ten points. Rick Perkins and Don Alberico also looked good. The only area in which New Hampshire came close to matching UMass was in rebounds, a deficiency which the small Redmen can do little about.

LIKE THE 104-76 rout of UNH by UMass earlier this year, it was no contest from the start. The score was 16-10 in favor of the Redmen when they started a 14-1 spree early in the first half. With eight minutes left and on the strength of Babyak's shooting, Massachusetts held a 29-11 lead. Frank Stewart and Gary Gasperack helped the Redmen raise the score to 47-20 at halftime. Although they did not look as good in the early stages of the second half, they were able to maintain a sizeable lead.

With thirteen minutes left, Coach Orr began putting in the reserves. Hagan Andersen immediately drew the crowd's attention with a beauty from underneath. From then on, the reserve squad, anxious to impress, played a hustling game. The play of the game came with a minute and a half to go when Alberico fed Anderson with a behind-the-back pass on a fast break.

THE SHOOTING PERCENTAGE of UMass was vastly improved over the last two games. The team shot 50% while the hapless Wildcats shot 29%. The Redmen, unlike their last few games, put out a team effort as evidenced by the total assists. UMass had 31 and UNH had 11. UMass outrebounded New Hampshire by only six, a surprising figure considering the onesidedness of the game. It was a refreshing victory, though, for the win-hungry Redmen.

The team hopes to extend its Winter Carnival festivities to Saturday, when it travels to UConn. The Redmen cannot play the

GRAPPLERS COLLAR UCONN

by ART KEOWN

On Feb. 11 the UMass wrestling team was defeated by a stronger Boston Col. squad 21-16. Winners for the Redmen were Jesse Brogan, Art Keown, and co-captains George Darling and Dave Kelley. Darling scored the fastest fall of the meet by pinning MacDade of B.C. in 1:58 of the first period.

ON TUESDAY, Feb. 15, the Varsity Matmen traveled to Storrs, Conn., and defeated the UConn wrestling team by a score of 25-18. In the 123 lb. class Gary Lefort (UM) scored his first win of the season by pinning Gardner of UConn in 7:49. Gene Smith, in the 130 lb. class, was pinned by Stigliani (C) in 5:26. Wrestling in the 137 lb. class, junior Steve Clegg (UM) lost a close match to Robbins of UC 4-2. Ace Jesse Brogan, wrestling in the 145 lb. class, overwhelmed Liliandahl (C) and pinned him in 7:08. In the 152 lb. class Art Keown (UM) scored a fall over Field (C) in 4:55.

Co-captain George Darling (UM), wrestling in the 160 lb. class, completely outwrestled his opponent and pinned Walsh (C) in 5:58. Bill Heinold (UM) was pinned in 3:32 by a stronger opponent, Zito (C), in the 167 lb. class. Dave Kelley won by default in the 177 lb. class when Sandler (C) was injured after 1 minute of wrestling. Wrestling his first match for the team, Bernie Dallas was caught in a headlock and pinned in 6:56 by Kinon (C) in the unlimited weight class.

AT THIS POINT in the season the Matmen sport a 3-4 record, with 3 home meets yet to wrestle. Jesse Brogan and George Darling have individual records of 7-0. Dave Kelley has a record of 5-1-0. Ralph Caisse has a record of 3-1, and Art Keown has a record of 5-2. The next Varsity meet will be on Sat., Feb. 19, at 2:15 p.m. in the Boyden Auxiliary Gym.

The freshman wrestling team, handicapped by a lack of nubbies, has wrestled well in several meets. Captain Gene Paltrineri has remained undefeated and shows promise of being a great addition to next year's Varsity squad.

Mermen Win Fourth In Row

Joe Rogers' Mermen won their fourth straight meet, 74-19, over WPI at the Boyden pool and set three new school records in the process. The Medley relay team of Ken Nowak, Dick Lennon, Steve Levy, and Chip Wyser was clocked at a record 4:02.0. Other marks were set by Levy, who swam the 200 yd. butterfly in 2:29.6, and the 400 yd. freestyle team, which was timed in 3:30.9. Dick Daniels joined Nowak, Lennon, and Wyser in this event.

The next meet for UM, which now has a 5-4 record, will be against unbeaten Bowdoin a week from today at home.

Ron Nowakowski, with 23 points and 16 rebounds, led the UMass Frosh to a 92-61 romp over Franklin Pierce Junior College of Rindge, New Hampshire, last night at the Cage. The visitors had previously rolled to a 16-1 record, but could not cope with a well-balanced UMass effort.

THE LITTLE REDMEN were never behind in this one as John Shockro dropped in the game's first two baskets. With Nowakowski scoring 11 points, UMass moved to a 23-16 edge after 10 minutes, although the Ravens provided some rough opposition under the boards.

Don LaMothe, the opposition's top popper, scored the first two baskets of the second quarter to cut the margin to 23-20. But the Frosh, sparked by Peter Gaye-ska, Mike Gemei, and Nowakowski, outscored Pierce, 19-7, during the rest of the half and held a 42-27 bulge at halftime.

THE FROSH scored 13 of the first 15 points of the second half and had the contest firmly in hand. Three long linsane bombs by Eddie Griffith helped mount the lead to 30 markers with 14 minutes left. Alan Fisher hit 5 of 7 shots and big John Dreyer showed some good moves as the reserves took over.

The Little Redmen made 40 of 77 attempts from the field for a blistering 52 percent, while the visitors had only a 24 for 71 showigk, for a percentage of .338. UMass was 12 for 14 at the line, and Franklin Pierce made 13 free throws in 22 attempts. Although often hard-pressed underneath, the Freshmen held a 55-40 upper hand in the rebounding department.

GEMEI FOLLOWED NOWAKOWSKI in the scoring, hitting on 9 of 12 field goal attempts. Shockro chalked up 13 points, and Fisher had 11 to round out the Redmen in double figures.

LaMothe tallied 21 points, while Tom Rabeck with 17 and Dick Brezinski with 15 also paced the visitors' scoring.

The fans were entertained at halftime by a scrimmage between two teams of 10- and 11-year-olds from the Amherst Boys Club. The hard-fought affair ended in a 4-4 stalemate.

Medeiros, Trackmen
Tackle Tufts, 76-37

by TERRY CARPENTER

Led by co-captain John Medeiros' 18 points and 2 record performances, the track team rolled over an improved Tufts University squad 76-37.

MEDEIROS and mate Art Larvey started the meet off successfully by upsetting the greater Boston broad jumping champ. Medeiros continued his undefeated string with a leap of 22' 2" and he failed to hit the take-off board on each attempt, jumping from the dirt behind the board. It was also the best jump of Larvey's career and is especially commendable because it was done in a relatively poor pit. Art leaped 22' flat. Joe Andadu, the Tufts flash who won the event at the greater Boston meet only last week had praise for the jumps. He could only manage a 20' 11" leap.

Later in the meet Medeiros set a school record in the 45 yd. high hurdles with a 6.0 clocking.

John Hall was second in the race tying the old record of 6.1. Medeiros and Hall also teamed up for a 1-2 in the low hurdles, with the former tying the school record of 5.7. Walkwitz was third. In the 50 yd. dash Art Larvey was second and Steve Burrell, third. Both got off to bad starts and couldn't catch up. The mile run was a switch, as Tufts took first and second in an event they have failed to score in for many years. Steve St. Clair was third.

IN THE 600 John "Ugly" Andersen stayed behind until the last lap, then poured by his opponent to win handily in 1:18. Dick Stevens and Mike Sheeley finished second and third in the 2-mile. In the most exciting race of the day, Bill Thomas nosed out his opponent in the 1000 in the good time of 2:23. Steve St. Clair was third. The mile relay team of Burrell, Damien Gaff-

Commons and S.U. Up Pay Rates

In the light of recent discussion and ensuing action, the dining halls and Student Union, which are special operations with separate funding, have found it possible to change the basic pay rates as of February 1, 1966.

In these two areas, students currently earning wages of $1.00 per hour to $1.15 per hour will receive wages retroactive to February 1 of $1.15 per hour to $1.25 per hour. Students at other rates and in other areas will be considered for possible wage changes by fall.

A review of all part-time student employment on campus is currently under study by the Placement and Financial Aid Services which is the official agency for determining the campus student wage structure.

Consultation with the Treasurer and many campus agencies is involved in any change in wage rate which includes discussions of budget, permanent rate structure on and off campus locally, wage rates on other campuses, etc.

Mr. Morrissey, Director of Placement and Financial Aid states that in the past he and his staff have had the counsel and study of a campus student committee and would welcome such assistance again.

Nominations Open

Nominations are open for student senators from BROOKS, KNOWLTON, BRETT, and WHEELER HOUSES. Nomination forms are available in the R. S. O. Office. Nominations will close Thursday, February 24, 1966 at 5:00 P.M. All nomination forms must be turned in by that time. Elections will be held on the following Thursday from 6:30-9:30 P.M. in the respective dorms.

The Rain Fell

Mass. Aggie Crowd Enjoyed Carni Concert

'Rovin' Kind

by WENDY WAX

The time was 7 p.m. The cage was filled to capacity as the audience sat eagerly awaiting the first concert of the Winter weekend. Junior class president, John Mullin, stepped up to the mike and announced that the Rovin' Kind had been detained in New York. The evening's concert was to begin late.

It was 7:45 when all the equipment (including such unusual instruments as marachas, a tamborine, an organ and trumpet) was finally set up, and the Rovin' Kind made their appearance.

Dressed in conservative charcoal-grey suits, the five entertainers began their long awaited performance with the only "original" record they were to sing — Everybody Has the Blues.

FOR THE REST of their performance they "borrowed" songs made popular by English rock 'n roll groups such as: The Animals, The Beatles, the Rolling Stones and The Who, in addition to the pride of Greenwich Village, The Lovin' Spoonful.

Their repertoire included a good rendition of Batman and other recent pop hits: "Lies", "You Didn't Have to be so Nice", "It's My Life" and "Daytripper". Then they went on to do a medley of Rolling Stone hits: "This Could Be the Last Time", "Hey You Get Off Of My Cloud" and "Satisfaction".

All in all their performance was quite good. As a group their voices came across well, but in individual songs the soloist was often drowned out by the accompaniment.

AT THE END of the performance one member of the group expressed his desire for the Rovin' Kind to return to UM again in the near future: He wittily announced, "Next time we'll be two hours early!"
